their first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ATKINS. Is this a joint resolution or a bill?

The SPEAKER. It is a joint resolution.

Mr. ATKINS. It involves another point of order, that the law does not allow additional compensation to employes.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is not a point of order.

The SPEAKER. It would if it were a general appropriation bill under clause 3 of Rule XXI.

Mr. ATKINS. It makes an appropriation of $10,000.

The SPEAKER. It is not a general appropriation bill, and therefore clause 3, Rule XXI, can have no application to it.

Mr. VAN HORN. Mr. Speaker, there is no proposition reported from the Committee on Printing which does not involve an expenditure of public money. The only difference between this and others is that here the amount to be appropriated is expressed, while in other cases it is not expressed. I do not see, therefore, that any point of order can lie against it that would not lie against every other proposition reported from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the point of order is insisted upon. The Chair is in some doubt about it.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Yes, sir; for a moment. The difference between the resolution as reported to the House in the pending proposition and an ordinary resolution ordering documents to be printed is this, that whenever an order is made to print documents no specific sum is appropriated for that purpose. The cost of printing comes out of the general appropriation bill for public printing, and therefore it is not subject to the point of order. But the gentleman in presenting the present proposition has not thought proper to leave this in the same condition, but comes forward and asks that these documents shall be printed, and in addition thereto asks for an appropriation of $10,000 to be used for that purpose.

Now, there is no reason, in my judgment, why this should not go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to be considered by them, as any other bill would be required to go there being subject to the same point of order. It is not, as I have said, like the ordinary orders made for printing, where the expense is provided out of the general appropriation bill for the printing establishment. That is just the difference between the two propositions; and if the gentleman had simply stated that this index should be printed without naming $10,000 to be appropriated for that purpose it would not have been liable to this objection. But when he names the sum to be appropriated the objection clearly lies against it under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not aware that this question has ever been specifically decided. It is very true, as stated by the gentleman from Missouri, that all these reports from the Committee on Printing for public documents involve necessarily an appropriation of money, and the rule would apply as well to one as to the other.

The third paragraph of Rule XXIII provides that—

All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriation to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a committee of the whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

This paragraph is very specific, but the practice has been, as the Chair thinks, to hold that as the Committee on Printing has the right to report at any time there follows with it the right of present consideration in the House.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Would it be an interruption to the Chair to make a brief suggestion?

The SPEAKER. Not at all.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. As I recollect the practice, and perhaps it may accord with the recollection of the Chair, the Committee on Printing report upon such matters as relate to printing for the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already and before it proceeded to announce a decision stated that the effect of this Senate bill is to authorize, if it should become a law, printing for the use of the two Houses, although it is not very specific in its terms. With that in view, the Chair holds it to be a privileged report under the rule. The Chair calls attention to decisions which have been made under this very proposition and is inclined to hold that the report is in order for present consideration, and for the present, with some doubts about its correctness, so holds.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move the previous question on the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I appeal from that decision inasmuch as this printing is becoming a terrible drain upon the Treasury. Under the ruling of the Chair there is absolutely no limit against bringing such subjects before the House for consideration at any time.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move to lay the appeal from the decision of the Chair on the table.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 61, noes 11.

So the appeal was laid on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now move the previous question upon the bill. The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon the third reading of the Senate bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Upon that I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 19.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. SPRINGER as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 105, noes 43.

So the bill was ordered to be read a third time.

The question recurred upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. On that I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 71, noes 60.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted.

A MEMBER. Let us have the yeas and nays at once.

The SPEAKER. A point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. SPRINGER were appointed tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the Chair hold that a call for the yeas and nays waives the question of a quorum?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so held. If the yeas and nays are not ordered the Chair holds it is too late to make the point then that no quorum has voted.

Mr. HOLMAN. But suppose one member raises the question of no quorum and another gentleman calls for the yeas and nays?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman does not insist on his point that no quorum had voted, it would be considered as waived. But the gentleman cannot be cut off from his right if he insists on the point of no quorum by any number of members demanding the yeas and nays.

The vote by tellers was proceeded with. Before a sufficient number of votes were reported to make a quorum,

Mr. HISCOCK said: I understand it is agreed that for the time being the pending matter may be postponed that a conference report may be presented.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know that that can be done while the House is dividing.

Mr. McLANE. I suggest it may be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will withdraw his point that no quorum has voted we will go right on with the public business. Otherwise we must remain here till we have a quorum.

The SPEAKER. Members are requested to vote on one side or the other.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is a quorum in and about the Capitol.

The SPEAKER. There is a quorum present.

Mr. PAGE. I ask unanimous consent that this may be laid aside temporarily that a conference report may be presented.

The SPEAKER. It is for the gentleman in charge of the measure to say whether he will agree to that or not. A quorum, the Chair thinks, is present, and members are requested to vote promptly.

Mr. McLANE. I move, by unanimous consent, that this matter be postponed.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] agrees to it, the pending matter can be laid over.

Mr. McLANE. The gentleman from Illinois will agree to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Illinois to object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I presume we can report at any time there is no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the tellers are required to continue in their places.

Mr. HOLMAN. But they may report to the Chair there is no quorum.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not so report.

The SPEAKER. The vote as returned to the Chair at this time stands thus: ayes 96, noes 35; lacking 15 of a quorum.

Mr. SPRINGER. If unanimous consent is given that the conference report may come in and that the tellers shall then resume their places and the vote be continued, I shall not object.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I object. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. PAGE. Is it in order to move a call of the House?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. PAGE. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, no; I hope the gentleman will not insist on that motion.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I withdraw the objection.

The count was resumed, and the tellers reported—ayes 106, noes 41. So the bill was passed.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill has been passed, and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. ATKINS. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

Mr. ATKINS. I move to reconsider.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman has no right to make that motion. He voted the other way.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. PAGE. I rise to make a privileged report. I submit a report of the committee of conference on the river and harbor appropriation bill. I ask the Clerk to read the statement accompanying the report.

The Clerk read the statement, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the river and harbor appropriation bill submit the following statement in explanation of the report agreed upon by the committee.

The effect of the action recommended by the committee on the Senate amendments will be as follows:

Amendment No. 17: The appropriation for the survey of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal is reduced from $20,000 to $10,000, and a proviso added "that nothing herein shall be construed to commit the Government to proceed with the construction of the said improvement;" also providing for a survey between City Island and New Rochelle Harbor, New York, including channel around Glen Island.

By amendment No. 41 the appropriation for the Potomac River, at Washington, is reduced from $500,000 to $400,000.

By amendment No. 98 the amount appropriated for the survey for the Hennepin Canal is reduced from $100,000 to $30,000, and the following proviso is added: "That nothing herein contained shall be construed to commit the Government to proceed with the construction of the said improvement."

By amendments Nos. 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, and 105, the amount appropriated for the Mississippi River is reduced from $5,000,000 to $4,123,000, as provided by the House. The amendments providing for a lock at Bayou Plaquemine and for the expenditure of $35,000 for Alton Harbor are agreed to, and the work is to be prosecuted under the direction of the Mississippi River commission instead of the Secretary of War, as provided by the Senate. This action will reduce the aggregate of the bill from $19,800,875 to $18,743,875.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

H. F. PAGE,
AMOS TOWNSEND,
R. M. McLANE,

Managers on the part of the House.

The report of the committee of conference is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6242) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 99, 102, 103, 104, and 105.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 100, 101, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 141, strike out "twenty" and insert "ten;" also, after the word "constructed," in line 153, insert the following: "Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to commit the Government to proceed with the construction of the said improvement. The Secretary of War is hereby directed at his discretion to cause an examination or survey, or both, and estimates of the cost of improvement proper to be made between City Island and New Rochelle Harbor, New York, and including the channel around Glen Island. The expense of such survey to be paid out of the amount appropriated in this act for examinations and surveys;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 481 strike out "five" and insert "four;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 98, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "therefore," in line 1168, and to including the word "Chicago," in line 1171, also, in line 1172, strike out "one hundred" and insert "thirty;" also after the word "appropriated," in line 1174, insert the following: "Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to commit the Government to proceed with the construction of the said improvement;" and the Senate agree to the same.

H. F. PAGE,
AMOS TOWNSEND,
R. M. McLANE,
Managers on the part of the House.

S. J. R. McMILLAN,
JOHN P. JONES,
M. W. RANSOM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. PAGE. I desire briefly to state to the House the effects of this conference report on the river and harbor bill.

The first amendment, that numbered 17, relates to the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal. The House conferees receded from the disagreement on that amendment with an amendment striking out "$20,000" and inserting "$10,000," and with a proviso that the Government shall not be committed in any manner to make these improvements.

Mr. COX, of New York. That does not amount to anything.

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman from New York says it does not amount to anything. It only amounts to an expression of the House.

The House conferees receded from the disagreement to the item known as the Hennepin Canal with an amendment striking out "$100,000" and inserting "$30,000," and striking out of the bill also from the word "therefor," in line 1108, which reads:

And for the purpose of securing the early construction of an ample water-way for all purposes of commerce between the Mississippi River at or near Rock Island and the lake at Chicago.

Those words were stricken out and a proviso inserted, which provides the same as the other, that nothing in this act shall be construed as committing the Government to the completion or the beginning of this work.

Amendment No. 41 relates to the improvement of the Potomac flats. The House conferees have receded from their disagreement to that amendment with an amendment reducing the amount from $500,000 to $400,000.

The amendments beginning with amendment No. 98 and running through all the paragraphs relating to the appropriations for the Mississippi River were considered by the committee of conference. The Senate receded from the amendment No. 99, increasing the appropriation by $877,000. The House receded from its disagreement to amendment No. 100, providing for a lock at the mouth of Bayou Plaquemine, Louisiana; and also the amendment No. 101, limiting the amount to be expended on Alton Harbor. Those amendments do not increase the appropriations at all. The amendments numbered 102, 103, 104 and 105, were merely verbal amendments.

As the bill passed the House it contained appropriations to the amount of $17,367,875; as it passed the Senate the total had been increased to $20,147,575, the Senate having added to the bill $2,779,700.

The first conference reduced the amount by $346,700; the second conference reduced it by $1,057,000; making a total reduction from the amount of the bill as passed by the Senate of $1,403,700. As the bill now stands, if the report of the committee of conference shall be agreed to, the aggregate appropriations will be $18,743,875, the amount added by the Senate being $1,376,000 instead of $2,779,700 as before the conference was appointed. The House conferees felt compelled, from the representations made by the Senate conferees and by the very general desire on the part of certain members of this House, to yield the point of difference so far as the surveys of the Chesapeake Canal and the Hennepin Canal are concerned. A very small amount of money is appropriated for those surveys, only $40,000 in all, and the Government is not committed to carry on those improvements. They are undoubtedly works of great national importance, and should a future Congress decide to make appropriations for the purpose of carrying on those works it would undoubtedly have the right to do so. In this report we disclaim any intention of committing the Government in any regard upon those works.

Mr. COX, of New York. One question in that connection.

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. COX, of New York. How is it that you can avoid committing Congress if you provide for the survey of the Hennepin Canal? I know that you mean well, but how can you avoid committing Congress to these great works which may run for years and involve millions of expenditure?

Mr. PAGE. I will answer the gentleman by saying that the making a survey or a report on the location of any canal or railroad does not necessarily carry with it any obligation on the part of the Government to go on with those works.

Mr. CARLISLE. Is it not an assertion of the right and power of Congress to engage in such a work?

Mr. PAGE. I am not prepared to say yes or no to that proposition. Suffice it to say that a large portion of the people of this country desire this information simply as to the feasibility of building these canals. The survey and the location of the routes, leaving it to future Congresses to determine whether it will make appropriations to carry on the works or not, is all that is here provided.

Mr. BLOUNT. Are not these surveys generally followed by appropriations for the construction of the works?

Mr. PAGE. That depends absolutely on the will of Congress.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am asking a question as to our experience in the past.

Mr. PAGE. Very often the works are not undertaken after the surveys are made. It was believed by one of my colleagues on the conference committee, who is the chairman of the Committee on Railways and Canals, [Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio,] that a survey and report, instead of encouraging an appropriation by Congress, might give such information as would prevent any appropriation being made. That is something that your conferees have no power to control. We simply report for these surveys in order that the people may have this information. We propose to appropriate $40,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary to obtain this information for the people.

Mr. REED. Before the gentleman passes from that point I would like to ask him if the words "and locate" are still in the bill?

Mr. PAGE. They are. The House conferees were very anxious that those words should be stricken out. But if the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] will carefully look at the bill he will come to the same conclusion that we did, that those words practically amount to nothing. To locate means to survey, and to survey means to locate. When a canal is surveyed it is located. The provision in the bill determines where the survey is to begin and where it shall end; the terminal points of the survey are designated in the provision itself.

Mr. REED. The reason I asked the question was because it seemed to me that the words "and locate" would commit us to go further than the gentleman from California says he intends. It looks to me as if it meant more than survey.

Mr. PAGE. The provision contains these words:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to survey and locate a canal from a point on the Illinois River at or near the town of Hennepin, by the most practicable and convenient route, to the Mississippi River at or above the city of Rock Island, &c.

The House conferees for a long time disagreed with the Senate conferees with reference to retaining the words "and locate." I made the motion to strike out those words, and upon that motion the discussion arose. I am convinced now, however, that the words "and locate" have no practical effect in the item.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then why did the Senate conferees insist so strongly upon their being retained, if there is nothing in them?

Mr. PAGE. My friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] has been on a great many conference committees and he knows how hard it is to get the Senate conferees or any conferees, whether of the House or of the Senate, to yield an amendment, although it practically may cut no figure in the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I found in my association with the Senate conferees that they generally knew what they were doing, and when they were giving us nothing they knew it.

Mr. PAGE. I do not consider that the words "and locate" have any significance in connection with this matter, because to survey a route is to locate it. What is the object of having a survey unless it is to designate the most practicable route on which the canal can be built?

Mr. DE MOTTE. What reason did the Senate conferees give for insisting on retaining those words?

Mr. PAGE. Practically none. The friends of this item for the Hennepin Canal insisted that it should be retained; but while disagreeing with us as to striking out, they agreed that practically the words "and locate" had no significance at all; and this is the more apparent when it is considered that the proviso itself designates the points where the surveys shall begin and end.

In reference to the amendment for improving the Potomac flats, I desire to say that the conferees on the part of the House believed this was not a proper item for a river and harbor bill; that this proposed appropriation did not apply in any manner to the improvement of navigation or to assist commerce in any particular. But the Senate had with great unanimity put the amendment upon the bill, there being, I believe, only six or seven negative votes in that body; and we found there was a determination on the part of the Senate conferees to retain it. While most of the House conferees believed that as a work intended to benefit the sanitary condition of the national capital an appropriation for this purpose might well be made, the great point with us, on which we differed from the Senate conferees, was that it ought not to be made in a river and harbor bill.

Mr. BOWMAN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. While the bill reported for this purpose by the Committee on the District of Columbia provided a somewhat elaborate scheme for assessment of taxes for betterments or improvements, so that property enhanced in value by this work might contribute to its expense, is it not the fact that in this bill the improvement is to be made at the sole expense of the Government, without any provision at all for the collection of taxation from the parties benefited?

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman is correct. This bill provides that the money shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BOWMAN. And abandons the idea of assessing taxes for betterments?

Mr. PAGE. We did not abandon anything in that respect, for we did not consider the House bill to which the gentleman refers. We found before us this amendment which had been added to the river and harbor bill by the Senate, and while we believed it was not a proper item to go into such a bill we were compelled to yield in order to reach some agreement with the Senate.

Mr. BOWMAN. But if the money is thus appropriated under this bill do we not in point of fact abandon the idea of collecting taxation from property-owners on account of betterments?

Mr. PAGE. So far as this appropriation of $400,000 is concerned, it is an appropriation directly out of the Treasury of the United States to reclaim what are known as the Potomac flats. That is all the explanation there is about it. The gentleman from Massachusetts understands it as well as I do. We did not take into consideration any question as to whether tax-payers or property-owners of Washington were to pay one-half or any proportion of the expense.

Mr. BOWMAN. But is not that an important question? Suppose after the Government goes to work, and at its own expense improves these flats, it should be found that some private party owns the flats, has full legal title to them in their improved condition, after the whole value has been put upon them by the Government?

Mr. PAGE. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I would not be deterred from voting for a river and harbor bill to improve the harbors in his State because it incidentally benefited private property.

Mr. BOWMAN. This does so directly, not indirectly.

Mr. PAGE. Well, even if the improvement directly benefited private property along the line of the river or harbor where the improvement was made, I would not be deterred from voting for the bill.

Mr. ATKINS. Is it the purpose of this appropriation for the reclamation of the Potomac flats, as they are called, to improve the navigation of the Potomac River?

Mr. PAGE. The amendment so states; but I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that whatever may be said about the improvement of the navigation or commerce of the river, I believe this is adopted absolutely and unqualifiedly as a sanitary measure to protect the health and the lives of the citizens of the capital of the nation. It is possible—indeed I have no doubt—the work may go beyond that; but in my judgment—and I intend to be perfectly frank—the improvement of the health of the city is the greatest benefit that will be derived from this appropriation.

Mr. BRIGGS. The gentleman talks about the sanitary condition of this city. I wish to know whether statistics do not show that there are half a dozen or a dozen cities in this Union where the rate of mortality is greater than here, and where malarial diseases are more prevalent?

Mr. PAGE. That may be true.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. It is not true.

Mr. PAGE. I do not know whether it is true or not, and I do not care. This is a great city—the capital of the nation—and it is under the jurisdiction of the Congress of the United States. It is shown here are flats which breed malarial diseases. It is believed by the people generally throughout the country, and I believe by a majority of the members of the House and the Senate, that it is the duty of Congress to appropriate to fill up these flats. The only point of difference, and the only question I had individually about voting for this appropriation was that it was put on a river and harbor bill, where I do not think it belongs.

Mr. BOWMAN. Then you think it subject to a point of order?

Mr. PAGE. Not in a conference report. If it came as an original proposition I would think it was subject to the point of order.

I wish to say now, Mr. Speaker, that the House made an appropriation of $4,123,000 for the improvement of the Mississippi River from Cairo to the head of the passes. That was the whole sum asked for in the original estimates and reports of the Mississippi commission. The Senate on a supplementary report called for something like a million or more, and it added a million, about, to the House bill. It added in exact figures some $877,000. The committee of conference on the part of the House believed the amount of money appropriated by the House bill was ample for the purpose of improving that stretch of river, and all the money which could be profitably used during the fiscal year. I say that the committee of conference of both Houses have not restricted anything they have heretofore done or said in reference to the improvement of this great river; but they do not believe it is necessary at this time to make this additional appropriation and load this bill down, already large, with an additional appropriation of $877,000, because the money cannot be expended, in my judgment, during this fiscal year. While we would not have refrained if it were necessary to continue these improvements, or all the money which could be profitably used, and even more, so the commission should not be hampered in any manner in going on with this great improvement, yet we did believe this amount was wholly unnecessary and the Senate conferees, two of them, came to that conclusion.

Mr. DUNN. Does the gentleman say the sum proposed by the original House bill, in the opinion of the committee, is ample to do the work?

Mr. PAGE. No; but only what can be used from now to the expiration of the fiscal year. The gentlemen understand it is late in the season, and before this appropriation bill passes we will be in the month of August. I understand owing to the high water in the Mississippi River it is impossible to go on now even if this money were available. They will have but a short time to use the $4,123,000 in addition to half a million coming over from last year. We think it is ample for the purpose of improving that river during the fiscal year.

Mr. ROBERTSON. On what estimates was the $4,123,000 appropriated?

Mr. PAGE. The estimates of the commission.

Mr. ROBERTSON. For what?

Mr. PAGE. The river below Cairo to the head of the passes.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Estimates of the commission for work on channel improvement?

Mr. PAGE. For the general improvement. I know what the gentleman is getting at, and I will say in that connection there were estimates for the improvement of the harbors which would come under the plan proposed by the Mississippi River commission. The committee saw proper to put the whole amount for the navigation of the river, as well as for the harbors which had been estimated for in addition—

Mr. ROBERTSON. What I wish to get at is this: Does that $4,123,000 cover the estimates of the commission for channel improvement as well as for the improvement of the different harbors, New Orleans, Natchez, Memphis, &c., and the rectification of the Atchafalaya and the Red? Does the gentleman know what the estimates were?

Mr. PAGE. Yes; $500,000 to $600,000.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Five hundred thousand dollars for the rectification of the Red and the Atchafalaya alone and $600,000 for the improvement of the harbors, which would make $1,100,000.

Mr. PAGE. I do not think there was that much.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Certainly $500,000.

Mr. PAGE. You are thinking of the final work, but not what is to be used this year.

Mr. ROBERTSON. They can use the whole of it if they choose.

Mr. PAGE. Oh, no; the estimates are based on what they can use during the fiscal year.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I mean what amount of that $4,123,000 which was estimated for by the Mississippi River commission for the improvement of the channel of the river has been diverted to these particular works?

Mr. PAGE. None of it has been diverted. It simply provides that out of that sum the improvements of these harbors may be continued, under the direction of the Mississippi River commission.

Mr. ROBERTSON. And the rectification of the mouth of the Atchafalaya?

Mr. PAGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Now, what I want to get at is this: What amount of this $4,123,000 will remain for the improvement of the river when these amounts to which the gentleman refers are deducted from it?

Mr. PAGE. With the amount coming over as unexpended balances it will be about what the total is now; that is, about $4,123,000.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The amount estimated for by the commission. But in addition, as I understand it, the committee have determined to use a portion of this item for the improvement of the harbors, as well as for the rectification of the mouth of the Atchafalaya and the Red Rivers, so that amount must be deducted from the total amount of this appropriation of $4,123,000 estimated for by the commission for general improvements. Now, that portion so diverted is taken from this total, and consequently there is not that amount left for the improvement of the channel.

Mr. PAGE. No; the $4,123,000 includes the Atchafalaya and Red Rivers and the harbors which the gentleman has mentioned.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The improvement of course will be taken out, then, of this total appropriation of $4,123,000 estimated for by the commission?

Mr. PAGE. Exactly.

Mr. ROBERTSON. So the Mississippi River does not get, then, the total amount of the estimates made by the commission?

Mr. PAGE. Whatever amount is used for the rectification of these rivers and the improvement of the harbors will of course be deducted; but the gentleman will remember that in addition to this appropriation there is about a half million dollars unexpended from last year which will be added to the total appropriation.

Mr. ROBERTSON. That is exactly what I wanted to get at. I want to know, if possible, what the amount will be, and how nearly it will approximate to the estimates of the commission for the improvement of the channel, after these amounts are taken from it.

Mr. PAGE. That is exactly as I have stated. But, let me say, I do not believe that there is a member of this House who does not think that this money is ample for all purposes of improving that stretch of river during the next fiscal year. There was no difference on the part of the Senate or the House conferees as to that; and there is no disposition on the part of the House or Senate, I believe, to cut down or cripple the scheme of improvement in any respect whatever. We believe that the money here appropriated, with what remains on hand, is more than ample for the purpose, and certainly more than can be expended during the next fiscal year.

If the whole amount of this money, the $4,123,000 here appropriated, added to the half million which comes over from last year, is used, it will be used almost exclusively in labor, and will make an army of 50,000 men employed on that improvement for the next six months.

Mr. ELLIS. Will the gentleman now permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PAGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ELLIS. Excluding the amount that will be necessary for the harbor improvements and for the rectification of the mouth of the Atchafalaya and Red Rivers, how much of the total appropriation will be available for the channel improvement of the river?

Mr. PAGE. I do not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. HERR. I heard the question. There will be just about $4,123,000. The half million dollars coming over from the appropriation of last year will be just about enough to make the improvements at Natchez, Vicksburgh, and the other works outside of the main channel.

Mr. ELLIS. The gentleman, I think, does not understand my question. The total amount appropriated by this bill, as estimated for by the commission, is $4,123,000.

Mr. HERR. Yes, sir.

Mr. ELLIS. Now, I ask, excluding the amount—

Mr. HERR. But before the gentleman proceeds let me again call his attention to the fact that there is $500,000 unexpended which comes over from last year that will be used for this work.

Mr. PAGE. That has already been stated half a dozen times.

Mr. HERR. And that means that this amount will be about sufficient for these outside works, leaving the original amount of $4,123,000 to be used as originally contemplated by the commission; and if gentlemen will notice the reports they will see it is stated that no more than that amount could be used this year.

Mr. PAGE. There is also about $150,000, I think, that comes over as an unexpended part of the appropriation for the rectification of the mouth of the Atchafalaya River, and provision is made here that it may also be used.

Mr. ELLIS. Only about $119,000. Now, with the present appropriation of $4,123,000, excluding what will be expended for the harbors and the rectification of these rivers, how much will remain for channel improvements?

Mr. PAGE. Well, I should say something in the vicinity of $4,000,000. This, of course, adds to the total appropriation the amount, $500,000, coming over from last year and the $119,000, or whatever may be the exact amount, that comes over as the unexpended appropriation for the improvement of the mouth of the Atchafalaya River.

Mr. ROBERTSON. But that is for a specific work?

Mr. PAGE. But we transfer it here, as I have said, for this purpose.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to ask the gentleman from California a question in view of the fact that so much has been said as to whether or not the recommendation of the commission has been fairly complied with by the Committee on Commerce; and my question is whether or not there has ever been presented to the Committee on Commerce a complaint on the part of a practical navigator of the Mississippi River that there should be an appropriation made for the improvement of its navigation?

Mr. PAGE. Yes, sir; there have been a great many before our committee.

Mr. BAYNE. Practical navigators?

Mr. HERR. Certainly; a number of them.

Mr. PAGE. But I do not care about that. These are all side matters.

The House conferees yielded to amendment 100, which provides for a lock at the mouth of the Bayou Plaquemine, Louisiana, but without increasing the appropriation at all. They also yielded to amendment 101, which reads "on which a sum not exceeding $35,000 shall be expended." That applies to Alton Harbor. The conferees on the part of the House yielded to that.

The other amendments are merely verbal amendments, and amount to nothing practically.

In conclusion I desire to say this bill is a large one. It carries with it some $18,700,000. More than one-third of this amount is appropriated to the Mississippi and the Missouri Rivers. I believe one-half or nearly one-half of the whole amount carried in this bill of $18,700,000 has been appropriated to the Mississippi River and its navigable tributaries. We have done the best we could in the preparation of this bill. We have reflected as near as it was possible for a conference committee to do the will of the House in making our report which we have submitted. I hope the House will concur in the conference report and that the bill will be passed so that it may go to the President.

Mr. COX, of New York, rose.

Mr. PAGE. I have no disposition to cut off debate for a reasonable length of time, but I wish to call the previous question as soon as the debate is over.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman from California will yield to me.

Mr. PAGE. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX, of New York. I thought the gentleman was yielding to me.

Mr. PAGE. I am willing to yield to both gentlemen.

Mr. COX, of New York. I only expect to speak for two minutes. When this bill came first from the Committee on Commerce it proposed, I think, about $17,000,000. That was a large leap from the appropriations of last Congress of some $11,000,000. I am not disposed to find fault with my friend from California, because he has in some sense resisted the exactions of the Senate. The Senate claimed twenty millions. The gentleman's bill now, after the conference, is about $18,700,000. Well, that shows considerable virtue. That shows some virtue at least, although—

Mr. PAGE. Thank you.

Mr. COX, of New York. It is not worth thanks when I get through. I was saying that shows some virtue at least, although I think the gentleman might have resisted the attack of members who desired local appropriations causing him to raise his bill from eleven millions to seventeen. Nevertheless there is some virtue in it. And my friend smiles at least an honest smile. He did not smile that way when the bill was up in the House before.

I beg to say all this matter about cutting canals through States ought to have been resisted in its entirety. There is no power given under Heaven among men, certainly not by our organic law, and certainly not by the interpretation of that law as our fathers made it, that ever allowed Congress to give money for the purpose of cutting canals through States.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. May I ask the gentleman from New York a question?

Mr. COX, of New York. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. By what authority, then, has the Government for the last fifty years made surveys of canals, aided in the construction of canals, bought stock in canal companies, and purchased canals outright?

Mr. COX, of New York. I think the most comprehensive answer to that question is this: that we have violated our Constitution in many respects.

Mr. BUCKNER. The gentleman from Illinois alludes to the purchase of the Portland Canal and the building of the Keokuk Canal. That was in the interest of the improvement of the river.

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not know how that was, and I do not propose to argue it. I am standing on the old ways of the fathers. With the permission of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CAR-LISLE,] who has the volume before him, I will read the discussion that took place in the constitutional convention, reported in the Madison papers, volume 3, page 1576.

Dr. Franklin moved to add, after the words "post-roads," article 1, section 8, a power "to provide for cutting canals where deemed necessary."

Mr. Wilson seconded the motion.

Mr. Sherman—

Roger Sherman—

Mr. Sherman objected. The expense in such cases will fall on the United States and the benefit accrue to the places where the canals may be cut.

Mr. WILSON. Instead of being an expense to the United States they may be made a source of revenue.

The same old argumentation, the same thing which our friend here urges. But how was it when it came to a vote? The vote was taken—

The motion being so modified as to admit a distinct question, specifying and limited to the case of canals.

Who voted for it?

Pennsylvania, Virginia, Georgia; ayes 3.

Who voted against it?

New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina; noes 8.

And it was defeated. It never had its status in the Constitution.

Mr. McLANE. Will the gentleman give the date of that debate?

Mr. COX, of New York. Seventeen hundred and eighty-seven.

Mr. McLANE. At what time in the convention? You will find it was before the article on commerce was adopted.

Mr. COX, of New York. It was on the 14th of September of that year.

Mr. McLANE. Now I ask the gentleman to give me the book.

Mr. COX, of New York. My friend from Maryland [Mr. McLANE] was on the committee of conference, and he always has taken the Federal view, having some pleasant antecedents in that respect.

I maintain here to-day that there is no power under the Constitution by which we can cut these canals in States, or provide for them by any little arrangement as to their survey in advance and not committing Congress in the future. Gentlemen must recollect that no such provision is possible, because all laws are revocable. We must remember the practices of the past, that when surveys are made then appropriations generally follow.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Not always; not half the time.

Mr. COX, of New York. I said "generally;" I know there are exceptional people in Congress.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I make this statement, that not in one case out of ten where surveys have been made for canals have appropriations followed.

Mr. COX, of New York. That was because—

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. It was because it was ascertained that they were not practicable. That is the reason for this survey; to ascertain whether it is practicable and proper and right.

Mr. COX, of New York. If you have no power to make the improvement, as I am arguing, you have no power to make the preliminary survey. You know that when you once get your finger into the machine you will soon get in your hand, and then your arm, and then your whole body. Next year a million will be appropriated for the canal and before you get through ten or twenty millions will be appropriated.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. What is the difference in principle between making an appropriation of a million for the Hennepin Canal and two millions for the canal that connects Harlem River with the Hudson?

Mr. COX, of New York. Everybody knows what the Harlem River is.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. And everybody out West knows what the Hennepin Canal will be.

Mr. COX, of New York. I never voted for Harlem, Hell Gate, or Hennepin. Therefore I stand here, through the instrumentality of my constituents and in accordance with their instructions, to oppose every measure that looks to breaking down the old order of things in this country. If the gentleman has not that relation to politics, I wish he had; I wish other members had more independent relations. I have been schooled in these politics.

I beg gentlemen now to pause before they begin a system which before ten years roll around will place a burden of $100,000,000 a year upon our people for improving every kind of stream and river and harbor in the country.

I know this, and I say it boldly, I say it here to-day, conscious as I am when I think of what the result will be, that your President, following the example of General Grant in his very best estate and day, will place his veto on this bill.

It may be true that we have a large surplus in the Treasury, running up to hundreds of millions; it will be $231,000,000 before the year is through. And it is urged that because we have that surplus we must pay out these largesses irrespective of the localities to be aggrandized by them.

I hope that the House will pause; and if we cannot stop this bill now that we will at least call a halt and have a new conference. And if we cannot stop it there, then let Arthur, as our President, place his veto on it, so that we may have some original veto.

Mr. PAGE. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has ten minutes left.

Mr. PAGE. Only ten minutes of my hour?

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. PAGE. I have promised some of my time to another gentleman; but I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I regret very much that so little time is given to me on a matter of such great importance. I shall therefore confine myself to the single proposition in reference to the improvement of the Potomac flats.

I am very glad that the gentleman in charge of this conference report has, with a frankness that does not often characterize such occasions, stated to the House that the commerce of the Potomac River is very insignificant and that the money here proposed to be given for the improvement of the Potomac flats was in no sense to promote the commerce of the country; that the real point was the improvement of the Potomac flats.

A great deal has been said about the unhealthiness of Washington City, caused by these flats. The press has been laden with such statements and they have been sent broadcast throughout the land. An attempt has been made to build up public opinion all over the country so as to compel us to do what I regard as a great iniquity.

Mr. MILLS. To whom do those Potomac flats belong?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not know; I cannot tell the gentleman. I want to call the attention of the House to something else than mere vague reports, vague conjectures, in regard to the death of General Garfield, the death of Mr. Hartridge, or the death of this or that member of Congress who may have passed away. I want to call the attention of members to some other things than statements of newspaper correspondents who may have social relations here of a peculiar character.

I hold in my hand the American Almanac, by Mr. Spofford, in which is printed a table containing the rates of mortality in American cities, showing the number of deaths per annum per thousand inhabitants. In 1880 the death-rate in the city of Washington was 22.9 per thousand. At the city of Baltimore, nearby, the death-rate was 24.7 per thousand; yet we never heard of the terrible unhealthiness of Baltimore. The next city in the list is Boston, with a death-rate of 23.5 per thousand. The next is Brooklyn, with a death-rate of 20 per thousand; then Charleston, South Carolina, with 31 per thousand. Then comes Jacksonville, Florida, a great health resort, with a death-rate of 28.4 per thousand; then Memphis, Tennessee, with 31, and Mobile, Alabama, with 24 per thousand. So I might go on and enumerate the death-rate of different cities. It is demonstrable from this information in Mr. Spofford's almanac, authority which we all accept, that this very city of Washington is one of the healthiest cities in this country, and a fraud is perpetrated upon the House when by false reports as to the health of this city the effort is made to have large appropriations voted here perhaps in the interest of private parties.

It is by no means settled—it is a question in the minds of many members of this House—to whom the property that is to be improved belongs. The very amendment which we are asked to agree to contains this provision:

And it is hereby made the duty of the Attorney-General to examine all claims of title to the premises to be improved under this appropriation and see that the rights of the Government in all respects are secured and protected.

It thus appears that there is a dispute as to the title; the Government may not have the title. The provision reads further:

And if he deems it necessary he is authorized to cause a suit or suits in law or in equity to be instituted, in the name of the United States, in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, against any and all claimants of title under any patent which in his opinion was by mistake or was improperly or illegally issued for any part of the marshes or flats within the limits of the proposed improvement.

It is thus suggested in this very amendment which it is now proposed to adopt, that there are persons claiming title to this very property which is to be improved. You propose that the whole expenditure shall be made out of the Treasury. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PAGE. I will now yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TOWNSEND.]

Mr. MILLS. I would like some gentleman who understands the facts of the case to state something about the ownership of this land.

Mr. PAGE. Instead of calling the previous question within my hour, as there may be some gentlemen who wish to discuss this question further, I suggest that by unanimous consent the debate be allowed to run until four o'clock and that the previous question shall then be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] asks that the time for debate on this question be extended until four o'clock, at which time the previous question shall be considered ordered.

Mr. CARLISLE. That is a very short time for the consideration of so important a question as this, unless there will be an hour for debate after the ordering of the previous question.

Mr. PAGE. I understand there will not be. I am perfectly willing to let the debate run until half past four o'clock.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope that the gentleman from California will allow—and I have no doubt that he will—liberal time for debate on this matter.

Mr. PAGE. I have not the slightest objection in the world if by unanimous consent the previous question be considered as ordered at half past four o'clock.

A-MEMBER. Say five o'clock.

Mr. MILLS. I have no objection to that proposition, so far as I am concerned; but I hope the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE,] the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, will give the House some information as to the title to this property.

Mr. PAGE. I cannot in the confusion hear one word the gentleman says.

Mr. MILLS. Then I am very unfortunate.

Mr. PAGE. I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this question may run until half past four o'clock, at which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. MILLS. I repeat I will not make objection if the gentleman from California will enlighten the House as to the ownership of this property.

Mr. PAGE. I understand it belongs to the United States.

Mr. MILLS. Do you know it?

Mr. PAGE. I do not know it positively; I know it as well as I can know anything of that kind. But, Mr. Speaker, I desire the House to settle this question as to the extension of the debate by unanimous consent.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I wish to know how this time is to be disposed of.

Mr. PAGE. Anybody who gets the floor can occupy the time. I do not want any more.

The SPEAKER. The time will be divided equally so far as the Chair can control it. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered at half past four o'clock, and the intervening time be occupied in debate. Is there objection?

Mr. PAGE. I suggest that the debate proceed under the five-minute rule, the time being equally divided between the friends and the opponents of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BROWNE. There is.

Mr. PAGE. Then at the expiration of my hour, or as soon as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TOWNSEND] is through, I shall move the previous question. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER. Five minutes.

Mr. PAGE. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TOWNSEND.]

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes remaining I can make only a brief statement in reference to this conference report. As to the Potomac flats, I understand from the facts brought to our knowledge that this appropriation is intended to inaugurate a work for the permanent improvement of the navigation of the Potomac River by establishing dock lines from the Long Bridge to Georgetown, and reclaiming about seven hundred acres of land which now lie waste, covered in large part by water.

That belongs to the Government of the United States when it is reclaimed, and it is intended to be used for the purposes of a park and public grounds, and increase by that quantity the Government property in that vicinity, leaving the object to which it might be devoted for the future necessities of the Government to determine.

In that seven hundred acres there are some forty acres which some man in this city has a claim to, or thinks he has. That is the only portion of the seven hundred acres in reference to which there is any question about the title. And it is provided in the clause making the appropriation that the Attorney-General shall look into the title and see that it is vested in the United States before any improvement can be made of these forty acres.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does the gentleman from Ohio say it is proposed to reclaim these seven hundred acres to be used as a park?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. It is proposed to reclaim seven hundred acres by establishing dock-lines in the Potomac River necessary for the permanent improvement of its navigation, and when thus reclaimed that property will belong to the Government of the United States. In that event those grounds might be used for the purposes of a park, but they will belong to the Government to do with as the Government may please. To devote them to the purposes of a park would be a natural thing to do, provided, however, an object more necessary was not presented.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman point out the clause in this conference report which provides that the title shall be in the Government of the United States before any improvement shall take place?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. The gentleman from Massachusetts is a good lawyer and can find it for himself. My time is very limited and much less than I shall need. He will find it in the clause of the bill making appropriation for this work. The Attorney-General is instructed in reference to that duty.

Mr. COX, of New York. Why not bring this matter of the improvement of the Potomac River in a separate bill. I wanted to vote for that.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I would myself prefer that, but there was no opportunity to get action on it in the House. Now, appropriations for the improvement of the navigation of the Potomac River have been made every year since I have been a member on this floor. The appropriations heretofore made have been small, for temporary improvement, and have thus been absolutely thrown away. This scheme contemplates a comprehensive system of improvement. The waters of the river are to be confined within a narrower channel; the dock lines will be high enough to prevent overflow; and the work, though expensive, when once done will be permanent and require no further appropriation for its maintenance. So much for the navigation phase of this appropriation. Of the sanitary results and the value to the Government of the reclaimed land, I will say nothing in this connection.

Mr. HAZELTON. Would the gentleman vote for it in a separate bill?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I would.

Mr. HAZELTON. Why not allow $500,000?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. The conference committee had to come to some compromise and the appropriation of $400,000 was what we agreed to.

Mr. HAZELTON. If it was right on a separate bill, why not on this?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. As I have said, it was the best agreement we could come to in the committee of conference. It was a Senate amendment.

I wish now, Mr. Speaker, to say a few words in reference to the survey for the Delaware and Chesapeake Canal and the survey for the Hennepin Canal. It is very well known that I have been utterly opposed to the construction of canals by the General Government. The canal is a thing of the past. I believe their construction has been abandoned for thirty or forty years by every one desirous of making profitable investments of money, whether States, private corporations, or individuals. I have in every way tried to prevent action in reference to these schemes. I stand to-day in that position. The use of canals as a means of transportation in the march of progress is only one station behind wagon roads and broad-tread wagons. The enterprise and improvements of the age have compelled them to give place to the systems of railroads which private capital has spread all over the country, affording better, more rapid, and in most cases cheaper means of transportation. Why should this Government now commence digging canals, when corporations and States years ago found them unprofitable, and cannot operate them without a loss?

But, sir, a great many citizens of the United States, as well as a large number of members of the House and Senate, wish to have an investigation instituted as to this Hennepin Canal and the canal between the Chesapeake and Delaware. It was said we have not now sufficient reliable information or data upon which to base intelligent action. After the defeat of the appropriation in the Senate for these canals a clause was introduced appropriating money to make a survey. That came before the committee of conference. I was opposed to appropriating the sum of $1,000,000, or indeed anything at all, but conference means concession on the part of the conferees, and we had on our side to make some concession. I found that $30,000 was ample for the Hennepin Canal and $10,000 for the Chesapeake and Delaware, and I also found that the word "locate" in the connection in which it is used did not mean the location of a route for a canal or any other improvement to be afterward carried on as a permanent work.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent for two minutes to conclude my remarks.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I desired in the first place, Mr. Speaker, to have the word "locate" eliminated, but was unsuccessful. I was informed by the United States chief engineer that the word "locate" was used in the sense of merely locating a route for a canal so they could make their estimate of the cost with some degree of accuracy. In order to do that they had to locate it somewhere, and when located they could then make their estimate of the cost of the canal, but not until a route had first been selected. But to avoid any misconception we adopted an amendment to the clause, "provided that nothing herein shall be construed to in any way commit the Government to proceed with the construction of said improvement." This, I think, should be satisfactory to the most captious.

Now, the Senate and the House will be benefited by this information. In my judgment it will be developed that this scheme will cost an immense amount of money—not five millions, but more than twenty-five millions. It will be reliable information, on which every gentleman will base his vote. In that view it is valuable.

It will be found further on examination that the clause authorizing these surveys also provides for reports to be made to Congress as to the cost of maintaining and operating the work, which in my judgment will be so large as to frighten every prudent man from voting for it. It also contemplates reports as to the advantages which may accrue from the work. All of this information, coming from reliable sources, being prepared by the corps of Government engineers, will be worth a great deal more than $30,000 to this country by way of preventing the commencement of these most expensive and in my judgment unnecessary improvements. Then, with that information before it, if Congress sees proper to inaugurate the work, let it go on and do it.

This Hennepin Canal scheme will be recognized by the old members as a project that has been clamoring for recognition around this Capitol very often during the past six years, and came very nearly being successful, its advocates never knowing whether it would cost four or twenty-four millions, or whether it would be any positive benefit when constructed; or whether it would be like nearly all the other canals in the country, pay a loss to its owners without any compensatory results. But as I am informed at this time I should never consent to it myself. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this survey will, after all, be a good thing. The information to be derived will be worth what it costs, and future Congresses can of course act advisedly and intelligently.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. PAGE. I now demand the previous question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 91, noes 40.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman as insisting upon the point? [Cries of "Oh, no; withdraw it!"]

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. At the instance of gentlemen around me, I will withdraw it.

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. KASSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to ask if it is in order, as in case of reports from other committees, to move to recommit this report with instructions? The rule provides that it is in order at a certain stage of our legislative proceedings to give instructions to a conference committee. Now, I desire in some parliamentary form, either by instructions to the committee of conference, or otherwise, to secure the incorporation of a proviso at the end of the bill in the following form:

Provided, That the Secretary of War, with the approval of the President, may limit any expenditure provided by this act to any less sum than that authorized therefor during the current fiscal year, in any case where in their opinion the public interest does not require the entire expenditure.

If it be in order by any motion to get that provision before the conference committee for its instruction, I desire to make that motion.

Mr. KENNA. That cannot be in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would not be in order.

Mr. COX, of New York. It is the law now any way.

Mr. KASSON. I think not.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to say to the gentleman from Iowa that President Grant did order the Secretary of War to withhold the appropriations made for rivers and harbors by the Forty-fifth Congress, without any other authority than that which is now upon the statute-books; that is under the general law that all moneys so appropriated must be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would not be in order to recommit the report to the conference committee. It is never in order to instruct the conference committee to do that which it could not do under the reference made of the matter to the committee in the first instance.

Mr. KASSON. I think, Mr. Speaker, that under the rule as given in this digest there is no such limitation. I will not, however, dissent from the Speaker's ruling. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already ruled that it would not be in order to recommit with instructions to the conference committee.

Mr. PAGE. Am I entitled to any time after the previous question is ordered?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. PAGE. Then I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. CARLISLE. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. REAGAN. There is a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, about which I wish to make a brief statement, with the consent of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to recognize the gentleman for that purpose at this time, as the previous question is operating.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. Regular order.

Mr. PAGE. I ask unanimous consent that every member who desires to print remarks upon this bill may be permitted to do so.

There was no objection. [See Appendix.]

Mr. HOUSE. Mr. Speaker, can we have a separate vote upon the several essential points embodied in this conference report?

The SPEAKER. The conference report is not divisible; the question is on agreeing to it as a whole.

Mr. COX, of New York. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REAGAN. Can we have a separate vote upon the different items of this report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already held that the conference report will have to be agreed to or rejected as a whole.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to ask a parliamentary question. If the report is not agreed to, it being a conference on the differences between the two Houses, then will not the natural and usual result be that there will be another conference upon these points of difference?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he is not called upon to rule on that question at this time.

Mr. BLOUNT. But if the conference report is not agreed to I simply desire to know if the natural and usual course would not be another conference as to the points of differences between the two Houses?

Mr. HAZELTON. Of course.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, as it has already stated, will rule upon that point when it arises.

Mr. BLOUNT. But I am asking for information. The Chair has already answered a parliamentary inquiry, and I ask another.

The SPEAKER. The only question now before the House is on the adoption of the conference report.

The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 82, nays 97, not voting 110; as follows:

YEAS—82.

So the report of the committee of conference was not agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. MILES with Mr. SINGLETON of Illinois.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, with Mr. BLOUNT.

Mr. CORNELL with Mr. LATHAM.

Mr. WEST with Mr. GIBSON.

Mr. COBB with Mr. CALKINS.

Mr. HOOKER. I am paired with the gentleman from California, Mr. PACHECO, and withdraw my vote.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am paired with the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. WILLIAMS, and withdraw my vote.

Mr. THOMAS. I am paired with Mr. CURTIN, of Pennsylvania. I am in favor of the bill, and would have voted for it if an opportunity had offered.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I am paired with Mr. MILES, of Connecticut. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. VAN HORN. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. STRAIT. I move to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was not agreed to.

Mr. COX, of New York. And I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. PAGE. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. KENNA. And pending that I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. COX, of New York. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX, of New York. What will be the consequence of this vote? Will there be a new conference?

Mr. SPRINGER. Not unless the House orders it.

The SPEAKER. The House, the Chair thinks, might take such action as possibly might produce a new conference. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was not agreed to—

Mr. COX, of New York. Who made that motion?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. COX, of New York. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman allow the Chair to state the question, after which the gentleman will be heard? The gentleman from Minnesota moves to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was disagreed to, and the gentleman from New York moves to lay that motion on the table. Thereupon the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] moves that the House adjourn.

Mr. COX, of New York. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from Minnesota did not vote on the prevailing side.

Mr. WASHBURN. He did. It was my colleague [Mr. STRAIT] who made the motion to reconsider, and not I.

Mr. COX, of New York. I beg pardon.

Mr. KENNA. I insist on my motion, except for a conference report which the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] desires to present.

The SPEAKER. The question must be on the pending motion, except by unanimous consent. The gentleman from West Virginia moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken there were—ayes 84; noes 53.

Mr. BLOUNT. I call for the yeas and nays.

On ordering the yeas and nays, the affirmative being counted, there were ayes 27.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the number is not sufficient.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Count the other side.

The negative vote being counted, there were noes 97. So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the whole vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 95, nays 76, not voting 118; as follows:

YEAS—95.

So the motion of Mr. KENNA was agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. LE FEVRE with Mr. RYAN.

Mr. KELLEY with Mr. ATKINS.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated; and accordingly (at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS.

The following petitions were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ALDRICH: The petition of the Chicago Vessel-Owners' Association, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 4260) to regulate lake and marine shipping—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CANDLER: The petition of Mr. G. Adams and others, for the appointment of a select committee to consider the question of American shipping—to the same committee.

By Mr. S. S. FARWELL: The petition of 219 citizens of the second Congressional district of Iowa, for the confirmation of the call for a peace congress to be held in Washington, District Columbia, November 22, 1882—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. HERNDON: The petition of citizens of Mobile, Alabama, for the appointment of a select committee to consider the subject of reviving the shipping of the United States—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. A. S. HEWITT: The petitions of merchants of New York, for the appointment of a select committee to consider the shipping interests of the United States—severally to the same committee.

By Mr. JADWIN: The petition of Mary Morrison, for relief—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, July 26, 1882.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceeding was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following joint resolutions received yesterday from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their title, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 220) to furnish the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to each State and Territorial library;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 269) providing for additional copies of the Revised Statutes for the use of the Interior Department;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 122) requiring the Public Printer to publish certain decisions of the First Comptroller of the Treasury Department; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 203) for the printing of additional copies of House Executive Document No. 47 and subsequent land laws.

PRINTING OF AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed 300,000 copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1881, 214,000 copies for the use of members of the House of Representatives, 50,000 copies for the use of members of the Senate, and 30,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GEORGE. I present a telegram from the State board of health of Mississippi, asking Congress to be liberal in its appropriation sustaining the National Board of Health. I desire to have the telegram read.

The telegram was read, as follows:

JACKSON, MISSISSIPPI, July 24, 1882.

Senators LAMAR and GEORGE and Representatives MULBROW, MANNING, MONEY, SINGLETON, HOOKER, and LYNCH, (care of J. Z. GEORGE,) Washington, D. C.:

The State board of health at a special session held here this day have unanimously agreed that the National Board of Health can and will perform vital and important sanitary services that can be rendered by no other body, and would respectfully urge you, in view of the important interest involved, to do all in your power to obtain such an appropriation from Congress as may enable that board to fully discharge its responsible duties in accordance with the plans foreshadowed in its annual report.

F. W. DANCY, President.

C. A. RICA.

W. F. HYER.

J. W. BENNETT.

W. D. HILL.

B. F. KITTRELL.

J. W. BLANKS.

E. P. SALE.

WIRT JOHNSON, Secretary.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to say, in connection with the telegram just read, that I have received, but have not deemed it necessary to present to the Senate, similar communications, written or telegraphed, from almost every board of health and sanitary association throughout the entire South and West, all concurring in recommending that the necessary appropriations to sustain the National Board of Health be made.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I will ask the Senator from Tennessee if he has received a similar communication from the State board of health of Louisiana?

Mr. HARRIS. That is the remarkable exception and almost the only one. I was quite sure my friend from Wisconsin would treasure that.

Mr. VOORHEES. I wish to say that I have received from Indiana evidence to my mind of a strong public sentiment in favor of the proposition of the Senator from Tennessee in regard to the Board of Health. I have received information from the most intelligent physicians of that State urging that Congress should not neglect to make the proper and necessary appropriations in behalf of that great benevolence. I desired to add this to what the Senator from Tennessee said, and to assure him that, so far as I am concerned, I shall most cordially co-operate with him to make the Board of Health what it ought to be, a live, active, efficient agency in this matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The telegram will be referred to the Select Committee to investigate and report the best means of preventing the introduction and spread of Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to withdraw it for the purpose of sending it to my colleagues in the House.

Mr. McDILL. I present a petition sent to me signed by all the leading members of the bar of the city of Boonesborough, Iowa. That place is located on the Des Moines River, and the gentlemen who sign the petition are all men of high character and high standing in that section. The petition relates to a bill now on the Calendar in regard to the title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands. The petition is very short, and I ask that it be read. In the condition of business at this time I do not feel that I can probably obtain the consent of the Senate to take up the bill for consideration at this session, but I give notice that I shall at an early period next session ask for the consideration of the bill, as it affects the rights of many hundred worthy citizens of the State of Iowa. I ask that the petition be read, and that it lie on the table.

The petition was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

BOONESBOROUGH, IOWA, February 6, 1882.

To the honorable Senators and Representatives in Congress:

We, the undersigned, respectfully represent that we are members of the Boone County bar; that we are acquainted with the so-called Des Moines River land; that in our judgment the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company never had any equitable right to any lands above the Racoon Forks of said river.

We therefore ask that you at your earliest convenience pass an act that will give to the bona fide settlers on said lands their homes, and bring quiet and peace to the Des Moines Valley.

Mr. COCKRELL presented the petition of Fannie A. Edwards, formerly Fannie A. Pendleton, widow of the late Captain Nelson W. Edwards, of Company H, Fifteenth Iowa Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PROTECTION OF IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. CONGER. The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6722) to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea, have instructed me to report it without amendment and ask for its immediate consideration. I desire to say that this bill has been prepared and passed in the House so amended as to obviate the objections and oversights of the former bill, which the President vetoed.

Mr. HOAR. That should go over, that we may see it.

Mr. CONGER. I hope it may not go over. A similar bill was passed by the Senate, but it had in it, by an oversight, a misdescription of the decks of vessels and consequently a wrong definition of the spaces where passengers might be allotted in the ships. The President returned that bill with his objections to it on that account, but all objections are obviated by this bill, which has passed the House. Every day's delay in the passage of such a bill as that will fix on the immigrants coming to this country untold disasters and wrongs. I believe the sentiment of all our people, both of American and foreign birth, has demanded with a unanimity almost unparalleled the passage of some law to guard against this infernal middle passage and the evils and wrongs which have accumulated upon those who come to make this country their home. I hope my friend will not object to the consideration of the bill now.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suggest that the Senator take the bill and specify the actual changes.

Mr. HOAR. I have great confidence in the judgment of the honorable Senator from Michigan; but his statement of the importance of this bill, in which I concur, makes it seem to me to be my duty at least to have an opportunity of examining it. He will have as good a chance of getting it up to-morrow morning as he has now. Let it lie over the usual one day. To-morrow there will be no objection undoubtedly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over under the rule.

Mr. CONGER. If the bill is to go over I will withdraw it and report it again to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. I let the former bill go through with great hesitation without making some suggestions about it, growing out of my respect for the committee that reported it and the same considerations which the Senator has now suggested. It turned out that when it went through it encountered the veto of the President for reasons the force of which everybody concedes. I think it is the duty of the Senate not to take any bill of this kind on mere authority. My objection is not to delay the passage of the bill; it will be a law just as soon, in the course of events, if it is considered to-morrow as to-day.

Mr. CONGER. I perhaps ought to say that the only thing which led to what might be wrong in that bill in two or three or four particulars arose from the fact that the words "uppermost deck" were used instead of "main deck." Ten years ago that would have been the proper designation in a bill of the deck affected, but in modern ship-building the change in the arrangement of vessels and the addition of another deck, which has received this name, made it necessary to change that term to "main deck." It was not understood except by ship-builders and therefore escaped attention, because it was in the old law in this way; but the modern mode of naming decks made the change, and the President thought it his duty, as it undoubtedly was, to return the bill with his objections so that that correction might be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan wish to withdraw the report?

Mr. CONGER. I do not care to do so. I shall call up the bill in the morning, and I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will give it his examination between now and to-morrow.

FISH AND FISHERIES INVESTIGATION.

Mr. LAPHAM. Senate bill No. 1823, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, has reference to the preservation of the fish and fisheries on the Atlantic coast. The committee have investigated the subject to some extent, and have ascertained that quite a large amount of capital is now invested in the manufacture of oils from menhaden and other fish that are taken along the coast within two miles of the shore by vessels with purse-nets. There are certain conflicting interests which require an investigation into the facts preparatory to proper legislation. The committee addressed a communication to Professor Baird, and he recommends that the investigation be had. The committee have instructed me to report the following resolutions, and I ask for their present consideration.

The resolutions were considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That five members of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate be designated by the chairman of said committee as a sub-committee to act in conjunction with the Commission of Fish and Fisheries to examine into the subject of the protection to be given by law to the fish and fisheries of the Atlantic coast, as proposed in the bill (S. No. 1823) for the protection of fish and fisheries on the Atlantic coast.

Resolved, That said committee have power to send for persons and papers in regard to the beforementioned inquiries, and that it have leave to sit during the recess of the Senate.

Resolved, That the expenses incurred in the execution of the foregoing resolutions be paid on the certificate of the chairman of said sub-committee out of the appropriation for the contingent expenses of the Senate.

ADDITIONAL LIBRARY ACCOMMODATIONS.

Mr. VOORHEES. I had supposed that before this session concluded I would have the honor and privilege of bringing the attention of this body to the bill to provide additional accommodations for the Library of Congress, but in pursuance of a policy which the committee on that subject thought best we left the matter to be acted upon first by the House. The House having postponed that subject until the 12th day of next December, it is important, in order that we should be ready to act, as I hope we shall at the opening of the next session of Congress upon this important subject, that the resolution which I have in my hand be considered and adopted. I am authorized by the committee to report a resolution and to ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Select Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress is hereby continued and authorized to sit during the coming recess of Congress, and that the necessary expenses shall be paid from the appropriation for special and select committees.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Had that better not go over until to-morrow? I did not fully understand the import of the resolution from the reading.

Mr. VOORHEES. I can explain it to the Senator in a single moment. A great deal of work has been done by experts employed by the Government. That is in the committee-room and necessary to be taken care of. Also, it is deemed important for the committee to meet and consider this subject shortly prior to the convening of the next session of Congress in order to have prompt action. There is nothing in the matter of any moment except to preserve the work which has already been done and which is the accumulation of the last ten years of labor. I hope there will be no objection to the resolution.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will there be any benefit to any one except the compensation which the clerk will draw during the recess?

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not know that it will be that to him.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I think the resolution had better go over until to-morrow.

Mr. VOORHEES. If the Senator insists upon the resolution going over until to-morrow, of course he has the right to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over.

Mr. VOORHEES subsequently said: The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] withdraws his objection to my request.

Mr. VAN WYCK. At the suggestion of the Senator from Indiana I withdraw my objection to the resolution.

Mr. VOORHEES. I hope the resolution which I reported from the Committee on Accommodations for the Library may be acted upon. The Senator from Nebraska very kindly withdraws his objection.

Mr. VAN WYCK. On the suggestion that it will probably have a tendency to keep the Senator from Indiana out of the Indiana canvass, I withdraw the objection. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

TENTH CENSUS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 2151) to provide for the publication of the Tenth Census, and if that bill is taken up I will give way to morning business.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should be glad to have the call of reports of committees now.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will give way to morning business if that is taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island moves to take up the bill for printing the Tenth Census, saying that he will give way to morning business after he gets it up. Is there objection?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yesterday morning the same thing occurred, and debate ran on for an hour or two, and then the bill had to be laid aside. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] gave notice that he would call up the naval appropriation bill this morning. I hope the business of the morning hour will be proceeded with and that we shall then take up that bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is very important that the census bill should be passed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then let it come up after the morning business is over. I object until the morning business is concluded.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the Senator from West Virginia objects, I have nothing to say.

Mr. HOAR. May I be indulged with reference to the matter which is passing away, simply for a moment? I desire to inquire of the Senator from Rhode Island if I understood him correctly that he waived his present request to take up the census bill?

Mr. ANTHONY. It is objected to, and I cannot have it taken up now. I do not waive it.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment which I offered to that bill may be printed as modified. I modified it after it was printed. There have been several modifications.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, that order will be made. Reports of standing and select committees are in order.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SEWELL. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2113) to correct the record of William S. Johnson, to report it adversely. I ask that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. MAXEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1267) to correct the Army record of certain officers named therein, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CAMDEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1103) granting a pension to Margaret Kearns, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 261) granting a pension to Phebe W. Ross, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 145) to pay Frank L. Donnelly, as page to the Forty-fifth Congress, to report it without amendment, and to submit a report in writing thereon.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that matter has already been provided for in the deficiency bill.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Let the joint resolution go on the Calendar.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to its going on the Calendar. I merely wanted to call attention to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar, and the report will be printed under the rule.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1722) for the relief of E. Remington & Sons, reported it with amendments; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CHILCOTT. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 703) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Ryan, to report it adversely, and I ask that it be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to report an amendment to the sundry civil bill to pay the expenses of the removal to this country of the bodies of Captain De Long and his companions. I ask that the amendment be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Appropriations without printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be referred without printing.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2014) authorizing compensation to members of Company B, Fourteenth Infantry, United States Army, for certain private property destroyed by fire, reported it with an amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONGER. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report with a favorable recommendation an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill, and I move its reference to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FRYE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2165) permitting the use of domestic materials in the construction of steam and sail vessels for foreign account; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Finance to the bill and to the sections which I desire corrected. Sections 3019 and 3020 of the Revised Statutes are as follows:

SEC. 3019. There shall be allowed on all articles wholly manufactured of materials imported, on which duties have been paid when exported, a drawback equal in amount to the duty paid on such materials, and no more, to be ascertained under such regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. Ten per cent. on the amount of all drawbacks so allowed shall, however, be retained for the use of the United States by the collectors paying such drawbacks respectively.

SEC. 3020. Where fire-arms, scales, balances, shovels, spades, axes, hatchets, hammers, plows, cultivators, mowing-machines, and reapers, manufactured with stocks or handles made of wood grown in the United States, are exported for benefit of drawback under the preceding section, such articles shall be entitled to such drawback in all cases when the imported material exceeds one-half of the value of the material used.

Section 3020 of the statutes has been extended by name to several other manufactures since the time it became a law.

In relation to a ship built for the foreign market, if there is a single plank of domestic manufacture put into that ship the builder cannot recover one cent of drawback under the ruling of the Secretary of the Treasury, which ruling is entirely correct.

The bill which I have introduced provides that where domestic and imported articles enter into the construction of a ship built for the foreign market the builder shall receive drawbacks of the amount of duty less 10 per cent., precisely as he would if he was making a mowing machine.

The building of ships for the foreign market is increasing wonderfully. I call the attention of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] who is a member of the Finance Committee, to the fact that the State of Delaware to-day is building more ships for the foreign market probably than all the rest of the States in the Union; that one single concern there has built one hundred steamships at least for the South American rivers, as they prefer our steamships there, and that the only difficulty about building comes from the statute which prevents any drawback being allowed for imported materials that go into a vessel unless all the materials making up the vessel are imported.

Mr. BAYARD. I think also there is an error in that statute. In 1870 Congress agreed to allow certain components of ships to be withdrawn free from duty. That undoubtedly they intended. It was expressly so stated by the honorable Senator's predecessor, Mr. Hamlin, and I know that I co-operated with him on the floor to obtain such a law. It was expressly intended to encourage American ship-building, but the Department put upon it such a construction that where the ship was built in this country by American mechanics with American money but for foreign account the drawback would not apply. It was virtually a defeat of one of the large objects for which the law was framed, not simply that we were to have the profit to our ship-building but it was to keep up the skill, which cannot be improvised in a year or a day.

Mr. FRYE. I will say to the Senator that I was the father of that bill in the House, and was greatly disappointed that it did not do what it was expected to. I hope the Senator will now as a member of the Finance Committee have the attention of that committee called very early to this bill.

Mr. BAYARD. I have in my desk an amendment which I propose to offer to the pending tariff bill extending the provisions of sections 2513 and 2514 to ships built in the United States for foreign account. That, I think, is the thing that is needed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SEWELL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2166) for the relief of Rebecca Burdall; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, it was Ordered, That D. J. Powers have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers relating to his claim, no adverse report having been made thereon.

METHYLATED ALCOHOL.

Mr. BAYARD submitted the following resolution, which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to ascertain and report to the Senate at the first day of the next session under what regulations methylated alcohol is prepared and sold, duty free, in Great Britain, and whether a system based upon similar regulations cannot be adopted in the United States in order to supply manufacturing chemists and others with methylated alcohol free of tax.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask that the resolution be passed at once. It is a mere matter of inquiry. I believe that article will open up to our people new branches of trade and I think it will be a great relief to the manufacturing chemists of the country.

The system which prevails in England of adding about 10 per cent. of what they call wood alcohol, or alcohol distilled from pyro-ligneous acid, completely destroys the use of the alcohol as a beverage, and yet leaves it with all its faculties for use in manufacturing. That has been the law in England for many years, and I should be glad to know whether it can become, under proper regulations, the law in this country. I think it would be of great advantage to our business and manufacturing interests.

Mr. MORRILL. There can be no objection to the resolution, but I believe the Senator will find that alcohol which has been methylated is so injured that it can be used only in a very few cases, and that it changes the odor of it and makes it offensive.

Mr. BAYARD. Does the Senator object to the Secretary making the inquiry and giving us the information?

Mr. MORRILL. Not at all; I am in favor of it.

Mr. BAYARD. I hope the resolution will be agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

TARIFF COMMISSION.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I offer a resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration, as I presume it will provoke no opposition and no discussion.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas the tariff commission, from its headquarters at Long Branch, on two occasions has impudently appealed to the public for information and no response been made thereto;

Whereas, after inviting into its presence manufacturers, importers, and traders, it is now wrestling with the serious question whether the gentlemen so invited can relate their experiences and explain their theories except first having an oath duly administered to tell the truth, evidently with the laudable desire to protect itself from imposition; Therefore,

Resolved, That the Attorney-General (as soon as in his judgment he can prudently withdraw his personal attention from star-route prosecutions, and shall have fully satisfied the President and his Cabinet that members of Congress are not officers of the Government, and as to the legality of political assessments) be directed to proceed to Long Branch to aid the said commission in determining the above important question, and other problems of equally grave import as they shall arise from time to time, and that he shall advise what to him may seem proper to protect the said commission from imposition by men wise in matters of trade and revenue, either by stringent oaths or pains and penalties.

Mr. LOGAN. I object to that.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I am surprised at the Senator.

Mr. LOGAN. I object to it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I shall call up the resolution at the first opportunity. I think if the commission cannot proceed with the tariff we certainly ought to make the way for them.

Mr. LOGAN. I object to debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask that the resolution lie over, and I shall call it up at the first opportunity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed, and it goes over.

AMERICAN SHIPPING.

Mr. CALL submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Resolved, That a special committee of the Senate, to be composed of seven Senators, be appointed by the President of the Senate to consider the subject of the measures expedient to be adopted for the revival of American shipping, with authority to sit during the recess and to report at the next session of Congress.

JOHN W. HUMPHREY.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. No. 327) for the relief of John W. Humphrey. It will not take more than a single moment; and it is the first request of the kind I have made at this session.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the proper accounting officer of the Treasury to pay to John W. Humphrey, of Iowa, $1,260, for board and transportation of recruits for the Army in the year 1862.

Mr. ALLISON. This is a unanimous report of the Committee on Claims, and the bill has passed the House.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish only to say that it is a remarkable instance of paying for recruiting service in 1862, when over $55,000,000 were appropriated and placed in the hands of the United States officers all over the country to pay those expenses.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a most remarkable case.

Mr. COCKRELL. The proper officers of the Government have had jurisdiction and the right to pass upon those claims ever since.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a very remarkable case, and if the Senator will listen to the report he will see how remarkable it is and why it has not been done before. It is a case of which I have personal knowledge. Does the Senator ask for the reading of the report?

Mr. COCKRELL. No, I do not ask for that.

Mr. ALLISON. I know personally that it is a just claim.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The report had better be read. Some of us do not know anything about the case.

Mr. LOGAN. How much is the amount?

Mr. ALLISON. One thousand two hundred and sixty dollars.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I called for the reading of the report before the question was put. I do not know anything about the case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, on the 17th of June:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 327) for the relief of John W. Humphrey, have examined the same, and report thereon as follows:

This bill passed the House of Representatives on the 20th day of March, 1882. It was reported favorably from the Committee on War Claims, by Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa. The following is a copy of said report, namely:

"The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 327) for the relief of John W. Humphrey, report as follows:

"This claim is for—

|--|----------|
| Use of teams from October 1, 1861, to January 2, 1862,..... | $149 00 |
| Board of 42 recruits to January 2, 1862, in Fillmore County, Minnesota, Howard and Winneshiek Counties, Iowa, and on the way to the city of Dubuque..... | 715 00 |
| Six teams transporting said recruits from New Oregon, (New Cresco,) Calmar, and Monoma to Dubuque—162 miles..... | 396 00 |

"Which amount the claimant avers he paid in cash as above from his private purse. By the affidavit of claimant and of two other witnesses it appears that the services were rendered, and forty-one recruits turned over to Captain Washington, recruiting officer of the regular Army at Dubuque; that bills were presented to Captain Washington, and that he declared himself at that time short of funds, agreed that the account was correct, that $1,260 was due, and that he would pay the amount as soon as he could draw funds from the War Department.

These statements are more or less strongly corroborated by Hon. Aaron Kimball, State senator, now residing at Cresco; Captain J. Simpson, now internal-revenue collector at Dubuque; Hon. J. H. Brown, late representative from Harvard County in general assembly, Iowa, and by other prominent men in the portion of Iowa wherein the services were rendered.

"The claim was examined and believed to be correct by Hon. T. W. Burdick, late Representative in Congress from third Iowa district, and who resides near and has known claimant well for a great number of years.

"On application for information to Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON, United States Senator, he states, under date of February 21, 1882, that about the time of the rendition of the service he was aid on the staff of Governor Kirkwood, attending to the collection of recruits for the volunteer forces at Dubuque. That the claimant had from time to time brought him many recruits and thus became acquainted with Captain Washington, who also employed claimant in the same capacity for the regular Army. That at the time the forty-one recruits mentioned in the bill were brought to Dubuque, Captain Washington was short of money and that the claimant consulted him. (Colonel Allison,) and that he advised claimant to receipt the bills, leave them with the captain, and await the arrival of funds. That claimant did so. That Captain Washington was suddenly ordered to the front, and in a few weeks after was killed in battle. That his papers, including these receipted bills, have never been found. Colonel Allison became a member of Congress in 1862 or 1863, and since that time has been almost continually a member of one House or the other. He states that during this period the claimant has from time to time repeatedly applied to him to aid in collecting this claim. That he has repeatedly endeavored to secure its payment through the Departments, but without success.

"Senator ALLISON has believed, and it seems correctly, that the Court of Claims never had power to adjudicate it; and it seems no other tribunal had. In the absence of returns from Captain Washington it was thought impossible for any accounting or auditing officer to adjust and settle the claim. The claimant says that for many years he had a hope that in some way Captain Washington's papers and accounts would turn up, but they have not.

"Your committee believe the claim sufficiently sustained, and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it pass."

Your committee adopt said report, and recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. SAULSBURY. From the reading of that report I cannot vote for the bill. It may be all right, but there is not sufficient evidence in the report to satisfy me that the claim ought to be paid. There were a great many persons in the early part of the war getting up recruits, and it seems to me that these charges are of a character which would justify paying any man who went out to get up recruits for the Army, actuated perhaps by patriotic motives, and then not remembering his patriotism he comes in presenting a bill to be indemnified. I cannot, with my understanding of the case, after the lapse of twenty years, vote for the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not want to delay the bill or throw any obstacle in the way of it. We have had a great many of these claims presented to Congress for payment to individuals of sums alleged to have been paid out in feeding soldiers and passing them through the country, and in transporting and recruiting them. I have had some experience upon the Committee on Military Affairs in the investigation of some of these claims. There was one that was proved infinitely better than this claim is, and it was reported favorably at one time from the Military Committee. When it was referred to the Treasury Department, where all these accounts are kept, and which Department had perfect authority, the fullest authority, to adjudicate and pass upon and pay all these claims, and had at one time as much as $55,000,000 appropriated which they could pay out and did pay out—when this particular claim to which I allude, which had been reported favorably by the Committee on Military Affairs, was referred to the Secretary of the Treasury it was found there that they had receipts of the man for the recruiting service. This case has never been referred to the Secretary of the Treasury for information. The vouchers for half this service may be on file in the Treasury Department. I simply desire to say that I do not vote for the bill, and do not consider it any precedent hereafter when I come to consider any other case.

Mr. ALLISON. I have but a word to say with regard to this case. It is my fortune to know personally about it. Captain Washington was a recruiting officer at Dubuque, Iowa, for the regular Army. These recruits were produced by this old man, and vouchers were made out and adjudicated by Captain Washington, who was the regular Army officer who had authority to do just that thing, and these papers were left in his hands, he having no funds at the time. Within two days after that he was ordered to his regiment, which was in the service in Mississippi or Tennessee, and within thirty days was killed, and every paper he had was destroyed and lost, and his accounts remain unsettled to this day. No trace of the papers has been found anywhere, so that this poor old man had no method of bringing his claim before the War Department, the evidence all having been destroyed in the hands of Captain Washington. I know this matter personally.

Mr. MAXEY. The claimant is deprived of Captain Washington's testimony by reason of his death?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; but that is not all. There is no mode of producing the papers, because they were destroyed when Captain Washington was killed in the service.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 314) to designate, classify, and fix the salaries of persons in the railway mail service.

The amendments were, in line 3, to strike out the words "the 1st day of July, 1882," and insert "the passage of this act;" and at the end of the bill to add:

SEC. 2. That the sums appropriated in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes," approved May 4, 1882, for the compensation of railway post-office clerks, route agents, mail-route messengers, and local agents be consolidated into one fund and applied for the compensation of the clerks embraced in the five classes under the title "railway postal clerks," provided in this act.

Mr. FERRY. This bill was laid before the Senate a few days since, and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] took exception to it at the time, not understanding the bearing of the House amendments. I understand the Senator from Iowa is satisfied now that the amendments are correct and the Senator from Kansas, who is now absent from his seat, [Mr. INGALLS,] has expressed the same thing. The effect is simply to conform the existing appropriations to the present law.

The bill passed in the Senate before the 30th of June, and it is necessary now, as the Post-Office appropriation act passed prior to this bill, that it should provide for the appropriation, and as the different employes in the railway mail service are now classified under five classes, and all named postal clerks, the present amendment of the House conforms to that, and the Senate should concur.

Mr. MAXEY. I drew the bill and inserted the 1st day of July, the beginning of the current fiscal year, because I suppose the bill would pass promptly through both Houses. It did pass the Senate on the 10th of February, and I supposed it would pass both Houses before the passage of the Post-Office appropriation bill. It did not, however, pass the House until the 22d of July, and hence the expression "1st of July" has to be stricken out and "from and after the passage of the act" inserted.

The other amendment is simply to make the appropriation available to carry out the bill which passed the Senate before the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The amendments were concurred in.

TARIFF COMMISSION.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President—

Mr. LOGAN. Allow me to ask a question. At the time the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] was offered, in reference to the Attorney General's Office, &c., I objected to its consideration. I desire to extend that objection, if it is not too late, to the reception of the resolution, for the reason that it is of a character that ought not to be received by the Senate. Is it too late?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is too late now.

Mr. VAN WYCK. For what reason, sir?

Mr. BLAIR. I do not like to yield the floor for debate. I suppose the objection can be entered to the reception of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire has the floor.

LABOR STRIKES.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask unanimous consent to take up the resolution reported by the Committee on Education and Labor in reference to the investigation of the causes of labor strikes and the relations of capital and labor, to be found on page 3 of the Calendar; and I wish to say that I am a little afraid my friend from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] who I see is on his feet, is half disposed to raise some sort of objection. This question was debated before reference to the committee, and I have no idea it will consume any length of time now. The Senate was in considerable haste at the time the report was made and did not consider it.

I have in private conference with those who have charge of the business of the Senate which has the right of way, solicited them to permit the resolution to be brought up. The session is wearing away and I think that the resolution will occasion no debate, and it ought to be disposed of. I ask unanimous consent that it be taken up for that purpose at this time.

Mr. HALE. I must object.

Mr. BLAIR. Then I move to lay aside the pending and all other orders for the purpose of proceeding with this resolution.

Mr. HALE. I hope that will not be done, because I wish to make that motion in order to take up the naval appropriation bill. If this is voted down I wish to make that motion.

Mr. HOAR. What is the pending order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending order is the consideration of the Calendar under the Anthony rule.

Mr. HOAR. I do not understand that any Senator gets any advantage in regard to taking up his matter under the usages of the Senate by being the person who moves to lay aside the pending order. That motion is to be made by itself, I suppose. The entire Senate may concur in that. Then the question will be between the two measures.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves to lay aside the pending order, which is proceedings under the Anthony rule, with a view to taking up a certain resolution.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to laying aside the pending order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to laying aside the pending order, which is proceedings under the Anthony rule? The Chair hears none; and it is laid aside. Now the Senator from New Hampshire moves to take up the resolution indicated by him.

Mr. HALE. Is it in order to substitute for that the naval appropriation bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not in order.

Mr. HALE. Then if this motion is voted down, I give notice that I shall make that motion next.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to say that that will be likely to lead to considerable debate as between the Senator who has just taken his seat and the Senator who has charge of the revenue bill. This measure to which I ask the attention of the Senate can probably be disposed of in five minutes. I see the mover of the resolution [Mr. MORGAN] which was referred to our committee, and if I am incorrect in my effort to give to the Senate the impression that this will take little time, I should be glad to be corrected by him. If any Senator thinks this likely to provoke much discussion, I will not press the motion on the Senate now; but I do think it can be disposed of in ten minutes.

Mr. HALE. If we are to consider the appropriation bill we must vote down everything else.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to proceed to the consideration of the resolution stated by him.

Mr. BLAIR. It is a resolution for an investigation into the causes of strikes. It is a small matter which has been waiting long.

The motion was not agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HALE. I move now to take up the naval appropriation bill. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MORRILL. Before that motion is put I desire to say a word. I rise for the purpose of saying something now lest the motion made by the Senator from Maine shall prevail, and I may never have any other opportunity to say what I desire to say now, but I trust that if the motion does prevail it will not be by votes on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. President, it is right to refer to something as to the character of the revenue bill. I regret myself that it did not come here at an earlier day, but there was no delay on the part of the Committee on Finance after the bill was received from the House in reporting it, and in asking the earliest possible action on the part of the Senate. It was such a bill as ought to have received, and might have received, consideration and final action in one day. The first part of the bill proposed to repeal the stamp taxes and leave nothing of the internal revenue but the tax on circulation of banks and upon whisky, tobacco, and ale or beer.

I think the other side of the Chamber were certainly committed by the action of their associates of the other House last year in favor of this bill. They were also committed, so far as the leader on this question, the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] or the caucus, I do not know which, is concerned, as he had introduced a bill in the Senate which was referred to the Committee on Finance last year for essentially the same purpose.

Mr. President, after the bill had been reported to the Senate we found from our own side and the other side of the Chamber that the only fault found with the bill was that it did not go quite far enough, and therefore it was concluded to report a reduction upon sugar and upon Bessemer steel. All we asked was a vote of the Senate, a vote for or against the amendments, or for the bill or against it. But there arose immediately a disposition on the part of Senators on the other side of the Chamber to procrastinate the consideration of this bill by interminable amendments and by protracted debate, and it was a debate that was not exactly pertinent. When the repeal of the stamp tax upon matches was proposed, a large share of the time was consumed in discussing the propriety of the repeal of the tax upon deposits of banks, and upon bank capital, and so on; and yesterday when a proposition was before us for consideration proposing a reduction of the duties upon sugar 25 per cent., we had thrust in here the consideration of chloroform and baby-jumpers.

Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky has stated that he will not consent to an extension of time for appropriations necessary for carrying on the Government beyond the 31st day of the present month; that he will not consent to any evening session, will not consent to any five minutes' limitation of debate; and, whether in the spirit of bravado or not, he has intimated that he is ready to stay here until next December. I desire to say in reply to the suggestion of the Senator about December that I think Washington is a very pleasant place to stay, the climate this summer has been very congenial, and so far as I am concerned I am ready to stay until this bill is completed, whether it is December or January; and I think when it comes to a question of endurance there is not a man on this side of the Chamber who has not greater powers in that direction than I have myself.

But, Mr. President, I desire to call attention to something of the character of the amendments proposed. There are between thirty-five and forty of them. I do not propose to go through the whole lot, but I desire to call the attention of the Senate and of the country to the character of the amendments proposed by Senators on the other side of the Chamber.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] has an amendment proposing to reduce the duty upon Bessemer steel from $28 to $14. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] proposes to take the duty off from camphor, which is now only 5 cents per pound; and chloroform, which is $1 per pound, and yet it sells for 65 cents per pound. The duty is $1, and the article sells for 65 cents, showing conclusively that the consumer here is not taxed in proportion to the duty, but that chloroform can be obtained for two-thirds of the amount of the duties levied upon it.

Then the Senator proposes to reduce the duty one-half upon Hoffmann's anodyne and spirits of nitric ether, and upon hops. I desire to know whether the western part of the country would like to have the duty on hops repealed, and allow the hops from the Canadian Dominion to come in here with any greater privileges than they now enjoy? Then he proposes to reduce the duty upon opium, which now stands at $1 per pound, amounting to about 25 per cent. ad valorem—an article that is consumed largely by the Chinese, and an article that is very dangerous to have an increase of its consumption in any part of the country, because it induces habits that are more destructive to life and health than even alcoholic liquors.

Then the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] proposes to apply this amendment to banking associations, that the repeal of the tax upon deposits, &c., "shall not apply to any banking association that does not file in the Treasury Department a release of all interest on bonds deposited to secure circulation during the entire period of time the same shall so remain on deposit."

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] proposes to reduce the duties upon a great many articles of iron-ware, like wrought-iron nuts, iron bars, rails for railroads, boiler-iron, railway bars, &c., to seven-sixteenths of 1 cent per pound, or less than half a cent per pound.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] proposes his radical amendment in relation to ships, that when they are in whole or in part built in any foreign country they may be brought here and registered. Then the Senator from Kentucky has eleven pages of amendment on distilled spirits. I have not read it all through; I do not know whether he proposes to reduce the tax to 50 cents or 60 cents, as he has often suggested, but he certainly proposes to bring up all the questions in relation to the bonded warehouses, or for extending the time that whisky may remain in bond, for five years instead of three, and a great many other propositions.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] proposes to reduce the duties one-half upon "all vessels of cast-iron, stoves and stove-plates, cast-iron butts and hinges, and on hollow-ware, glazed or tinned;" and to reduce the duties "on dress and piece silks, and all fabrics of which silk is the component material of chief value," to 35 per cent. ad valorem, "as they were before raw silk was made dutiable." The Senator, I suppose, does not understand that raw silk is not dutiable, but is free, and has been since 1861.

There are various other amendments here. The Senator from North Carolina proposes to reduce the duties upon all manufactures of wool, knit goods, worsted yarns, &c., to 50 per cent. of the present rates. He does not propose to reduce the duty on the raw material.

The amendment of Senator BECK, offered yesterday by the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS,] I discussed yesterday as one of the most objectionable in the whole bill, and I only need to print it as offered:

That all taxes and customs duties imposed by laws now in force for the collection of duties on imports from foreign countries shall be subject to a discount of 10 per cent. after the 1st day of January, 1883, and to a discount of an additional 10 per cent. after the 1st day of January, 1884.

No manufacturing establishment could keep in active operation during the impendency of such reductions upon the whole range of the tariff.

Mr. President, it is obvious that these amendments, under the conditions that are imposed by the leader of the Democracy on the other side, are to be debated without limit. The Senator from Kentucky himself says that they must be considered in the ordinary way and with the utmost freedom, and without any limitation of debate. We have already placed in the bill a reduction of 4 cents per pound of the tax upon tobacco. We have also granted a rebate upon tobacco. We have got a provision in the bill by which this rebate shall extend not only to manufacturers but to dealers. We have also made a provision by which farmers, planters, and lumbermen may become dealers without a license so far as to sell to and furnish those in their service with tobacco in any form.

I have a letter received this morning from Commissioner Raum, who states that the number of accounts that would have to be settled would be over 400,000 in number, and he conceives it almost impossible that that duty devolved upon him and his department can be properly executed. He also gives an estimate of the amount that would have to be refunded amounting to over $2,000,000. I will preserve the letter for insertion in the RECORD:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, July 25, 1882.

SIR: In compliance with your verbal request of this date for such information and suggestions as might be of interest in regard to the amendment of the fourth section of the internal-revenue bill, which provides for the payment of a drawback or rebate to manufacturers and dealers in tobacco and cigars, I would respectfully state that there are over 400,000 manufacturers of tobacco and cigars and dealers in those articles who would, under the provisions of this law, be authorized to present claims for drawback.

From the best information I can obtain I am of opinion that there is now in the hands of dealers at least a sixty days' supply of manufactured tobacco, cigars, and cigarettes, and that claims for drawback would probably be presented as follows:

| Upon 27,000,000 pounds tobacco, at 4 cents per pound..... | $1,080,000 |
| Upon 445,000,000 of cigars, at $2 per thousand..... | 890,000 |
| Upon 94,500,000 cigarettes, at $1 per thousand..... | 94,500 |
| Total..... | 2,064,500 |

It is obvious, from the number of claims that would probably be made, that it would be utterly impossible for the inventories of tax-paid tobacco in the hands of claimants to be verified by the officers of the Government on the day the law reducing the tax goes into effect, so that it would be necessary to accept other proof than the certificate of an officer of the validity of a claim. In view of this fact, I would respectfully submit whether such a provision of law will not necessarily operate as a great temptation to fraud.

Your attention is called to the fact that during the past fiscal year this office acted upon two hundred and thirty-seven refunding claims, and 2,530 abatement claims, and that three persons are employed upon that work. If the provision authorizing a rebate of taxes becomes a law, it would be necessary to make temporarily quite an addition to the working force of the refunding section of this office.

Very respectfully,

GREEN B. RAUM, Commissioner.

Hon. JUSTIN S. MORRILL, United States Senate.

We have also refused the provision for any further test than that of color in relation to sugar, by which we shall undoubtedly, as is shown wherever we have had any experience on the subject, lose at the rate of not less than $2,000,000 a year.

Mr. President, under these circumstances I ask the Senate to continue the consideration of the revenue bill until the end. I have endeavored to discharge my duty without taking up much of the time of the Senate, and I shall not take up much time hereafter, but I deemed it essential that the subject should be presented as it now stands before the Senate, and to say that in a body where we are about equally divided it may be possible for the opposition to defeat a bill of this kind in the way that has been attempted. Even any minority is capable of making a very great obstruction to the bill, but where a legislative body is equally divided, or nearly so, it is within their power to accomplish their purpose if they so determine.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I do not quite understand the object or purpose of the speech of the Senator from Vermont. It may be a funeral oration; I do not know. However, so far as it seems to reflect on any action taken by me, I desire to say to the Senator, to the Senate, and to the country, that I am now and have been willing from the beginning of the session to consider fairly and legitimately all questions connected with taxation. I believe our internal-revenue laws need revision; I believe our tariff is in great need of revision; I have missed no opportunity to press the importance of these questions upon the Committee on Finance and upon the Senate; perhaps I have the misfortune to press these matters "out of season as well as in season."

When this little bill came from the House it was so insignificant that I confess I had a contempt for it. I endeavored in the Committee to amend it by offering most of the amendments which the Senator has now read, legitimate amendments, proposing a reduction of the tobacco tax and giving other privileges to the producers of the country. I was voted down in committee, of course, by the majority led by the Senator from Vermont, and his little bill was brought before the Senate on the 6th day of July, confining itself simply to bank taxation, matches, and proprietary medicines. That bill was denounced by all intelligent men of all parties in the country as a thing utterly unworthy of the American Congress, and coming here too from the House of Representatives after they had passed a resolution to adjourn on the 10th of July, which was lying on our table when their bill came.

The Republican caucus saw what a miserable abortion it was; it met and ordered that committee to take that bill off the Calendar and add to it a reduction of the duty on sugar and on other things, and the chairman of the committee came in next morning after the caucus gave its order and took the bill back to his committee and reported it the next minute in accordance with the caucus order. Then his bill for the first time assumed decent proportions and was of course open to fair amendments. On the amendment that I offered for the reduction of the tobacco tax to 12 cents a pound the Senate agreed with me. I offered another amendment to give the producers of tobacco in the remote parts of the country the right to sell to the extent of $100 the product they were raising. That raised a great hue and cry from the manufacturers, but it will save hundreds and thousands of people from persecution in the courts of the United States and will not injure the revenue one dollar, and it never did from 1864 to 1872, when these gentlemen saw fit to deny the producers that right, a right that they have, as I contend, to sell the products they raise on their own farms and gardens. The Senate agreed with me in that.

When we came to the tariff provisions I offered an amendment to reduce the duty on Bessemer steel from $28 to $14 a ton, and it ought to be reduced. There are 110,000 miles of railroad in this country, the cost of which is paid by the producers and travelers of the country, and I have a right to have their transportation cheapened as against the exactions of monopoly. Dare he say in this presence that my amendment is wrong? He dare not say it to the Senate.

I have offered amendments seeking to reduce all tariff taxation down to an average of 50 per cent. ad valorem. Is not that a legitimate amendment? Who will venture to say that 50 per cent. bonus to any manufacturer is not as much as he can decently ask? A business that cannot live when it takes 50 per cent. out of the pockets of the consumers of the products of the country ought not to live at all, and the 52,000,000 people in this country ought not to pay more than 50 per cent. on what their goods are worth or what they can buy them for elsewhere, even to enrich a few men in the neighborhood of the Senator from Vermont.

I submitted another amendment, which is now pending, offered by the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS,] substantially to take off 10 per cent. on the 1st day of January, 1883, and another 10 per cent. a year from then. Is not that a legitimate amendment? These gentlemen themselves had taken off 10 per cent. in 1872, because the internal-revenue taxes had been removed; it was restored in 1875 under the false pretense of needing the increase in order to protect the sinking fund. Now, these distinguished gentlemen seek to remove the tax they imposed in 1875 on sugar and leave the 10 per cent. imposed in 1875 still standing on all the other classes of goods. My amendment seeks to relieve the country from this taxation and substantially to repeal the act of 1875, as well in regard to cottons and woolsens and other things as on sugars.

The only other amendment I offered is one to give every man engaged in the commerce of the country a right to buy his ships just as he can buy his wagons, or as these gentlemen buy their cotton and woolen machinery, in any part of the world. I only seek to open our markets so that our people can trade on fair terms with all the world. That is all I have done.

The Senator from Vermont complains because I say I will not allow debate to be choked off. I repeat, notwithstanding his fling, I will not consent to a five-minute rule in debate upon a great question like my 50 per cent. proposition ad valorem on all the goods imported into the country, or upon the question whether men shall have a right to buy their ships where they please. Because I will not, in short, get down on my knees and cringe in obedience to the orders of the Finance Committee, who seem to cling to their own little contemptible bill, which was only made respectable when altered under the orders of the Republican caucus, and even now continue to insist that only one thing, sugar, of all on the tariff list, shall be considered, unless it be to double the tax on cotton-ties, and I am to be cut off from the right to debate these propositions, and from the right to offer amendments, because forsooth the Senator from Vermont considers himself and his committee as the masters of the Senate, and that anybody who dares to vote for anything the Senator does not want is in contempt of court.

I do propose to vote with him for the bill when properly amended. Let him call it up whenever the appropriation bills are passed; let amendments be offered; have them fairly discussed before the Senate, and if the Senate votes me down I shall acquiesce; and if the Senate vote him down, as I think they will, indeed as I think he knows they will, because they have, he cannot make a pretense of abandoning his bill now under coercion or by factious delay, and preaching a funeral sermon over it for fear we shall beat him, and then say we would not give him fair play. He shall have fair play if it takes until December to give it to him.

There is no bravado about any remark made by me, no taunt about it. I want to get away from here as much as anybody, yet I am willing to stay as long as anybody. I will not consume any more time than I think necessary, and I will consume all the time I think necessary to make the country understand the meaning and importance of the amendments I offer.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I had intended before this debate closed to say some things which I will not now say, as I feel that this bill is in its dying throes. But before it passes to its doom I desire, in all candor and kindness, to make a few observations.

The Senator from Vermont yesterday made a suggestion as if he thought the members of the Committee on Finance on this side of the Chamber had in some way deserted the committee on matters that had been agreed to or acquiesced in by them in the committee. I think the Senator will do me the justice to bear witness that from the first moment this bill came under consideration in the committee I pointed out the very difficulties which have assailed it at every step since. I pointed out the fact, first, that it came here at a late and unseasonable hour to commence so great a work as the revision of taxation; second, I pointed out that it was partial in its provisions, that it was not general, it was special, and proposed to treat of a few points belonging to a large field of legislation. I insisted in committee that it would open a wide range of subjects, a wide range of amendments, a wide range of discussion, just as has taken place, and I then predicted that if it was held before the Senate until it was completed and passed we should be here until the middle of August. I hope this last calamity is about to pass from us.

Now, Mr. President, a single word upon some points proposed in connection with this bill. I have not thought it necessary to stand here and declaim at length in behalf of tariff reform, for I have understood the necessity of that to be conceded by everybody. I have understood it to be conceded that this tariff, enacted twenty years ago, in the midst of the war, did not apply harmoniously and properly to the interests of the country at this time. I understand that to be conceded by its distinguished author himself, the Senator from Vermont, that there is an urgent and imperative necessity for reform; that the country and its interests have grown away, far away, from the conditions which justified or seemed to justify this legislation at the time it took place.

While not claiming to be as intelligent in regard to the details of tariff legislation as many other Senators, yet I have not the slightest doubt that there are enormous inequalities and injustices covered up and protected by the present tariff legislation. It needs the hand of reform applied liberally and vigorously. I have no doubt of that. And when that work of reform takes place, so far as I am concerned, I want it to be well understood and to embrace every interest.

Why, sir, the tariff question is more one of business than of politics. There is more of business in it than of party politics. The question is how to harmonize this system of taxation, touching one thing here and another there, so as to make an entire system of justice. I must say with perfect frankness and with regret, for there is no Senator whose sagacity I respect more highly than that of the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS,] that I cannot vote for his amendment offered yesterday, though indorsed to-day by the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.] An indiscriminate reduction of 10 per cent. at one time, to be followed by an indiscriminate reduction of 10 per cent. at another, applied to everything alike, is not the kind of reform that I look forward to.

I do not know, nor do my associates on this side of the Chamber or on the other side, whether 10 per cent. reduction next January would affect justly and equally all the interests in my State or in yours. The duties on some articles ought to be reduced more than that, and there are articles manufactured in Indiana that ought to bear no reduction at all. There are over one thousand dutiable articles in our tariff list, nearly eleven hundred enumerated. I do not think it is wise, intelligent legislation to make a horizontal scale over all articles. You cannot treat everything alike. Those articles that need more reduction than 10 per cent. ought to have that reduction; those that ought to have less should be treated accordingly, and those that ought to have none ought to be let alone. Anybody can see at a glance that the only way to reach an intelligent treatment of this subject is to take up the whole question in detail and determine what is right as to one article by its relation to another. The failure to do this is the fault of the bill before the Senate.

I am going to deal in no acrimonious remarks about this bill now; I have said all I desire to say in that line of remark; but I do regard it, speaking with perfect respect for the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Finance and for the Senator from Ohio, as a mistake to take up a few articles and propose to deal with them and let the whole field of reform lie uncultivated. I say to the Senate here that when the time comes and the conditions are ripe and the subject is in a shape to be considered item by item in a business way in detail, I shall vote most probably for the repeal of every item of internal-revenue taxation except that which is laid upon spirituous liquors and tobacco. With all my supposed hostility to the banks I will go that far.

I have no hostility to banks; I think injustice was done to the banks by singling them out and putting them in the foreground and asking for more relief in their behalf than for all other interests embraced in this bill; but when the whole field of tariff reform comes before this body, as far as my judgment is formed now, I shall vote for the repeal of all internal-revenue taxation with the exception of that which rests in some moderate amounts upon spirituous liquors and tobacco. These articles can well bear a tax; they are not necessities of life, nor do I think they are luxuries. They are those things which men can take or let alone; and if they please to use them they can pay the taxes; if they choose to let them alone that is their right. I think they are sources of revenue that we can well afford to draw something from, thus relieving us of the necessity of raising so much revenue from tariff taxation as might work an injustice to many important interests. But, Mr. President, as long as our national debt and our expenses are as they are, as long as we have to raise over $200,000,000 by tariff taxation, I, for one, am ready for no wild experiments upon this, that, or the other edge or corner of this great subject; I want the whole range of the interests affected before me, so that we can consider them fairly and properly in their relations to each other.

So far as the political aspects of this question are concerned, they do not trouble me in the least; so far as its effect on me personally is concerned, I am indifferent; and so far as any assaults that may be or have been made, they pass me as the idle wind. I am willing to be judged by the people who sent me here as to my conduct and my motives, and if upon the record which I make I am to retire from public life I shall do so cheerfully and contentedly. On the contrary, however, I will say to you, Mr. President, and to the Senate, that the common-sense, the conservative thought of this country of both parties, in my opinion, is that while we have to collect so large a revenue the tariff will continue to be the principal method, and that the necessary, incidental, and ever-continuing feature of protection connected therewith should be so adjusted as to do the people of all sections and parties the most good possible. That is all, Mr. President, that I desire to say.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, as the naval bill may take the place of the internal-revenue bill, I believe, in justice to myself and in justice to a majority of the Senate who voted against the legalizing of the polariscope yesterday, that I should make good the assertion I made yesterday in reply to the Senator from Ohio, that I could show that his figures and claims for the polariscope were delusive. The Senator from Ohio yesterday in the latter part of the day used this language:

In 1878 we paid from the Treasury of the United States in the way of drawback on sugars exported $2,330,083; in 1879 we paid from the Treasury as drawback on sugars $3,336,297. In the latter part of June, 1879, the Treasury order took effect, which the Supreme Court has set aside. That order was to apply the polariscope test to sugars imported, so as to levy the duty on the saccharine strength. The next year, under the effect of that order, the drawbacks fell off to $913,660, and so the Government saved over $2,000,000, not on articles consumed in this country but on articles exported, brought in simply for refining and exported, for the drawback only applies to those. Last year, that order being still in force, the amount of drawback was only $758,048, showing that the effect of the order was to save to the Treasury of the United States in drawbacks to refiners over $2,000,000 a year.

In other words, the polariscope alone in the drawbacks paid by the United States Government on the exportations of sugar under the law, saved the United States over $2,000,000 in 1880, and more in 1881. Now, Mr. President, if the exportations were the same in 1880 that they were in 1879 and in 1878, if they were the same in 1881 that they were in 1878 and 1879, then I admit that the statement of the Senator would not be delusive, but it would be true that the $2,000,000 had been saved by the polariscope.

But what are the facts? The facts are that the exportation of sugar in 1878 was about, in round numbers, $5,000,000; in 1879, $7,000,000 and a little over; in 1880, $3,300,000; in 1881, two million six hundred and seventy-three thousand and odd dollars. So, if the polariscope did that, then the polariscope reduced the sugar exportation of the United States from $7,000,000 to two and a half million in round numbers. If the polariscope did that, the polariscope was working in direct opposition to the spirit of the law which provided the drawback for the very purpose of encouraging exportations.

But, Mr. President, I assert—and it is not in the power of man to contradict me in the assertion—that the polariscope did not do it, that the statements made by the Senator from Ohio are utterly delusive, and I say that he had the tables before him when he made the statement by which the delusion might have been shown. What is the fact? The polariscope order took effect in June, 1879. The Canadian tariff which I hold in my hand was assented to in May, 1879, and took effect at the same time that the order legalizing the polariscope did. Now, no man, not even the Senator from Ohio, will claim for a moment that even though the fraud extended over the two degrees of 7° and 10°, and no one claims that it ever went over 13°, that made a difference of more than one-half a cent a pound, because the difference between 7 and 13 is one-half cent, from 7 to 10 one-fourth of a cent, and from 10 to 13 one-fourth of a cent. Now, what is the Canadian tariff on this very sugar?

Sugar above No. 14 Dutch standard in color, one cent per pound and 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Sugar equal to No. 9 and not above No. 14 Dutch standard, three-fourths of a cent per pound and 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Sugar below No. 9 Dutch standard, half a cent per pound and 30 per cent. ad valorem.

I assert, and the Senator will not contradict it, that nine-tenths of all the exportations of refined sugar from the United States were to Canada. I assert that with our skilled workmen and our machinery we had stopped the refiners of Canada from working at all.

Mr. SHERMAN. Repeat the statement. How much do you say was imposed by Canada?

Mr. FRYE. I said nine-tenths of the importations of refined sugar went to Canada.

Mr. SHERMAN. Do you say that from the official documents?

Mr. FRYE. Only from a casual glance I had of the statement I saw in the Senator's hands yesterday when he made the statement that the polariscope saved $2,000,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. I simply wanted to ascertain the statement of the Senator.

Mr. FRYE. What does the Senator say the proportion of Canada was?

Mr. SHERMAN. About two-fifths.

Mr. FRYE. That Canada took only two-fifths of all the foreign exportations of the United States of refined sugar?

Mr. SHERMAN. Of sugar. Here it is drawn from official statements; let me give the facts because there should be no controversy between the Senator and me about them. Here is the official statement. In 1879 the quantity of refined sugar imported was 116,862,583 pounds. All that went to the Dominion of Canada, including all the provinces, was 53,717,659 pounds, and to other countries than the Dominion of Canada there went 63,144,924 pounds. About two-fifths went to Canada.

Mr. FRYE. So that Canada got nearly one-half.

Mr. SHERMAN. Nearly one-half; but that is not nine-tenths. Now let me go a little further. In 1880, the next year, the exportation, after the polariscope order was adopted, fell to 29,000,000 pounds, of which only 731,000 pounds went to Canada, and 28,000,000 pounds and more to other countries. So that to other countries the falling off was considerably more than one-half.

Mr. FRYE. And how much was the falling off to Canada the next year?

Mr. SHERMAN. The great body of it no doubt was caused by the tax.

Mr. FRYE. Just exactly as I say. The only mistake is that the proportion that was exported to foreign countries that I gave was too large for Canada. It was—I will take the Senator's figures—nearly one-half to Canada; but nearly nine-tenths of the falling off of the exportations in 1880 and 1881 was in the exportations to Canada.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator has the figures there. How much?

Mr. HALE. I rise to a point of order. I do not wish to interrupt my colleague, but I may as well make the point of order upon him as he is my colleague.

Mr. FRYE. Let me just add one statement and then make the point of order.

Mr. HALE. I do not want this day consumed by a tariff discussion when I believe the Senate wants to go on to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair the Senator from Vermont was out of order, and so have been all the other Senators who have spoken since him; but the Chair did not raise the point of order himself, and nobody else did. The Senator from Vermont discussed the general question and so did the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Indiana. The Senator's colleague is of course out of order, but the Chair had no intention of applying the rule to him.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope I shall be allowed to make one observation about this matter. The Senator from Vermont has made an appeal—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate on the merits is not in order on a motion to take up.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Vermont has made an attack on this side of the Chamber, and also on some individuals on this side of the Chamber for having offered amendments here which he considers to be irrelevant, if not frivolous, and with having sought to embarrass the action of the Senate and protract the session in this way. Now, I hope no point of order will be made on us until we have had some opportunity to explain our intentions, motives, and purpose in bringing forward the proposed amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will not make any point himself.

Mr. MORGAN. I was speaking to the other side.

Mr. FRYE. I only want a minute more. I want to correct my figures. I said nearly one-half the exportations of sugar were to Canada. I said that nearly all the reduction of exportations was to Canada. I say that that was caused by the 1 per cent. a pound on sugar and 35 per cent. ad valorem imposed by the Canadian tariff and not by the polariscope, as the Senator said. I say that the Senator's statement when he had the statement in regard to exportations before him was delusive, and it was calculated to mislead the Senate when it was made here, claiming for the polariscope all the credit of those reductions, and that the United States Treasury was making $2,000,000, when he knew that the exportations themselves had fallen down in proportion to what he calls the saving to the Treasury.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will occupy but a moment in reply. I have already corrected the error of the Senator in regard to the statement of fact, but he says that the falling off of the exportation to the Dominion of Canada was much larger than it was to other countries. So it was. No doubt it was caused partly by the changed tariff of Canada.

Mr. FRYE. Then why did not the Senator yesterday say so, instead of claiming the whole saving for the polariscope?

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not know anything about the Canadian tax until the Senator himself told me.

Mr. FRYE. That only shows how mistaken the Senator's figures may be.

Mr. SHERMAN. On the contrary, it only shows that I was not familiar with the Canadian tariff, as the Senator from Maine is; I did not recall the effect of that tax, but here is the argument still, that suddenly, by the application of the polariscope, this large exportation of sugar fell off not only to Canada but to other countries, and it fell off more than one-half to all the other countries. What is the argument derived from that? It is that we had been paying a bounty to the refiners, a large bounty in excess of the amount of tax they had paid, and as a matter of course this business of refining ran up to any extent, but the application of the polariscope largely increased the duties received. The Senator says it could not be so much, it only amounted to one-third of a cent. A mill a pound on the sugar imported into this country makes the enormous sum of $1,700,000.

Mr. FRYE. I was talking about sugars exported, and so was the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was talking about both.

Mr. FRYE. No; the Senator's figures show it was the exportation alone.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was talking about the other too. This fraud in the importation of sugar, caused by the adulteration of sugar by making it black, applies to the whole importation of the country of 1,700,000,000 pounds. When I spoke of the drawback, I only spoke of the drawback on the amount exported, which was $76,000,000 worth, and I stated it correctly; and, sir, the drawback that was paid out of the Treasury in solid money, in gold, in 1879, was over $3,000,000 paid to refiners for refining foreign sugar exported to foreign countries, not alone to Canada, for only two-fifths of it went to Canada, and the rest to England, France, and other countries.

Indeed, under the operation of the frauds upon the importation, we were paying for sugar exported to France, and to England, and to other countries, so that there was an increased bounty paid by the Government, caused by this fraud as I call it still, this discoloration of sugar. We collected less on the importation than we paid out as drawback, caused a fraud on the Treasury, by about $2,000,000. The amount fell off from $3,365,000 to $913,000, or about $2,400,000, of which probably that which went to Canada, which fell off mainly on account of the duty levied by Canada, was perhaps a million dollars, so that at least $1,400,000 of excess of drawback was paid on account of this importation of sugar.

Mr. HALE. I hope we may have a vote on my motion.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I do not expect to discuss at all the little bill with its numerous amendments except for a short time on two points. Upon these points I desire to place my views on record as concisely as I can put them.

I had intended to say something with respect to the merits, or, more accurately, the demerits, of this bill, but it is apparent to my mind that there is a breaking up of the camp preparatory to a retreat, and I simply propose now to place upon record some facts in respect to two amendments which are quite important to the people of the State I in part represent.

The bill itself, as it came from the House, affords, as I believe, no relief to the great army of overburdened tax-payers. It is a delusion in those who think so, but I shall not now further refer to that, because, for the reason stated, I do not think it necessary.

One section of the bill proposes a reduction of the duty on Bessemer-steel rails from $28 to $20 per ton. That affects very largely the State of Texas, which, beginning in 1865 with 331 miles of railway, went up on the last day of December, 1881, to over 5,000 miles of completed and equipped railroad, and we have since increased that 700 miles up to the present time, and a large portion of these roads is laid with the Bessemer-steel rail. We are, therefore, directly and immediately and largely interested in that question, because the cheaper the roads are built the cheaper is transportation.

In reply to the strictures made by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] the other day upon the excessive tariff on Bessemer-steel rails the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] said that notwithstanding this tax of $28 on Bessemer-steel rails they were imported. I want to address myself a moment to that, so far as the interest of my State is concerned, and I can explain it, I think, conclusively and satisfactorily to any one.

I have just stated the amazing increase in the mileage of railroads in Texas. You will find a very accurate statement prepared at my request under the auspices of the cotton exchange at Galveston, in the annual report of the Chief of Engineers, in volume 2, page 1331, from which it appears that for the year ending December 31, 1879, iron and steel rails and fastenings to the extent of $340,000 were imported into the port of Galveston, and for the year ending December 31, 1880, there were imported $3,776,916, an extraordinary increase of over 1,000 per cent., and you will find that the percentage of increase for the year 1880 over that of 1879 of importation of iron and steel rails is very much greater than the percentage of increase of importation of any other article.

Why was it? Was it because the importers believed that $28 per ton was a just and reasonable tariff? Let us see the reason. There are some eight Bessemer-steel factories in the United States. Every one of those factories, as I am informed, was crowded with orders beyond what they could fill for months. The State of Texas gave to every company which completed and equipped a mile of railroad 10,240 acres of land per mile. The amount of land which belonged to the State and which went to these railroad companies was rapidly becoming absorbed in the building of the roads. Hence to secure the land those companies which could not get orders filled at the mills in this country found it to their interest to get rails by speedy importation from Liverpool.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MAXEY. I hope the Senator will allow me to finish what I have to say.

Mr. HOAR. It is precisely with reference to that. If the Senator declines I shall raise the point of order.

Mr. MAXEY. A number of these railroads had their orders in the mills.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order. What has become of the point of order raised by the Senator from Maine? If the Senator from Texas, whom I would not interfere with—

Mr. MAXEY. If the Senator from Massachusetts wishes to cut off what I am saying after his own side have presented their views he can raise his point.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator had permitted me to put my question to him I would not have raised the point. If the Senator is going into this question at any length it will be my duty to reply at length, and in exercising that duty I shall be subject to a point of order on the part of any Senator. Now, if the Senator merely desires to make a brief statement I do not wish to object, and I rose to inquire whether he was going into a lengthy discussion.

I am myself notified by a Senator who sits near me that when I come to reply he will make the point of order on me. Therefore if the Senator from Texas merely desires to make a brief statement I shall not interfere; but if he is going into the Bessemer-steel discussion I want to go into it too, and I want to go into it with unanimous consent that we both have the floor. I have the material if a reply becomes necessary. I wish to say to my friend from Texas that I mean no discourtesy to him.

Mr. MAXEY. I see that what I was stating has had some effect, and if the point of order is raised against me—

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator from Texas is replying to what has been said by the Senator from Massachusetts, and it is not right to cut him off in this way.

Mr. HOAR. When was it said? My colleague made some remarks when the bill was up before the Senate. The bill is not up now, and the Senator having it in charge has given notice or substantial notice of its abandonment. Now, the bill not being up, the Senator from Texas, out of order, makes a reply on a question which it will be my duty to discuss in response at length, if it is to be discussed at all.

I say again, that I would not for the world be guilty of any discourtesy to a Senator, for whom I have the most sincere respect, and I do not wish to interfere if he merely proposes to make a brief statement or correction; but if he is going into a full discussion of this matter, the bill not being up, every Senator will admit that it is just that I should also have the same opportunity, and that is all I stipulate for; but the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] notifies me that when I get up to reply he is going to make the point of order on me.

Mr. HALE. I insist upon the point of order now before the Chair and his ruling upon it. I see plainly that unless I do that, no matter who is up, the whole day will be consumed in discussion of a bill which is not only not before the Senate but upon which there is no motion before the Senate. The motion simply is to take up the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. MAXEY. I wish to say to the Senator from Maine that I had occupied probably two minutes during the entire discussion on this bill before I rose this morning. I think I was not over two minutes presenting the point I did yesterday evening. I stated when I began just now that I was going to put on record but two points. I must say that I do not think it is quite fair to cut me off when I have the floor.

Mr. HALE. The Senator sees that I have been notified that a reply would be made to him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The whole debate has been out of order, commencing with the Senator from Vermont. The Senator from Vermont was out of order, and every other Senator since the Senator from Vermont spoke of course has been out of order.

Mr. MAXEY. It happens that every other one has had the opportunity to speak and has been allowed by the other side to go on.

Mr. HALE. The Senator will bear in mind that I made the point of order on my colleague. I did not then renew it, but the Senator from Massachusetts renewed it upon the Senator from Texas, and then notified me that if it was not insisted upon he would consider himself bound to make a lengthy reply; and I was forced by the exigencies of the case, under a sense of decent management of the motion that I have made, to insist upon the point of order. I do not desire to interfere with anybody personally.

Mr. HOAR. Well, Mr. President, I hope, as the honorable Senator from Texas feels aggrieved, he will have unanimous consent to conclude his remarks, and I will find a proper time to make my reply hereafter if I do not get it this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. HOAR. I hope my friend from Texas will have unanimous consent to proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order being withdrawn the Senator from Texas can proceed.

Mr. MAXEY. I stated in the outset that I desired to occupy the attention of the Senate but a very few minutes, and I should have been through had not these interruptions occurred. The point I was making was, in my judgment, important. I have stated and placed on record that the amount of iron and steel rails and fastenings imported into the port of Galveston for the year ending December 31, 1879, was $340,000, and that that was increased to $3,776,916 for the year ending December 31, 1880, or over 1,000 per cent.

Now, what is the reason for it? The reason, in my judgment, is conclusive and unanswerable, so far at least as my State is concerned. The State had given 10,240 acres of land per mile to any company which would complete and equip a mile of railroad. There were but eight Bessemer-steel companies, constituting a syndicate, in the entire United States, and the orders in those mills were far beyond their power to rapidly fill. The company which had its order in first was served first. The lands of the State were becoming rapidly absorbed, and therefore it was the policy of those railroad companies which wanted to secure this land to import their steel rails from England and pay the difference between the imported ton and the ton manufactured here, whatever difference that might be, because they would make more money by securing these 10,240 acres of land per mile than the difference between the American steel and the British steel. That is the reason why they imported it there. And in my judgment the imperative necessity for steel rails to supply the immense railroad building within the last two years, far beyond the capacity of the eight Bessemer mills in this country, will account for the importation at all the ports.

Then I pass to the other point. This bill under review professes on its face to be a bill for relief and for the reduction of the taxes of the people, and it is a remarkable fact that the only people in all this country whose taxes are increased by this bill are the people whom I in part represent. You may look to the fifth section of the bill, and the increase which the people of the South pay on cotton-ties is 150 per cent. I will show that.

Hoops cut to lengths, splayed and punched, are worth per ton, free on board a vessel at Liverpool, £7 10s. 2d., equal to $36.60—that is, all charges paid, ready to come to the United States. The present duty is 35 per cent. ad valorem, which is $12.81 per ton. The amendment of the Finance Committee will make the duty 1½ cents per pound, or $33.60 per ton. The duty is now 35 per cent. ad valorem. It is proposed to be increased to 1½ cents a pound. Let us see the effect of that.

The general average of the annual cotton crop made in the South is 6,000,000 bales. Of that 6,000,000 bales the State of Texas raised a little over one-fifth, or 1,260,000 bales last year. As I have said the average crop of the South is 6,000,000 bales. Now there are six ties to each bale, and the aggregate weight of these six ties is 11½ pounds to the bale, equal to 67,500,000 pounds of iron used in baling the 6,000,000 bales of cotton, or 30,134 tons at 2,240 pounds per ton. The present tax is $12.81 per ton, equal to $386,016.54. The proposed tax of 1½ cents a pound is equal to a tax on a ton of 2,240 pounds of $33.60. The tax on 30,134 tons of iron at $33.60 is $1,012,502.40. The tax which we now pay is $386,016.54. The increase therefore by this amendment on the single item of cotton-ties to the people of the South is $626,485.86, or over 150 per cent. increase, and this is called a bill for the relief of the people!

Mr. President, that six million bales of cotton is raised by the labor of the black man as well as the white man. When you increase the expense of that over $626,000 you take out of the hard earnings of the black man as well as of the white man that much of the earnings of the sweat of his brow and put it in the pockets of the Pennsylvania ironmongers or some other iron manufacturers, and you call that just.

Those who pretend to be such friends to the laboring-man, and especially to the colored man, should bear in mind that a large portion of this cotton which I have gone over is not only produced by the colored man but belongs to him, raised either on his own land or on rented land, carried to market and sold by him, and the proceeds belong to him. And still with these struggling people trying to better their condition, more than 150 per cent. increase is made upon an article absolutely necessary to put in condition for market the products of their labor.

It was on these points and these only that I desired to make any remarks, and I am sure that gentlemen who think about it, and especially my Western Republican friends, who know all about agriculture and how hard it is to make money tilling the soil, will stand by these people and not agree to that amendment which does so heavily increase the tariff upon cotton-ties indispensable to baling cotton for market. No one industry adds more to the common wealth than cotton culture. Cotton is a necessity to millions of people. It is not just to put additional burdens on its producers, on the hard labor of men who raise it, and certainly is inequitable to tax cotton producers to build up workers in iron. We are perfectly willing to bear our just share of taxation. More than that is unjust, and this proposed increase is both unwise and unjust.

Mr. HALE. Now, Mr. President, I must insist, if any further debate is sought, upon the point of order being enforced. I do not know that any gentleman desires to discuss the question further.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to show, if I can, why the bill the Senator is urging ought to be taken up. I suppose that is in order.

Mr. HALE. The naval appropriation bill?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. Of course the Senator is a better judge of the necessity of debate upon that than I am; but I think the Senate is very ready to take it up.

Mr. MORGAN. That may be; but it ought to be taken up in order, and thoughtfully.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will not call any gentleman to order. After the Senator proceeds, if the point is made the Chair will have to pass upon it.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no discussion to make on the tariff this morning. I do not propose to consume the time of the Senate by any reference to the merits of any amendment that has been offered to that bill, or of the bill itself. I am not in the habit of departing from the line of propriety in the discussion of questions before the Senate, I believe. It does not suit the character of my mental training or my idea of justice to the public to do things of that kind.

The Senator from Vermont, I suppose, has yielded to the motion of the Senator from Maine—

Mr. MORRILL. I do not yield.

Mr. MORGAN. He does not. Then in his antagonism to the motion of the Senator from Maine he went far beyond the record, and I think he went beyond the bounds of good-fellowship and good-neighborhood in the assault that he thought proper to make on certain individuals on this side of the Chamber, and also upon the party that occupies the seats on this side. The Senator forgets that we have been now for twelve days engaged in a debate which he himself forced upon the attention of the Senate, and which he is now, according to the statements of several Senators, prepared to abandon. We have been invited into this discussion by the fact that the subject that was presented was one of very great public importance, and by the further fact that the field of discussion that was presented here has a great number of developments, each one of which is a matter of most intense interest to all the people of this country.

The bill came from the House of Representatives without anything upon it in reference to the tariff. It came back from the Committee on Finance, reported on the 6th day of July, without anything in it with reference to the tariff. Then some arrangement took place, some authentic action of the Republican party through its caucus seems to have taken place, and it became necessary that the Senator from Vermont, on the 12th day of July, should ask that the bill should be recommitted to that committee. It was so committed, and almost on the same instant of time it was reported back to the Senate with amendments that converted it into a bill to reform the tariff as well as the internal-revenue system of taxation.

Now, I wish to call attention to the fact that on the 28th of June Mr. BECK, of Kentucky, offered an amendment reducing the tariff on Bessemer steel alone. On the 28th day of June, and before this bill had been recommitted, the honorable Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB,] a Republican, and a distinguished one, offered an amendment to this bill repealing 25 per cent. of the duty on sugar, thus introducing the tariff topic into the bill. On the 1st of July Mr. JOHNSTON, of Virginia, offered an amendment touching the subject of the reduction of the tax on manufactured tobacco. Mr. JONAS, of Louisiana, offered an amendment relating to sugar on the 1st of July. On the 8th of July, and before the Committee on Finance had reported the bill back in the form that it is now being considered, Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, offered three amendments, one relating to the tax upon sugar, another relating to the tax upon steel rails, and the other to the tax on iron. So the Senator from Vermont upon his own motion introduced into the Senate these three amendments relating to the subject of the tariff, he having reported the bill to this body that originated in the House and which contained no allusions to the tariff before that time.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I must again call the attention of the Chair to my point of order and ask that the Senator from Alabama be held to the motion that is before the Senate, and that is to take up the naval appropriation bill. I have listened thus far to the Senator from Alabama to see if he is discussing anything excepting the tariff bill or the tax or revenue bill, whatever it is called, and the incidents of that discussion and the amendments offered upon that bill. I find nothing else thus far.

Mr. MORGAN. I am not discussing the tariff bill nor any amendment that has been offered.

Mr. HALE. May I ask the Senator what he is discussing?

Mr. MORGAN. I am not expressing my opinion upon that bill at all; I am discussing the fact that we have wasted enough time on this bill to have passed the naval appropriation three or four times over, and we should now proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. So I think, and that is the motion.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator may be a little inconvenienced by the facts I am bringing to his attention. As a party man, I am afraid he is.

Mr. HALE. Not in the least. I should have been very unhappy long ago if I could have been inconvenienced by the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama will confine himself to the discussion of the propriety of taking up the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. MORGAN. That is what I am doing, sir.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Chair will watch the Senator for awhile as I have been watching him.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator cannot judge of the drift of my remarks at this moment.

Mr. HALE. I cannot.

Mr. MORGAN. Because I have not told all yet that I wish to express. I say, sir, that the responsibility of all this tariff legislation upon this bill is due to the Senator from Vermont himself, who offered these amendments before the day he reported the bill back to the Senate with the tariff amendments upon it.

Mr. HALE. How does that proposition bear upon the question before the Senate of taking up the naval appropriation bill?

Mr. MORGAN. It shows that that side of the House, with the acquiescence of the gentleman in charge of the naval appropriation bill, have been remarkably indulgent to the debate on this tariff question, and to all measures proposed in respect of it, and have not in good faith urged the naval appropriation bill, and I am very much afraid the Senator is not doing it now.

Mr. HALE. The sins of the Senator from Vermont or my sins in the past have nothing to do with this question.

Mr. MORGAN. I want my friends on this side of the Chamber, some of whom seem indisposed to do it, to vote to take up the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. I think they will if the Senator will let them alone.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator is perhaps mistaken, because there are Senators on this side who want to hold him and his party to the record they have made, and to keep this bill before the Senate for discussion.

Mr. HALE. Let us settle right off now by a vote how many there are so disposed.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire—

Mr. HALE. I ask the Chair to read Rule 36.

Mr. MORGAN. I am discussing this bill in order, and I am showing that the effort that is now made and supported by a resort to questions of order and the like to get this naval appropriation bill in reach of the Senate have not been heretofore made in good faith, and I question the good faith with which they are made now; and I desire my friends on this side of the Chamber who have been assailed in the manner we have been this morning, not to allow themselves to be overcome by the censures which have been heaped upon us this morning by the Senator from Vermont and others, and will not become thereby so enraged that they will refuse to vote to take up the bill which the honorable Senator from Maine has in charge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would not call the Senator to order, because all this debate, commencing with the Senator from Vermont, has been out of order; but it is the duty of the Chair when a Senator is called to order to request him to sit down, and then not proceed without leave of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Chair please inform me in what respect I am out of order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is discussing the revenue bill, and the conduct of the Senator from Vermont in managing it, upon a motion to take up the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I said I was trying to convince my friends on this side of the Chamber, some of whom told me they would not vote to take up this bill, that it was their duty to do it, notwithstanding the thrusts that have been made at us this morning.

Mr. BUTLER. I think the remarks of the Senator from Vermont were in the nature of a funeral oration over his bill. I therefore hope that my friend from Alabama will treat them with the respect due to such an occasion. They have put out the white flag and surrendered, and I think we had better allow them to do so.

Mr. MORRILL. Gentlemen will find it a very lively funeral. I shall call the attention of the Senate to this bill as long as I have power.

Mr. MORGAN. Does the Chair rule that I have no right to proceed in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has a right to proceed in order.

The thirty-sixth rule reads:

If any Senator, in speaking or otherwise, transgress the rules of the Senate, the Presiding Officer shall, or any Senator may, call him to order; and when a Senator shall be so called to order he shall sit down, and shall not proceed without leave of the Senate, which leave, if granted, shall be upon motion that he be allowed to proceed in order; which motion shall then be in order and be determined without debate.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope there will be no objection to the Senator from Alabama going on.

Mr. HALE. In order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will take that as the unanimous consent of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Unanimous consent that the Senator proceed in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Of course.

Mr. MORGAN. Some Senators make themselves extremely officious at the expense of their dignity, Mr. President, when they attempt to take a gentleman off the floor who in good faith is trying to respond to some matters that have been said here this morning which, when published, will go to the public to misrepresent us. I claim no higher privilege than any other Senator; I do not often intrude upon the privileges of other gentlemen; but when I have a privilege here I think I should be permitted to exercise it without any Senator assuming to side-line me and say in what particular channel of thought I shall speak, what particular words I shall utter, or what particular arguments I shall adduce.

This naval appropriation bill would have been passed long ago, if it is ever to pass, and the Congress of the United States would have been ready to adjourn if the time of the Senate, which has grown so very precious at this last moment, had not been squandered and abused and frittered away in a mere effort to gain some political advantage through an experimental tinkering with the tariff. There was never any good faith in this tariff bill, as has been proved this morning; for when Senators themselves on that side of the Chamber offer amendments to it which are voted upon the bill they are made the pretext for a Senator to charge us on this side with having delayed this bill and consumed public time unnecessarily and unfairly, and the amendments which we have offered to this bill, which have reference to its merits, are germane to the subject-matter of it, to the wants and necessities of this country, are spoken of as amendments that were put in for the purpose of trifling with the country.

I was charged with having offered an amendment to the bill requiring the national banks of circulation to remit the interest upon the bonds pledged for the security of the circulation during the time that these bonds were so pledged, as a condition precedent to their receiving the benefit of this act exempting them from taxation. I proposed that amendment in the Senate and had it printed, and when the subject was under discussion to which that amendment was directed I stated that it was my purpose more to draw the attention of the banks of the country to the proposition than it was to attempt to offer it as an amendment upon this bill, and since that time I have not offered it as an amendment. I do not know now what I may do if the bill shall ever come wandering like a ghost back into the Senate after we this morning have laid it away in its burial clothes.

Another amendment which I had the honor to offer, which seemed to be a very inconsiderable thing in the estimation of some Senators, which did not even lead to a division of the Senate, was adopted, and that was the extent of my interference with the bill.

The honorable Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] yesterday made a very powerful argument against a proposition which it is understood was introduced into this bill at the suggestion of the late Secretary of the Treasury, a distinguished financier. His argument prevailed, Senators on that side and on this side voting his amendment upon the bill.

Now, if this bill is to be abandoned, who is responsible for it? The men that begot it and after that undertook to improve it by their own amendments. It will die at the hands of its own parents.

An amendment was put upon this bill reducing the tax upon tobacco from 16 to 12 cents, 4 cents relief. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONEY] who has recently found happy company and association on that side of the Chamber introduced an amendment to bring it down to 8 cents. I concurred with him. That amendment was voted down. Here then is another adventure against this bill as it came from the committee made by a Senator from that side, and yet the responsibility of this entire matter and of all the delay in its discussion and of the failure of the bill is to be charged upon this side of the Senate, when the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Kansas are the authors of the tariff amendments upon it.

Did those gentlemen suppose we intended to remain here and witness what they might do without being permitted to offer amendments to this bill ad libitum; that we should never present to the Senate anything for consideration which we thought was essential for the protection of the best interests of the people we represent? Is that the sort of arrogance which inspired the lords of the tariff to suppose that they could hold the Senate of the United States in absolute check and thralldom, and allow us to proceed just as far as they wished and no farther?

Why, sir, when the first bugle sounded for a charge upon this bill the ancient and venerable warrior-chief of the tariff hosts, the Senator from Vermont, was the man who sounded that note and led the columns. He led the charge for the reduction of the tax on sugar and for the reduction of the tariff on Bessemer steel, and for an increase of 100 per cent. in the tariff upon cotton-ties. He rode valiantly, sword in hand—

Mr. HALE. Now the Senator has come to a point—

Mr. MORGAN. I am about to come to one, and if the Senator will let me get his troops out of the field I will quit.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will promise that, I will not make the point of order.

Mr. MORGAN. I was about to say that the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Maine, now in hurry and panic fall back on their reserve, the tariff commission at Long Branch. Having given up the field of battle which they themselves so eagerly occupied, they can retire with their colors trailing in the dust and go to the country and apologize to it for having spent so long a time and wasted so much valuable ammunition in their effort to do nothing with the tariff bill.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President—

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote on my motion.

Mr. BLAIR. I rise to speak on the motion. I rise to oppose it, and to give my reasons why the debate upon the revenue bill should not at this time be interrupted; some reasons why, in my judgment, it cannot at this time be interrupted without great detriment to the public interests.

I suppose, Mr. President, that no subject-matter could be brought to the attention of the Senate involving the public interest to a larger extent than the discussion of the tariff and its proposed modification, and a bill is now before the Senate involving that entire subject-matter. The debate upon it has proceeded without interruption for ten days, arguments pro and con., bearing upon the various provisions in the original bill and in the several amendments which have been proposed, have been heard, but they have preponderated on the side of those who are opposed to the general policy of a protective tariff.

There is also pending in the Senate another very important bill relating to certain specific provisions of the tariff, which is known as the knit-goods bill, which ought to have been taken up in advance of this general discussion, because that bill has in view not a modification of the tariff, as it has been understood to be, and as it has been administered for the last fifteen years, but to re-enact into law, and make the law have upon the statute-book precisely that construction which has been given to it during all these years, and under the operation of which the industry itself has been brought into existence. That construction of the statutes has been repealed very recently by a decision of the Supreme Court, which operates precisely as though Congress itself had by legislation modified the tariff as it has been known to be or understood to be during these years, and this by a single item of legislation striking down one industry, when the fate of that industry could only be properly involved and properly considered in connection with a general bill touching the tariff in all regards, and regulating the tariff upon raw materials and upon all other concomitant interests.

During the progress of this debate, it has been allowed by those interested in the substitution of the naval appropriation bill for this bill, and who now seek to interrupt this discussion, to those opposed to the knit-goods bill to drag in its merits, and to indulge in sundry observations of fact as well as of argument, and I allude more specifically to those of fact which if believed by the Senate would bear very strongly upon the probability of their taking up that bill in any subsequent portion of the session, and dealing with it upon its merits. Therefore it is that I desire to be heard with reference to the interest involved in the knit-goods bill at this time, giving my reasons for objecting to an interruption of the debate by the injection of the naval appropriation bill at this time.

What is the allegation of those whose interests are involved in the bill to which I refer, and which bill is liable to be sacrificed and never brought again before the Senate during this session if these misstatements go uncorrected? It is that the decision of the Supreme Court repeals the law as it has been administered; and good faith requires of us as legislators that we deal with any great interest with reference to the law as it has been administered rather than as it may have been found to be by the recent decision of the court. It is alleged by those whose interests are wrapped up in the knit-goods industry that this recent ascertainment of the law by the decision absolutely ruins their industry. I have here testimony from gentlemen of as high quality as exist in this land, Democratic gentlemen formidable to us of the Republican party in my own State, who did as much to make that State so largely as she was Democratic in years past as any who reside there, eminent men in all the walks of life, and men who lead this industry there, and who are to be sacrificed if this bill fails to pass during the present session, showing that their profits (which have been alleged on this floor to be from 47 to 50 per cent.) do not average more than 8 or 10 per cent.; that in many years they make nothing; that in other years, their most successful years, from 15 to 20 per cent. is all that is realized.

The recent change which has been made in the existing law, or in that construction upon which the whole country has acted, cuts off their profits at least 10 per cent. on the lowest estimate, and from 20 per cent. upward to 30, 40, and even 50 upon some branches of the industry. So, with a profit under the law as it has been administered averaging no more than 10 per cent., this new construction of the law coming in depriving them of at least 20 per cent. of their profits, it is obvious to any man that if this condition of things continues they can only proceed at a net loss of at least 10 per cent. for all time to come until the law be modified. So that this bill which is liable to be sacrificed by this interruption of the debate, this bill which involves the interests as has been so often stated here of from forty to fifty millions of capital and of those who are dependent upon it, is likely to be sacrificed, as it seems to me, if the Senator from Maine succeeds in obtaining favorable action upon his motion.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] the other day produced some articles of manufacture in the line of hosiery from his own State, as I understood him, very good articles, indeed, but he produced them with some statements of fact with reference to his own State, the direct operation of which would be to induce the belief on the part of the Senate that this knit-goods industry comes here for help when it is already a bloated monopoly, and making wealth even under the existing operations of the law. He says his correspondents told him that they manufactured the goods which he produced for $3 a dozen, and that they are sold at $6 at retail, and he argues a net profit of 50 per cent. on that ground.

Now, sir, from the authority which I mentioned a short time ago, I have procured in response to a telegram which I sent immediately on listening to the statement, a list of the prices, of the sizes, of the material, and the cost and prices of the manufacturers, jobbers, and retailers in my own State. There are six styles of this manufacture which are produced by the particular firm of which I have spoken, a strong Democratic firm. This is the result:

Style A, stock used, all cotton; cost per dozen $1.55; the manufacturer's price at which he sells is $1.75; the jobber sells to the retailer at $2, and the retailer sells at $2.50 per dozen the stock which the Senator spoke of as being sold at the rate of $6.

Style B, 20 per cent. wool and 80 per cent. cotton; cost of manufacture, $1.80 per dozen; the manufacturer sells to the jobber at $2; the jobber sells at $2.37½ to the retailer, and the retailer sells that article at $3 to the consumer.

Style C, 40 per cent. wool and 60 per cent. cotton; cost to the manufacturer, $2.20; he sells it at $2.42 to the jobber, and the jobber to the retailer at $2.75, and the retailer to the consumer at $3.25 per dozen.

Style D, 60 per cent. wool and 40 per cent. cotton; cost to manufacturer, $2.65; the manufacturer sells at $3, the jobber at $3.37½, and the retailer to the consumer at $3.87½.

Style E, 80 per cent. wool, 20 per cent. cotton; cost to manufacturer, $3.10; he sells at $3.50 to the jobber, the jobber sells at $3.87½ to the retailer, and the retailer to the consumer at $4.50.

Style F, all wool; cost, $3.55 per dozen; the manufacturer sells at $4, the jobber sells at $4.50, and the retailer at $5.25.

This cost price does not include the wear and tear of machinery, which is sometimes large and sometimes small, nor does it include invested capital. It does include salaries, labor, and supplies. [Mr. HALE rose.] I realize the uneasiness of the honorable Senator who wants to build a navy, who wants to introduce a bill to be destroyed, as I hope it will be; but it will have, I think, its immediate destruction, so that by to-morrow morning we may resume the discussion of the tariff question and proceed to protect the interests of those whose business fate is wrapped up in the disposition made of the knit-goods bill.

Mr. HALE. Now, Mr. President, let us have a vote.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I hope this will be a test vote—

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is to proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I hope this will be a test question. If this revenue bill is to be laid aside now, let it be laid aside for the whole session.

Mr. HALE. Nothing of that kind is understood. The motion is not made in antagonism to the tax bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I deprecate any such contest as that. The question is whether an appropriation bill which is to run the Government, which the Government is waiting for now, shall be taken up and passed. This bill does not go into effect for months.

Mr. SAUNDERS. There is no danger but what we shall pass the appropriation bills.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There is great danger, for there are but four days more left under the resolution we have passed before the Government will again be at a standstill.

Mr. SAUNDERS. It can be extended easily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is nothing in the motion that precludes the Senate in any way from action on any bill.

Mr. HALE. The motion is not made in hostility to the revenue bill.

Mr. HARRIS. It is not a motion to indefinitely postpone, and that is the only one which could be made a test.

Mr. BLAIR. I object very strongly to the vote being taken with that view, because I learn that the importations of knit goods from abroad are pouring into this country with very great rapidity, and one firm at least in my own State has been obliged already to suspend; and this knit-goods bill must be brought forward at a later period of the session.

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote.

The yeas and nays were taken.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. GROOME.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SEWELL, (when his name was called.) I announce my pair on this question with my colleague, [Mr. MCPHERSON.]

Mr. VAN WYCK, (when his name was called.) I desire to announce that I am paired during the day with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. GROVER.]

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. WALKER. My colleague [Mr. GARLAND] is paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—33.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 47 to the bill (H. R. No. 6243) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes, agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FRANK HISCOCK, of New York, Mr. GEORGE M. ROBESON, of New Jersey, and Mr. S. S. COX, of New York, managers at the further conference on its part.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the third committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6244) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; it further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 330 to 337, inclusive, to the said bill, and asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. J. G. CANNON, of Illinois, Mr. FRANK HISCOCK, of New York, and Mr. J. D. C. ATKINS, of Tennessee, managers at the further conference on its part.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolutions:

A bill (S. No. 972) creating the Oregon Short-Line Railway Company a corporation in the Territories of Utah, Idaho, and Wyoming, and for other purposes;

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 75) allowing the widow of General Stephen A. Hurlbut, late minister to Peru, one year's salary; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 77) allowing the widow of General Judson Kilpatrick, late minister to Chili, one year's salary.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 6517) authorizing compensation to members of Company B, Fourteenth Infantry, for private property destroyed by fire on the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 270) for the relief of Sarah J. S. Garnet, widow of Henry H. Garnet, late minister to Liberia; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 271) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan twenty-five wall tents to the colony of Russian Hebrew refugees at Cimarron, Foote County, Kansas.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 2374) granting to certain parties right of way over lands and waters of the United States; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. CAMDEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 5812) to establish post-routes; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VANCE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 6616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that then the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations be proceeded with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is that the sense of the Senate, that the amendments be considered as they are reached in the reading of the bill? That will be the understanding, the Chair hearing no objection.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, it has been with some difficulty that I have succeeded in getting this appropriation bill, after long delay, before the Senate, and I know how desirous the members of this body are for prompt action upon it; and moved by that consideration, I propose in launching the bill to occupy but very little time; but as I have just been notified that at the close of what I may say a hostile motion will be entered in reference to the bill, providing, I think, for its recommitment to the committee to strike out certain parts of the bill, I deem it wise and judicious to say a few words upon the nature and scope of the bill. Had I not been notified to the effect which I have mentioned I should not say a word, but should content myself, as I shall in the main, having given to this subject some study and thought and reflection, with answering objections to the bill as they come up during its consideration, and answering questions that may be presented by Senators interested in the debate.

In the first place, Mr. President, the bill, so far as it embodies legislation, with hardly a single exception, comes from the House after prolonged consideration and debate in that body with the features of legislation which are now found upon it adopted upon mature deliberation and consideration by the popular branch of Congress. The legislation that is found upon this bill, and with which fault has been found by Senators and others, has its root not in the action of the Committee on Appropriations of this body, but in the deliberate consideration and confirmed judgment of the House of Representatives; and let me say that with I think but one exception everything that the Committee on Appropriations has reported upon this bill in the way of legislation upon the personnel of the Navy is an adaptation of the legislation adopted by the House, and I may say further is in the direction of softening that legislation and making it easier, and making it less harsh and drastic for the naval establishment.

Every amendment that has been submitted by the Committee on Appropriations, I repeat, to the bill which the House sent us is in a direction taken after consultation with the head of the Navy Department and with officers of the Navy.

So much for the Committee on Appropriations having gone outside of its functions, and incorporated new legislation into the bill. I make this point here because the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] notifies me that he will move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to strike from it all legislative provisions. I wish to say that if this body chooses to adopt that unprecedented motion on the part of the Senator from Pennsylvania, it simply means that, without consideration, without going into the merits of this bill, the Senate says to the House of Representatives: "We take square and direct issue with everything that you have done, and notify our committee to strike from the bill everything that you in your wisdom have put upon it, and we declare now at the outset of its consideration that we will have nothing to do with what you have put on under your rules."

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Maine if that is not precisely what the House, under its usage, does with every appropriation bill that comes back to that body from the Senate? Their universal practice is to non-concur in every amendment.

Mr. HALE. But mere nominal non-concurrence after a bill has passed the two Houses is a very different thing from recommitting a bill to the committee which has reported it, with directions, when first reported and when first considered by the body, to strike out every proposition that the other branch has put on. There is no analogy, there is no similarity, between the two motions.

I want to say further on the point of the legislation reported from the Committee on Appropriations, that having the action of the House to rest upon, almost every single distinctive proposition, with but one exception, (and that relating to the retirement of admirals in the Navy,) and I think every proposition found in the bill to which objection is made because it is legislation, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations by committees of this House, the Naval Committee foremost in the number abjuring all its own functions of considering such a bill and turning it over to the Committee on Appropriations.

I may say here that the Committee on Appropriations was very careful in its consideration of this bill to see that it had good authority for every provision that it reported. It waited for the action of the House; it waited for the action of committees of this body in referring these matters; it waited for amendments to be submitted and referred to the Committee on Appropriations by Senator after Senator in this body, covering the very propositions involved in the bill. If objection is made and the motion is insisted upon, in due time I shall read to the Senate the amendments which have been referred to the Committee on Appropriations by Senators of this body and other committees in this body, showing that the subject-matter of this bill was turned over to the Committee on Appropriations not only by the House of Representatives but by committees in this body.

One thing further, Mr. President. This bill is not, as it has been termed, a reorganization of the American Navy. I have lived long enough to find out that there is nothing a man has studied, even much, that he may not yet learn a great deal about, and I have learned very much about the naval establishment during the examination in the course of preparing and reporting the bill, and since. But for years I have taken a warm interest in the American Navy. During my service in the lower House, if there was any one subject to which I gave what I thought was faithful and careful attention it was the American Navy. I had the fortune there to manage these bills for years. I was known as a friend of the Navy, as a navy man, and I have not lost any of that interest in the American Navy to-day.

I say from my knowledge of that branch of the service and from all the investigations I have been able to give it, that this bill is the farthest in the world from a reorganization of the American Navy. When that question is taken in hand, as it never has been taken in hand by the Naval Committee of either the House or the Senate, and when they spend their time upon that instead of upon contests of naval officers for precedence and promotion, and the reorganization of the American Navy takes place, it will be a very different matter from the provisions embodied in this appropriation bill; it will go further and deeper than the Committee on Appropriations have ventured or wish to go in the reorganization of the American Navy. When that subject is taken up, not only will the question of the undue increase of officers in that establishment be considered and an attempt made in a degree to remedy that, but the whole subject-matter of the ranks in the American Navy will be considered; the numerous ranks, more numerous than any other in any navy in the world, will be cut down, and there will be a few legitimate and natural grades left, such as were found before the war and are in other navies.

There will be the great question of the proper relation of the staff and the line of the Navy taken up, and there will be legislation embodied that will settle for years the vexed questions which have divided the line and staff of the American Navy, so that at last peace will rest in that establishment and not constant reproach and bickering and jealousy and a desire of one to get ahead of the other. The question of the Marine Corps, what shall be its proper relation to the American Navy, whether it shall be turned over bodily to the Army or remain as part of the naval establishment, whether it shall be reduced in part or in a lesser proportion, will be taken up, and other great questions which the Committee on Appropriations has not thought of considering in this bill. All of those things will be taken up in a reorganization of the American Navy. The Committee on Appropriations is not the proper body for that, and has not considered that, but it has alone considered what has come to it from the House of Representatives, what has come to it from committees and Senators in this body, and nothing beyond.

I wish to say further, and I say it as an admonition to any friend of the Navy or any naval officer who is sensitive and jealous about the provisions of this bill, and who is lobbying Senators to try to defeat it, that the legislation of this bill is put upon the Navy by no unfriendly hand. There is no desire to impair the efficiency of the Navy one jot or one tittle. If I know anything about the motives which actuate myself, with my long training of sympathy with this establishment, there is no desire here for anything except to improve and better and strengthen this branch of our service, in which every American citizen ought to feel a just pride and satisfaction.

I realize as a friend of the American Navy that for years it has been going along in directions that must needs be stopped, or by and by a ruder hand than ours will be laid upon this establishment, and instead of being pruned and bettered it will be laid low, where it will not recover from the blow for years. I want to avert that. There are certain evils which are apparent to me, and I think are apparent to every friend of the Navy, which should be remedied, and remedied now.

It will not do to turn this matter over to a commission, because the time to do a thing of this sort in the way of reform of abuses that stand bare and open to every eye is when they have been considered and discussed and when there is an opportunity to act. Delay in a thing of this kind is not simply procrastination but it is indefinite postponement, and that has gone on long enough.

The American Navy is over-officered. This has been a natural result of legislation which has not been checked. It has to-day, with 39 steam-vessels, more than half as many commissioned officers as the British navy, with over 300 steam-vessels. The proposition I have made is a startling one to anybody who has not examined the subject-matter. Let me repeat it. The United States Navy, with 39 steam-vessels in active service of all grades and kinds, has over 1,400 commissioned officers. The British navy, with 341 steam-vessels in active service, has between 2,600 and 2,700 line officers in commission. That of itself is enough to put any committee before whom this matter is brought in a legitimate way upon careful, earnest, faithful inquiry. I may say that the figures given, although I knew the disproportion was enormous, were never brought to my mind accurately until a hearing which the Committee on Appropriations gave to both line and staff officers upon this matter brought out this table carefully prepared by the line officers of the Navy. It was in the course of the investigation that the fact, so startling as it is, which I have stated was developed.

This enormous overplus of officers in the American Navy does not date from the war. The first answer may be, by any Senator who has not examined the subject, that this is due to the war; but the large increase in grades and numbers and ranks all took place after the war was closed. The American Navy was not, in its officers or its men or its personnel, an unwieldy body when the war closed. Great as had been its exploits, great as had been the burden taxed upon it, it was not an unwieldy body and did not present this undue proportion of officers to men at the close of the war that it does now. But the legislation to increase the Navy began at once after the war; it has gone on unhindered and unchecked ever since; and this is the first time any attempt has been made in the direction of checking the overplus of officers.

I say again that no genuine friend of the Navy will object to what is done in the bill in the direction of trying to remedy, or partially remedy, this evil.

Mr. VANCE. Will the Senator from Maine permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. VANCE. I wish to ask the Senator if it is not true that the vast increase in naval officers is in the civil branch, engineers, paymasters, surgeons, &c., and not in the line, and if the line has not actually decreased since 1866?

Mr. HALE. No; the line has not decreased. A very large proportion of increase of course has been in other branches than the line, but not entirely in the others. It has been more in the others for the reason that the manner of warfare is changed; the manner, construction, and style of naval ships have entirely changed, and the engineer officers have come much more largely into play of late years, as the Senator knows himself by a moment's reflection, than formerly.

In former years, before the war, the American Navy had the best sailing-ships on the globe; we had better than any other naval power, the finest sailing-ships in the world; we had some fine ships with auxiliary steam-power; but to-day and for years the construction of ships has run in the direction of steamships with wind as an auxiliary power; and of course the engineer officers needed to manage the machinery of the boat have increased, and so the increase has been large in the engineer's department, but not in the engineer's department alone. The overplus is enormous in all branches; the overplus in the line, in the engineers, in the staff proper, and everywhere else is great, in some greater than in others. The committee has tried not to radically cure all this, but to set about a reform in the right direction, of stopping it so far as may be.

I do not pretend to prescribe infallibly a method of trying to cure this trouble that everybody ought to admit exists in the American Navy. I have found, and the Committee on Appropriations has found as it has discussed this matter, that it has gained light upon the question, for instance, of promotion. How you shall regulate it is a difficult thing. You may start with a proposition striking out pretty much all in one rank, as the House did. The investigation of the Committee on Appropriations showed that it was better, instead of taking the lower grades of the Navy—for instance, striking out eighty from the lieutenants, thus barring promotion absolutely for years—to distribute that reduction over the whole corps. The Committee on Appropriations has found that it could gain light from day to day, and I shall offer an amendment before I leave the floor, from the Committee on Appropriations, which modifies the provision as reported by the committee, because upon investigation the Committee on Appropriations found that it had gained new light, and could offer an amendment that would make this provision better and make it work more justly.

The Committee on Appropriations has no hesitation in saying upon that matter that it gained upon investigation and discussion new light, and may still gain new light upon this question by investigation. During the progress of this bill, if there are considerations presented that seem to me, even if urged in hostility to the provisions of the bill, to make it clearer and more just in the general direction in which we are going, I pledge myself to the Senate that I will accept them most gladly, because the only desire we have here in attempting to cut off this overplus is to do it in a way that shall bear the most wisely and the most evenly upon all parts of the Navy.

When we come to those provisions and they are treated in detail, I will enter, if need be in explanation, into more in detail as to why we have adopted certain provisions. I do not propose to go over those now. I deemed it wise to state to the Senate the general objects of the bill, so that in voting upon the unprecedented motion, which I have never known made before, to recommit a bill with instructions to strike out all its legislative features, the Senate may know, or at least have my view, that the legislation embodied in the bill is right and fair and in the real interest of the American Navy, and is not put upon it with any unfriendly hand.

I want to say one thing further, which I would be glad to have Senators bear in mind, that this is almost the only bill which has been presented from the committee that has in it anything in the way of reform in the direction of cutting off superfluous officers and reducing expenditures. We have not been able to do that in other directions, but the committee has grappled with that question here and has presented a bill to the Senate modifying the House provisions, not taking away their purpose and end in reducing the expenses of the naval establishment but adapting the objects and the ends that the House sought to accomplish to the needs of the service as we believe in a better way, and have thus produced before the Senate the only bill that provides for a reform in the direction of reducing needless officers and cutting down expenditures.

I hope upon this the Senate will think twice before it declares itself in antagonism to the House, in antagonism to the provisions presented here by the Committee on Appropriations, and that the bill may be considered as appropriation bills commonly are, clause by clause, section by section. If any friend of the Navy can present an amendment, and without losing the great object in view shall make the force harmonize with the needs of the service, let the Senate adopt that amendment, but maintain the features of this bill with a rigid determination to reduce the overplus in the Navy in its officers, and to put it in a condition where it will be a more effective establishment than it is to-day, and where it will be in less danger of being hereafter treated rudely and unjustly because the right thing has not been done in the right time.

Mr. ROLLINS. Mr. President—

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Will the Senator from New Hampshire give way to me that I may offer a resolution.

Mr. ROLLINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. Before I sit down, as I gave notice, I offer an amendment from the committee. At the end of line 183 I move to add:

Provided, however, That this suspension of promotions to any grade shall not continue, but promotions thereto to fill all vacancies shall be resumed after said grade has been reduced to the limits herein provided, namely, for captains forty-eight, for commanders eighty-two, for lieutenant-commanders seventy, for lieutenants two hundred and fifty, for masters seventy-five, for ensigns seventy-five.

Then in line 175—

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The Chair suggests to the Senator from Maine that perhaps it would be better, unless he desires the amendments printed, that they be offered when we reach the part of the bill in which it is proposed to insert them.

Mr. HALE. I wish to offer them now, in order that the Senate, in acting upon the motion the Senator from Pennsylvania is about to make, may know what we propose to put in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The second amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine will be reported.

The PRINCIPAL LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In line 175, after the word "only," it is proposed to strike out the word "one-third" and to insert "one-half;" so as to read:

That hereafter only one-half of the vacancies which may happen in the grades of line officers in the Navy below that of commodore and above that of midshipman shall be filled by promotions.

Mr. HALE. These two amendments, I will say, avoid what was found on investigation to be the effect of the provision as reported first from the committee, and that was that it would require a great many promotions in the grades near captain and immediately below before any promotions could take place in the lower grades. We have distributed these promotions in the different grades, so that now, although promotions will be slower, they will go on in each corps, and suspension will stop whenever each corps is reduced to a certain number, and the lower corps will not have to wait until all the promotions are made in the upper corps, and one-half of the vacancies are filled, instead of one-third. That, as Senators will see, presents a very much modified proposition from the one in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire has the floor.

Mr. ROLLINS. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania to offer a resolution.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the naval appropriation bill be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to strike out all matter relating to the reorganization of the Navy, and provide appropriations for the naval establishment as it now exists.

I wish to say just a few words upon the resolution.

Mr. ROLLINS. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, in offering the resolution it is not my desire to discuss the merits or demerits of the bill as presented to us by the Committee on Appropriations, nor do I mean to question the ability of that committee to take in charge the naval affairs. I offer the resolution at the suggestion and request and by direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, who think that all legislation in connection with the Navy should be considered by that committee, and not by the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Appropriations have already taken in charge the Army, and they now propose to take in charge the Navy. The next thing we shall see probably is that they have taken charge of the judicial affairs of this country. This morning we had an illustration of their attempt to take charge of the affairs of the Finance Committee.

There is no feeling upon the part of the Naval Committee or any members of it that the members of the Appropriations Committee are not just as well fitted to investigate, discuss, and legislate for the Navy, but we do not think they are any better fitted than the members of the Naval Committee, and upon that question we want the sense of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I wish to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, if he is so sensitive as to the Committee on Appropriations taking charge of naval matters, why it is that the files of the Committee on Appropriations are found loaded with such amendments as this?

Amendment reported by Mr. ROLLINS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to the bill (H. R. No. 6616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, namely:

Add as a new section the following:

"SEC. —. That hereafter the chiefs of the Bureaus of Construction and Repair, of Steam-Engineering, of Provisions and Clothing, and of Medicine and Surgery, in the Department of the Navy shall be appointed by selection from the officers of the corps to which they belong whose relative rank is not below that of commander."

That is a subject of purely naval consideration, and yet referred by the Committee on Naval Affairs, of which the Senator from Pennsylvania is chairman, to the Committee on Appropriations for them to consider. We find seven of these amendments submitted to us by members of the Committee on Naval Affairs referring matters in this bill to the Committee on Appropriations, asking them to consider them on the naval appropriation bill, and now the Senator turns around and accuses us of usurping the jurisdiction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, which has sent every one of these matters to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I will answer that.

Mr. BUTLER. The Committee on Naval Affairs have proposed them as amendments to the bill.

Mr. ROLLINS. I decline to yield any further.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. The Senator from Maine has asked me a question and I desire to answer it.

Mr. ROLLINS. Very well; but I do not want to yield for an interminable debate.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. There will be no debate on my part, I assure the Senator; it is not my habit; but I simply wish to say a word in reply. I say in reply that the Committee on Appropriations having modestly taken charge of this bill, there was no other place where the provisions could be inserted.

Mr. HALE. What prevented the Senator from reporting such a bill himself?

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. The bill was referred to the Senator's committee and that committee had it in charge.

Mr. HALE. The Committee on Appropriations declined to make that legislation, although the Committee on Naval Affairs recommended it. We did not think we could do it after the Senator from New Hampshire reported it from the Naval Committee.

Mr. ROLLINS. Mr. President, on Monday, the 17th of July, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] caused to be spread upon the RECORD a long statement showing the number of naval officers upon the retired list. This exhibition caused some comment, and it was suggested, and perhaps more than suggested, that there had been promotions upon the retired list of the Navy in direct violation of law, because all understood that promotions upon the retired list are not accompanied by an increase of pay, and that if the pay was increased there was a direct violation of law.

This has led to some further investigation of the matter, and it does seem to me it is one of so much importance that it is proper to pause at this time, when a bill is pending for the complete reorganization of the Navy, to consider what the retired list of the Navy is, and why it is as it is. It has required considerable effort to ascertain how it is that the very first man upon the retired list whose name is presented in the statement of the Senator from Kentucky has had his pay increased from $1,738 to $4,500. I confess that when I saw the list presented I was unable without some examination to account for all this increase of pay. I have looked into the matter somewhat and I find that the retired list is comparatively a new thing in the Navy.

The act of March 3, 1835, (Statutes at Large, volume 4, page 756, chapter 27, section 1,) fixes the pay of officers on sea service and on leave of absence, and provides that "no officer shall be put on furlough but at his own request, and all officers so furloughed shall receive one-half only of the pay to which they would have been entitled if on leave of absence."

There is a provision which allows an officer of the Navy to be furloughed and have the leave-of-absence pay. That seems to have been the first step in the way of making a retired list.

The officers now on the retired list, who were retired prior to June 1, 1860, received the full pay of their rank as fixed by this act, as follows:

Commanders on leave of absence or waiting orders, $1,800.
Lieutenants on leave of absence or waiting orders, $1,200.
Masters on leave of absence or waiting orders, $750.
Surgeon, commissioned twenty years and upward, $1,800.
The furlough pay was one-half of leave-of-absence pay.

Thus the matter stood until 1855. In 1855 the Navy, I suppose, had become somewhat top-heavy, and there was a disposition to retire a portion of it; and what did Congress do?

The act of February 28, 1855, (Statutes at Large, volume 10, page 616, section 1,) provides for a board of five captains, five commanders, and five lieutenants to report on the efficiency of naval officers, and section 2 provides—

That all officers who shall be found by the said board incapable of performing the duties of their respective offices, ranks, or grades, shall, if such finding be approved by the President, be dropped from the rolls or placed in the order of their rank and seniority at the time, upon a list in the Navy Register, to be entitled the reserved list, and those so placed on the reserved list shall receive the leave-of-absence pay or the furlough pay to which they may be entitled when so placed, according to the report of the board and approval of the President, and shall be ineligible to further promotion, but shall be subject to the orders of the Navy Department at all times for duty. * * * Provided, That this scrutiny and reservation of officers shall extend only to the grades of captains, commander, lieutenant, masters, and passed midshipmen.

The board met and acted, and, as I am informed by those who are familiar with the transactions of those days, acted with great ability and with discretion. They retired and placed upon the reserved list a large number of officers.

Mr. BUTLER. On what pay?

Mr. ROLLINS. On reserved pay, which was leave-of-absence pay or furlough pay.

This went along until 1857, two years later. Then, I suppose, many of the officers on the reserved list were living in the city of Washington and they besieged Congress and implored to be restored to the active list; and what did they do? They brought about the act of Congress of January 16, 1857.

The act of January 16, 1857, (volume 11, page 153, chapter 12, section 1,) provides for the restoration of officers who were dropped, furloughed, or retired under the operation of the act of the 28th of February, 1855, to the active list or to the retired list on leave-of-absence or furlough pay, and section 3 provides that the President shall be authorized, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to transfer any officer from the furlough to the reserved-pay list, and repeals so much of the act of the 28th of February, 1855, as renders reserved officers ineligible to promotion. Section 4 provides that "no such promotion shall entitle them to any pay beyond that to which they were entitled when so reserved, nor shall they, by such promotion, take any higher rank than they would have taken had they been retained in the active service of the Navy." What was the practical effect of the act of 1857? I have here a table showing just how many were affected by the law of 1855 and by the action under the law of 1857.

Officers of the Navy placed on the reserved list and dropped by the board organized under act of Congress, approved February 28, 1855, and those who were restored under the act of January 16, 1857.

| Rank. | Placed on the reserved list. | Restored to active list. | Restored to list on leave. | Dropped. | Restored to active list. | Restored to list on leave. |
|-------------------------|------------------------------|--------------------------|----------------------------|----------|--------------------------|----------------------------|
| Captains | 31 | 3 | 7 | 3 | 2 | |
| Commanders | 33 | 13 | 3 | 6 | 4 | |
| Lieutenants | 64 | 30 | 11 | 19 | 7 | 2 |
| Masters | 17 | 1 | 1 | 8 | 3 | 1 |
| Passed midshipmen | 2 | 1 | 1 | 12 | 4 | 1 |
| Total | 147 | 47 | 23 | 48 | 20 | 4 |

Thus it will be seen that there were placed on the reserved list under the act of 1855 one hundred and forty-seven officers, and under the provisions of the act of 1857 there were restored to the active list forty-seven officers, and to the list on leave twenty-three officers; so that the efforts of Congress to reduce the Navy under the act of 1855 were counteracted to the extent of the restoration of nearly 50 per cent. of the officers who were placed on the retired list or dropped from the Navy. Of the officers who were dropped by the above board, forty-eight in all, twenty were restored to the retired list and four to the list on leave; so that the efforts of Congress were successful only to the extent of one half accomplished by the board.

I have given substantially all the legislation which had taken place up to 1860.

The act of June 1, 1860, (volume 12, page 24, Statutes at Large,) fixes the pay of officers of the Navy, captain being the highest grade, that of captain, commander, and lieutenant-commander being as follows: Captains commanding squadrons, $5,000; other captains, on duty at sea, $4,200; captains on other duty, $3,600; captains on leave or waiting orders, $3,000. Commander, on duty at sea, first five years, $2,825; second five years, $3,150; commander, on other duty, first five years, $2,660; commander, on other duty, second five years, $2,825; other commanders, $2,250. Lieutenant-commanders, at sea, $2,550.

Section 4 provides "that nothing in this act contained shall be held to modify or affect the existing power of the Secretary of the Navy to furlough officers or to affect the furlough pay." Section 5 provides that "officers on the reserved list when called into active service shall receive the pay of their respective grades as herein provided during the term of such service, provided that nothing herein contained shall be construed to change or modify the present pay of officers on the reserved list either on leave or furlough."

Then came the act of August 3, 1861, where the retired list as such is first mentioned. Up to that time we had no retired list. August 3, 1861, when war had already commenced and it became necessary to reorganize the Navy to get rid of some material which was not proper for the command of our ships, Congress took this matter up and provided for the better organization of the Navy and provided what should be the pay of officers upon the retired list.

The act of August 3, 1861, "An act providing for the better organization of the military establishment," (volume 12, page 290, chapter 42, section 22,) provides "that if any officer of the Navy shall have become, or shall hereafter become, incapable of performing the duties of his office, he shall be placed upon the retired list and withdrawn from active service and command and from the line of promotion, with the following pay and emoluments, namely: Captains, $1,300; commanders, $1,100; lieutenants, $1,000," &c., and with four rations per day to each of the above-named officers of the Navy, to be commuted at thirty cents each ration, and without any other pay or allowance. Captains, commanders, and lieutenants now on the retired list of the Navy shall receive the same compensation and no greater than is allowed to retired officers of the same rank by the provisions of this act.

Section 23 of the same act provides that if the officer's disability does not proceed from causes, the result of long and faithful service, nor from wounds or injury received in the line of duty, nor from sickness or exposure therein, he may be retired upon furlough pay or wholly retired from the service with one year's pay.

Then we come to the act of December 21, 1861, when age for the first time becomes an element. Up to that time there was no reference to the age of a naval officer, but on the 21st of December, 1861, when as the war progressed it was found necessary that officers should be retired by reason of age, Congress provided in the act of December 21, 1861, (volume 12, page 329, chapter 1, section 1:)

That whenever the name of any naval officer now in the service or who may hereafter be in the service of the United States shall have been borne on the Naval Register forty-five years, or shall be of the age of sixty-two years, he shall be retired from active service and his name entered on the retired list of officers of the grade to which he belonged at the time of such retirement.

Section 5 provides—

That all officers retired under the provisions of this act shall receive the retired pay of their respective grades as fixed by law.

To illustrate the effects of special acts of Congress on the retired list I propose to take up the case of the first man mentioned upon the retired list, who was retired as a captain, Captain J. R. Sands. It will illustrate the process by which the pay of a retired officer has been increased from $1,738 per year to $4,500 a year.

Rear-Admiral J. R. Sands was retired as captain, the highest grade in the Navy, December 21, 1861, under the act of December 21, 1861, on account of age, and drew pay as a retired captain at the rate fixed by the act of August 3, 1861, namely, $1,300, and commutation of rations, $438, making $1,738.

Now, watch the progress step by step. An act to establish and equalize the grade of line officers of the United States Navy, the act of July 16, 1862, (volume 12, page 583,) fixes the annual pay of retired naval officers as follows, namely:

|-----------------------------|---------|
| Rear-admirals | $2,000 |
| Commodores | 1,800 |
| Captains | 1,600 |
| Commanders | 1,400 |
| Lieutenant-commanders | 1,300 |
| Lieutenants | 1,000 |
| Masters | 800 |
| Ensigns | 500 |

By this act Sands's pay as a retired captain was fixed at $1,600, and no commutation.

The next step was the act of July 25, 1866, an act to define the number and regulate the appointment of officers in the Navy, and for other purposes.

The act of July 25, 1866, (volume 14, page 222, chapter 231, section 1,) after fixing the number in each grade of line officers on the active list of the Navy, provides:

That nothing in this act, nor in the fourteenth section of the act approved July 16, 1862, shall be so construed as to prevent the Secretary of the Navy from promoting to the grade of rear-admiral on the retired list those commodores who have commanded squadrons by order of the Secretary of the Navy, or who have performed other highly meritorious service.

Is not that cunning? When captain was the highest grade they wanted to promote them to the rank of rear-admiral, and instead of saying, "We promote those officers who by a certain number of years of hard service are entitled to promotion," they simply looked over the list and saw how their great object would be accomplished. They found that some five or six men would be affected by that act. Forthwith they passed an act that in the case of those five or six men who had some time or other in the past commanded squadrons by order of the Secretary of the Navy there should be nothing to prevent the Secretary of the Navy from promoting them to rear-admirals. By that act Captain Sands was promoted to the grade of rear-admiral on the retired list, but with no increase of pay.

I should be glad to call attention to some other portions of this same act, but I will not at the present moment. I will pass along to the next act in the case of Rear-Admiral Sands, who had then become a rear-admiral.

The next was the act of July 15, 1870; and now comes in one of the beauties of legislation upon an appropriation bill. Now the committee that purposes to reform and reorganize the Navy comes into full view.

The act of July 15, 1870, (volume 16, page 333, chapter 295, section 36,) fixes the highest pay of navy officers on the active list as follows: Admiral, $13,000; vice-admiral, $9,000; rear-admiral, $6,000; commodore, $5,000; captain, $4,500; commander, $3,500; lieutenant-commander, $2,800 and $3,000; lieutenant, $2,400 and $2,600; master, $1,800 and $2,000; ensign, $1,200 and $1,400, &c.

Mr. LOGAN. That was reorganizing the Navy.

Mr. ROLLINS. To that extent.

Mr. LOGAN. But the whole line?

Mr. ROLLINS. Yes, as to pay.

Mr. LOGAN. I said in the Senate the other day that from 1842 to the present time it had been impossible to reorganize the Army or Navy in the proper way on account of the influences which surrounded Congress outside, and there never had been a reorganization of either one of them except on an appropriation bill; that the appropriation bill always carried it through; and now the Senator objects to a reorganization of the same character.

Mr. ROLLINS. I submit that so modest a man as myself should not be disturbed by so able and accomplished a debater as the learned Senator from Illinois. I will come to that point in due time, and I will endeavor to pay my respects to it, but I hope the Senator will pardon me if I do not choose to do it now.

Mr. LOGAN. I merely ask the question if that reorganization of the pay was not on an appropriation bill?

Mr. ROLLINS. I say it was.

Mr. LOGAN. It does not seem to have been criticised then.

Mr. ROLLINS. Section 5 of the same act, the appropriation act, provides—

That from and after the 30th day of June, 1870, the pay of all officers of the Navy now on or hereafter placed on the retired list shall, when not on active duty, be equal to one-half of the highest pay prescribed by this act for officers on the active list whose grade corresponds to the grade held by such retired officers respectively at the time of such retirement, and no officer heretofore or hereafter promoted upon the retired list shall in consequence of such promotion be entitled to any increase of pay.

This was upon an appropriation bill July 15, 1870. You will see, in the first place, the committee largely increased the pay of the officers upon the active list of the Navy. Then they came in with one of their reformatory measures and provided that all the officers upon the retired list should receive one-half of the pay of the highest or sea pay of officers upon the active list. What was the effect of that in the case in question? It increased the pay of Rear-Admiral Sands, who had then become a rear-admiral, to $2,250.

The next step was "an act to fix the pay of certain rear-admirals on the retired list of the Navy." Now the half dozen rear-admirals who had commanded squadrons come into view. That is the act of June 5, 1872, (volume 17, page 226, chapter 307,) which provides—

That from and after the 30th of June, 1870, rear-admirals on the retired list of the Navy who were retired as captains, when the highest grade in the Navy was captain, at the age of sixty-two years, or after forty-five years' service, and who after retirement were promoted to the grade of rear-admiral and performed the duties of that grade in time of war, shall, when not on duty, be entitled to and receive the pay of rear-admirals on the retired list.

How beautifully they jumped over that provision of the law that no man's pay should be increased above the grade at which he was placed upon the retired list; in other words, that there should be no increase of pay by reason of promotion on the retired list! The law was so framed as to bear splendidly upon these men, and by this simple act Rear-Admiral Sands received pay on the retired list from June 30, 1870, going back for two years, at the rate of $3,000 per annum. We have now got him up to $3,000.

We come next to the crowning glory of the Appropriations Committee. We come to the great measure of this Appropriations Committee in the past. We come now to see the great work that the committee has accomplished in the years that have gone by, and judging from that we may well judge whether it is wise to commit everything to their hands. We come to the act of March 3, 1873. I wish to call the attention of my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] to the fact that he was then in the other branch of Congress, a bright and shining light and the great leader of his party, working for reform.

Mr. HALE. As the Senator has shown that all those acts increasing the pay of naval officers were obtained by them on appropriation bills, is it not fair now that we should try to cut them down on an appropriation bill?

Mr. ROLLINS. I have shown one single act up to this time on an appropriation bill, an iniquitous act, and now I propose to show the crowning act of all, and if you want to reform it on an appropriation bill put it in this.

Mr. BECK. Is the Senator referring to the act of 1870?

Mr. ROLLINS. I am referring to the act of 1873.

Mr. ALLISON. What date?

Mr. ROLLINS. March 3, 1873, making appropriations for the Navy. It is the first section of the act.

Mr. BECK. I wish to make one suggestion. I have not looked into the matter; but suppose it should turn out that all these matters were sent by the Committee on Naval Affairs at that time to the Committee on Appropriations for action, which committee would the Senator blame?

Mr. ROLLINS. I will answer the Senator that I should blame both.

Mr. BECK. If the Committee on Naval Affairs sent it to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. ROLLINS. I should blame both committees, certainly.

Mr. BECK. I do not know how that was.

Mr. ROLLINS. Nor do I know; but if the Senator will look it up and find it so, I will agree with him that both are to blame.

Mr. HALE. I remember the discussion very well.

Mr. ROLLINS. I wish to proceed by reading from the act of March 3, 1873, (volume 17, page 547, chapter 230,) making appropriations for the Navy. Section 1 contains the following:

Provided, That no officer on the retired list of the Navy shall be employed on active duty except in time of war: And provided, That those officers on the retired list, and those hereafter retired who were or who may be retired after forty years' service, or on attaining the age of sixty-two years in conformity with section 1 of the act of December, 1861, and its amendments dated June 25, 1864, or those who were or may be retired from incapacity resulting from long and faithful service, from wounds or injuries received in the line of duty, from sickness or exposure therein, shall after the passage of this act be entitled to 75 per cent. of the present sea pay of the grade or rank which they held at the time of their retirement. The rear-admirals provided for in the act of June 5, 1872, shall be considered as having been retired as rear-admirals.

Did you ever see anything more cunning, more beautifully dovetailed than that, and this all on an appropriation bill? By this simple act on an appropriation bill, in the very first section of the bill, the pay of Rear-Admiral Sands was increased from $3,000 a year to $4,500 a year. This is one of the reforms of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. Let me say to the Senator here that I have just looked up the debate, and I find that the provision he charges to the Committee on Appropriations was moved by the Committee on Naval Affairs and put by them on the appropriation bill.

Mr. ROLLINS. That is very likely. That may be true, but they had a Committee on Appropriations then perhaps in the House which listened to suggestions from the Committee on Naval Affairs. It may have been that the Committee on Naval Affairs made a great mistake in this matter, and they had influence with that great committee over there at that time and adopted this unwise provision. It was done upon an appropriation bill, and it could not have been done had it not been upon an appropriation bill. Hence I say this sort of legislation is vicious in the extreme.

Mr. HALE. What I meant to say is that it was moved by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs in the Senate, and he was Mr. Cragin, the predecessor of my friend from New Hampshire. The act he is reading and charging the Committee on Appropriations with was moved in the Senate by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Senator's predecessor, and put on by the Senate. The Committee on Appropriations was not responsible for it in the least. The Committee on Naval Affairs put on this increase.

Mr. ROLLINS. The Committee on Appropriations were responsible for it of course; they adopted it, they stood by it, they helped to pass it through the Senate, and in the conference which came on afterward, as I have no doubt there was a conference committee, the Committee on Appropriations stood by that amendment. I do not care whether it was moved by the Senator from New Hampshire or from Illinois, in my judgment it was vicious and wrong.

Mr. ALLISON. It was moved by the Naval Committee.

Mr. ROLLINS. I do not care if it was moved by the Naval Committee, that does not alter the fact.

I have gathered together here the various acts which relate to this matter of the retired list. The other laws relating to various officers on the retired list are as follows. Act of February 21, 1861, (volume 12, page 150, section 3) provides—

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to place on a retired list any medical officer of the Navy who is now or may hereafter be proved to be permanently incapable, from physical or mental infirmity, of further service at sea; and the pay of officers so retired shall be the leave-of-absence pay of their respective grades as it existed prior to the passage of the act of Congress to regulate the pay of the Navy, approved June 1, 1860.

Section 14, act of July 16, 1862, provides—

That there may be allowed upon the retired list nine rear-admirals and eighteen commodores. The rear-admirals shall be selected by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate from those captains who have given the most faithful service to their country. The eighteen commodores shall be recommended from the list of captains by an advisory board of admirals.

Act of April 21, 1864, (volume 13, page 53, chapter 63:)

An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish and equalize the grade of line officers of the United States Navy," approved July 16, 1862.

Section 1 provides for boards to examine officers for promotion, and section 4 provides—

And all officers whose cases shall have been acted upon by the aforesaid boards and who shall not have been recommended for promotion by both of them shall be placed upon the retired list.

Section 7 provides—

That the retired pay of surgeons, paymasters, engineers, and other staff officers in the Navy shall be the same as that of the line of the Navy with whom they have relative rank.

The act of June 25, 1864 (volume 13, page 183, chapter 152) provides—

That the first section of the act of the 21st of December, 1861, entitled "An act to promote the efficiency of the Navy," shall not be so construed as to retire any officer under the age of sixty-two years, and whose name shall not have been borne upon the Navy Register for a period of forty-five years after he had arrived at the age of sixteen years.

The act of March 2, 1867, (volume 14, page 515, chapter 174, section 9,) authorized the promotion of all officers on the retired list as their several dates on the active list were promoted.

In 1867 all officers then on the retired list were promoted to the grades held by officers of their respective dates on the active list, but did not receive a higher rate of pay by reason of such promotion. In other words, their pay remained as that of the grade in which they were retired.

A joint resolution of July 1, 1870, (volume 16, page 384,) provides—

That a vote of thanks by Congress to any officer of the Navy shall be held to affect such officer only; and when, as an incident thereof, an officer who would otherwise be retired has been or is retained on the active list such retention shall not interfere with the regular promotion of others who would otherwise have been entitled by law to promotion; and where any officer has already been retired to a grade lower than he would have been had the provisions of this law been in force he shall be entitled to the same position as if they had been in force at the time of his retirement, &c.

The act of March 3, 1871, (volume 16, page 537, chapter 117, section 11,) provides—

That officers of the medical, pay, and engineer corps, chaplains and professors of mathematics, and also constructors, who shall have served faithfully for forty-five years, shall, when retired, have the relative rank of commodore; and officers of these several corps who have been or shall be retired at the age of sixty-two years, before having served for forty-five years, but who shall have served faithfully until retired, on the completion of forty years from their entry into the service, shall also from that time have the relative rank of commodore; and staff officers who have been or shall be retired for causes incident to the service before arriving at sixty-two years of age shall have the same rank on the retired list as pertained to their position on the active list: Provided, however, That nothing contained in this section shall be construed to increase the pay now provided for said several staff officers.

Section 12 provides that—

Officers of the staff now on the retired list shall have the rank thereon to which they would have been entitled had they remained in the active list, unless they shall be entitled to higher rank.

All the above laws are now embodied in the Revised Statutes.

I wish to make a few suggestions further. If it had not been for certain criticisms made by members of the Committee on Appropriations at the time I should not have presumed to occupy the attention of the Senate as I have done. My attention was first attracted to the remarks of the Senator from Kentucky. I hope he is present. As he is not here, I will take the remarks of the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN.] The Senator from Illinois said:

I want to say, in order to relieve the mind of any person who may be alarmed about it, that many attempts have been made to reorganize the Army and the Navy, and there is an influence around Washington City which has always prevented the reorganization of the Army or Navy except on an appropriation bill. I say to Senators now that they cannot name a reorganization of the Army from the war to the present time which has not been done on an appropriation bill, for the very reason that every attempt which has been made legitimately to do it has found an influence that defeated it either in one House or the other. That is the only way the Army has ever been reorganized, and so with the Navy.

I take square issue with the Senator from Illinois in his statement of the case. It is not the only way in which the Navy has been reorganized.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. I said since the war. Mr. ROLLINS. Since the war or the commencement of the war? The one is broader than the other.

Mr. LOGAN. I said that since the war the organization of the Navy has taken place on appropriation bills, and I say so still.

Mr. ROLLINS. The organization of the Navy which was made during the war, when we found ourselves in a condition where we must reorganize the Navy, was not made on an appropriation bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I did not say so. The Senator will see if he will read my statement again that I said that since the war no reorganization of either the Army or the Navy had taken place except on an appropriation bill, and I said the reason for it was the influence around Washington City. That is what I said, and I say so still, and it is true, and history bears me out.

Mr. ROLLINS. I supposed when the Senator said "from the war" he meant from the commencement of the war.

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir; I meant since the war.

Mr. ROLLINS. How many reorganizations of the Navy have there been since the war? None except one, and that was only a partial reorganization. I did not suppose the Senator meant to bring it down to a period since the war. The reorganization of the Navy occurred during the war. That was the reorganization which was effectual; and it was justified by the then condition of affairs; and that reorganization of the Navy did not take place upon an appropriation bill. After the war I admit in one instance there was a partial reorganization of the Navy, but no thorough, radical, and complete reorganization of the Navy as is contemplated in this bill, and the Senator from Illinois and no member of the Committee on Appropriations can find it.

Mr. LOGAN. I presume the object of this discussion is to get at the truth. That ought to be at least the object of all discussion. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that in 1862 the Congress of the United States passed a law increasing the rank of the Navy. That was the reorganization of the Navy during the war. After the war I said, and I say now, there never has been a reorganization of the Navy in any shape or form except on an appropriation bill, and that has been at the suggestion of the Naval Committee for the reason that they could not pass such a measure in any other way. That is the fact about it, and the record shows it.

Mr. ROLLINS. That does not change what I said, that there has been no real organization of the Navy upon an appropriation bill. There was a partial reorganization since the war, but none that was real. I now wish to call the attention of the Senate to some remarks made by the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.]

Mr. BAYARD. Before the Senator reads that, will he state when the law was changed so as to admit an officer placed upon the retired list at a certain rank and with the pay of that rank, being wholly out of duty, to receive an increased pay as of an increased grade, as in the case of the advance to which the Senator has referred, where the pay of a man retired say at $2,000, when he is out of the service, is increased to $4,500? When did that become the law?

Mr. ROLLINS. I will state that the law forbids at the present time any increase of pay by reason of promotion on the retired list. I have looked carefully into the matter and there will appear in the RECORD the laws which were passed with reference to officers on the retired list, which increased the pay of Rear-Admiral Sands, who now heads the list, from $1,738 a year up to $4,500. The law still remains on the statute-book that there shall be no increase of pay by reason of promotion on the retired list. It has been done by a series of special acts of Congress, part of them on appropriation bills and part of them not, all of them cunningly devised to increase the pay of naval officers upon the retired list apparently without a violation of law.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator alluded to the act of 1870. That was put on by the Naval Committee, discussed by the Naval Committee, modified by the Naval Committee, and agreed to by the Senate, the rules then being different from what they are now, allowing committees to put legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. ROLLINS. So might the Senator say if by any good luck any single solitary amendment should be adopted by the Committee on Appropriations which has been suggested by the Committee on Naval Affairs to this bill, which has not been the case up to this time, it might be trotted out years after to relieve the Committee on Appropriations from the responsibility of the attempt to reorganize the Navy on an appropriation bill. I say it is not fair treatment, and the Committee on Appropriations should be held responsible for that which they support, whether it is recommended by the Committee on Naval Affairs or any other committee of this body.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator agrees with me that when a man is put on the retired list with a certain rank he ought not to receive an increase of pay over and above that rank?

Mr. ROLLINS. I agree to that.

Mr. LOGAN. If there is any remedy for that, let us see what it is. The only remedy for it is to repeal the law that allows men to be promoted on the retired list, so as to keep them at the rank they were retired on. This bill does that thing precisely. Is there any objection to doing it?

Mr. ROLLINS. I will tell the Senator the remedy. Strike out all the legislation on this subject that you have heretofore put on the appropriation bills, and then you will remedy a very large share of the difficulty.

I want to come back to my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] who said on Monday, when this list was presented:

I only rose to say that whatever there may be of irregularity, and however much I may have differed with the Senator from Illinois, and I believe I generally differ with him, there has never been a man connected with either House who has so boldly and audaciously, if I may use the word, endeavored to correct abuses in both the Army and Navy, and he has done it, I think, pretty efficiently, as the Senator from Illinois. I would rather follow him generally than any committee I know.

That is good. I am glad to know that the Senator from Kentucky has concluded to follow the lead of my honorable friend from Illinois, but in the past I have not seen him following his lead in vari-ons noted cases; for instance, the Fitz-John Porter case, and more recently the Hennepin Canal; and I am led to believe he will not even follow his lead upon the knit-goods question; I am afraid he will not. He has made this lead with great audacity, and now I want to say to my friend from Illinois right here to be very careful, as he is the file-leader of the Senator from Kentucky, where he leads him. Do not undertake to lead him into the Republican camp. He is too combustible, too explosive. The Senator from Kentucky also says:

I made the remark because if the naval appropriation bill is wrong, the Senate will have a clear chance to correct it the very moment it is brought up, and it would have been brought up to-day, in my opinion, but for the sickness of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] who has charge of it and who knows more about it than all of us put together.

That is it; the Senator says it is true.

Mr. BECK. Yes; and I do not exclude the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. ROLLINS. Now, I want to say a word about that.

Mr. BECK. If the Senator from New Hampshire—

Mr. ROLLINS. I ask the Senator to allow me to go on. I do not believe there is a single member of the Committee on Naval Affairs who desires to take issue with the Senator from Kentucky. We all admit that you know more about naval affairs than all the rest of us put together. We all admit that you not only know more about naval affairs but you know more about military affairs; you know more about finance; you know more about all those matters. We concede it. We would not for one single moment make an issue with the honorable Senator from Kentucky, but what we object to is that this fact, so injurious to us, proclaiming our great ignorance of this matter, should be placed upon the record and go down to posterity to be read by those who will come after us. That is what we object to.

Any one would suppose that the Committee on Appropriations was a mutual admiration society. They get up here on the floor of the Senate, and the Senator from Kentucky proclaims to the world that on naval affairs the Senator from Maine knows more than all the rest of us put together. The Senator from Maine will get up and proclaim in a like way at the proper time no doubt that the Senator from Kentucky knows more about the internal-revenue tax upon whisky and tobacco than anybody else in the body, and if he does not include knit goods I shall be very much mistaken. Then some other member of the committee will get up and say that my friend upon my right, the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] know more about Indian affairs than anybody else. I think they do, but we do not like to have it proclaimed from the house-tops.

I am satisfied they will compliment my friend here before me, [Mr. ALLISON,] and say he knows more about the silver question and finances generally than all of us put together. Let me see if I omitted any member of the committee, there are so many of them. My friend from Massachusetts will get up and proclaim that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] knows more about bookkeeping, especially in the Treasury Department, than all the rest of us put together, and we would all agree to that. Some other Senator would say that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] knew more about objecting than any and all of us put together, and I guess we would agree to that.

But the Senator from Illinois says there can be no reorganization of the Navy or the Army except on appropriation bills.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President—

Mr. ROLLINS. I ask the Senator from Illinois to allow me one moment to state my proposition. I admit that it is very difficult in this body to get its attention to important legislation while the Committee on Appropriations assumes the right to control action on all great questions. While they undertake to reorganize the Army or the Navy and the Pension Bureau upon an appropriation bill, and have the right of way in this body and the other, it is very difficult, in my judgment, as we all know, for any committee of this body to secure such attention of the Senate as would be necessary to pass a bill for the reorganization of the Navy.

In my judgment, the time has come when there should be some change in the rules, both of the Senate and of the House, so as to enable the majority instead of the minority to control legislation. In my judgment, the time has come when the business of Congress should be divided so that there should be more than one committee of the Senate and more than one committee of the House which may take up, carefully consider, and secure action upon a measure that is before it. That time, in my judgment, has arrived. I know it is said it would increase the appropriations in some directions if such a subdivision should take place, but I say that this session of Congress has proved to this body and to the country that some change is absolutely necessary.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question, inasmuch as he has directed his remarks particularly toward myself. Does he not believe that there is a necessity for some organization of the Navy other than there is at present?

Mr. ROLLINS. I say yes; most emphatically.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well. Now—

Mr. ROLLINS. I did not give way for the Senator to make a speech.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not intend to do so.

Mr. ROLLINS. I have answered the Senator's questions squarely and fairly.

Mr. LOGAN. Now then—

Mr. ROLLINS. I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire declines to yield further.

Mr. LOGAN. I wish to ask just another question.

Mr. ROLLINS. Go ahead.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator has now admitted that there is needed some reorganization of the Navy. I ask the Senator why the Naval Committee has not proceeded to do that during the present session?

Mr. ROLLINS. The Naval Committee have proceeded to discuss and consider that matter and have reported a bill on that subject, but they have not been able to get the attention of the Senate to it for the reason I have suggested, because by the rules adopted in both branches of Congress the Committee on Appropriations are able to absorb the time practically of Congress remaining for the consideration of these important measures after the committees have matured their bills and reported them; and when they submit a bill here in the Senate and pile their amendments up high, then it goes to a committee of conference, so that the material and important parts of legislation are shaped and controlled by three members of the House and three of the Senate; and I here enter my protest against this sort of proceeding being continued indefinitely. I say the time has come, in my judgment, when the majority should rule and be held responsible for the laws that are passed, and when there should be such a subdivision of the labors of Congress as will enable the Naval Committee and the Military Committee and the Pension Committee and the other important committees of this body to have their fair share and voice in controlling and shaping legislation.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator permit me to ask him if the first six months of this session were not exhausted before the Appropriations Committee occupied any time; and what were the other committees that now complain about the operations of the Appropriations Committee doing during that period?

Mr. ROLLINS. I will give an answer if the Senate will indulge me in taking the time necessary, and I wish I had time to go into that matter fully. I could show you that for several months of the existence of this session of Congress the Committee on Naval Affairs on the part of the Senate has diligently tried to dispose of the many bills which have been referred to it having for their object the reconstruction of the Navy Register, and took up the matter of the reorganization of the Navy at the earliest practicable moment, gave it diligent attention, reported several important bills, have sent to the Committee on Appropriations amendment after amendment for their consideration, and not one single suggestion of the Committee on Naval Affairs has met with the approbation of that committee, which contains all the wisdom in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. PLUMB. But is it not still open to the Committee on Naval Affairs to propose those amendments in the Senate and take the judgment not alone of the Committee on Appropriations but of all the Senate?

Mr. ROLLINS. I will come to that, and I thank the Senator from Kansas for the suggestion contained in that question. What is the usual manner of procedure by the Committee on Appropriations? They put on an appropriation bill any legislation on any subject whatever, no matter what.

Mr. HALE. I beg pardon—

Mr. ROLLINS. I beg your pardon. I do not want all of the Appropriation Committee at me at once.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest that the better method is to address the Chair, and let the Chair ascertain whether the Senator entitled to the floor will yield to an interruption.

Mr. ROLLINS. I want to answer one at a time. They are so much more competent and so much wiser than I am that I do not feel able to deal with the whole Committee on Appropriations at once.

Mr. HALE. But do not make any such statement as that.

Mr. ROLLINS. As what?

Mr. HALE. That the Committee on Appropriations go to work and put on any amendment they please.

Mr. ROLLINS. That I think is the fact. They put all the amendments they desire on a bill in the Appropriations Committee room and then bring them into the Senate, and a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs or of some other committee does what? Gets up here in the innocence of his heart and moves an amendment. Forthwith the member of the Committee on Appropriations who has the bill in charge rises and makes the point of order that it is new legislation; it is this and that; and out it goes. What power has the Senate of the United States when members of the Committee on Appropriations make these points of order? The title of this bill is all wrong. It should be "a bill to reorganize the Navy and making appropriations therefor."

I presume that when this bill comes up for consideration, paragraph by paragraph, the Committee on Appropriations will do what? If I rise in my place and move an amendment looking in the same direction of reform in which they are going, they will make the point of order on the amendment and out it goes. Right here let me say that I am in favor, earnestly in favor of nearly all the reforms that are in this bill—

Mr. LOGAN. Which bill?

Mr. ROLLINS. In the bill which you have reported.

Mr. LOGAN. Then why do you object to it?

Mr. ROLLINS. You do not wait until I get through. I am objecting to the modus operandi.

Mr. LOGAN. That is it.

Mr. ROLLINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask the Senator from New Hampshire, before he sits down and yields the floor, at a convenient time to allow me to make an explanation of something that he has said?

Mr. ROLLINS. Certainly.

Mr. BECK. Perhaps I can do it now as well as at any other time.

Mr. ROLLINS. Very well.

Mr. BECK. I did not expect to say a word about the naval appropriation bill, because the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] as I said before and repeat now, knows more about this bill, I think, than all the rest of us put together. I did not mean to say that he knew more about naval affairs generally, but about this bill. I have entire confidence that he knows all about it, whether it is right or wrong, and can defend his position.

While sitting here, just as I was about to go to the room of the Committee on Appropriations with the chairman to look over some matters in the sundry civil bill, I heard my name used in connection with a list furnished of admirals on the retired list. I happened to inquire of the very intelligent Secretary of the Navy one evening when he was before us about this matter, and he explained it in the committee-room. I then wrote him a note and he sent the list with his letter, and that is all I know about it.

Mr. ROLLINS. I am very glad the Senator did it. I thank him for it.

Mr. BECK. I am only sorry that the Committee on Naval Affairs had not acted upon it before this time. But while sitting here I heard the Senator use this expression: that after the act of 1870 was passed, the crowning act of infamy—I think that was the language—on the part of the Committee on Appropriations was the act of March 3, 1873, in regard to retiring officers and putting up their pay.

Mr. ROLLINS. I did not use the word "infamy."

Mr. BECK. It was a very strong expression, something of that sort. I at once left the Senate Chamber and went to the Document Room and the Library, and saw what that statute meant, and I have all the facts.

That bill, which passed on the 3d of March, 1873, was reported by the honorable Senator from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] then a member of the Committee on Appropriations in the House, a clean bill for the support of the Navy without any legislation that I am able to find. The House of Representatives passed the bill, and I have that copy as well, signed by Mr. McPHERSON, then Clerk of the House, equally clear of all legislation. It came to the Senate. It was reported back on the 30th day of January, 1873, by Mr. Cole, then a member of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, also, I think, very clear of any bad legislation. I find none; some few changes but nothing very important.

It came before the Senate, and Mr. Cragin, then chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, on the 14th of February, 1873, offered the following amendment, which is the proviso now in the law—

Mr. ROLLINS. All that has been brought out by a member of the Committee on Appropriations before.

Mr. BECK. I was not present; but here are the official records.

Mr. ROLLINS. I understand it.

Mr. BECK. Let us see what he said and how it was done. It was done on the solicitation of officers of the Navy, and pressed upon the Senate by them on the floor of the Senate. Mr. Cragin said:

Mr. CRAGIN. I offer the following amendment, to come in on page 2, at the close of the seventeenth line:

"That no officer on the retired list of the Navy shall be employed on active duty except in time of war: Provided, That those officers on the retired list, and those hereafter retired, who were, or who may be, retired after forty years' service, or on attaining the age of sixty-two years, in conformity with section 1 of the act of December, 1861, and its amendments, dated June 25, 1864, or those who were or may be retired from incapacity resulting from long and faithful service, from wounds or injuries received in the line of duty, from sickness or exposure therein, in conformity with the twenty-third section of the act of August 3, 1861, shall, after the passage of this act, be entitled to 75 per cent. of the present sea pay of the grade or rank which they held at the time of their retirement. And the rear-admirals provided for in the act of June 5, 1872, shall be considered as having been retired as rear-admirals."

The first part of this amendment is a bill that passed the House of Representatives some time ago, I think at the last or second session of this Congress, forbidding the employment of retired officers upon active duty. It came to the Senate, and the Committee on Naval Affairs agreed to the House bill with an amendment providing that officers on the retired list who have been honorably retired, those who have been retired on account of length of service, or in consequence of sickness or wounds or disability incurred in the line of duty, should, after the passage of this bill, be entitled to 75 per cent. of the highest pay of their grade as retired officers, putting them on the same footing with the retired officers of the Army. I am sure that this amendment will commend itself to the judgment of every Senator.

Then he goes on; and these are the words I care especially to call attention to as explaining why $70,000 a year was added to the expense of the retired list in this way:

At the present time quite a portion of the retired officers are upon active duty; they are officers who are poor, whose circumstances make it necessary that they should receive the active-duty pay, and through themselves and their friends, members of Congress and others, they are put upon active duty. There are plenty of officers upon the active list to perform all the duties of that list; and it seems to be right and proper that the officers on the retired list should not be put upon active duty except in time of war. But in order to provide for their necessities we propose to increase their retired pay from 50 per cent. to 75 per cent. of their active-duty pay, which is the same proportion as is received by the retired officers of the Army.

I want to say, further, that I have had a calculation made at the Pay Department of the Navy, and as the Navy Register now stands this provision will not make an increase of over $70,000 per annum, for the reason that quite a large number of retired officers are now on active duty receiving the highest pay. This amendment will put them off active duty, by which they cannot receive that highest pay; so that deducting that from the increase this amendment would otherwise make, it will only add about $70,000 to the expense.

I have before me letters from the most prominent officers of the Navy urging the passage of this amendment. Admiral Porter says that it is the most important measure for the Navy that has been proposed for years; and so do many other of the best and ablest officers. I hope there will be no objection to the amendment, and that it may be adopted.

Mr. ROLLINS. I did not suppose the Senator from Kentucky proposed to make a speech.

Mr. BECK. When you allege bad conduct on the part of the Committee on Appropriations, I propose to prove that the charge is not justified by the fact, and I am proving it very conclusively, and I insist now that I shall be allowed to make the proof in the face of such charges as the Senator has made.

Mr. ROLLINS. How much time will the Senator occupy?

Mr. BECK. I intend to occupy time enough to prove that you have made a false charge.

Mr. ROLLINS. I claim the floor.

Mr. BECK. Then I will sit down and take the floor again and prove it more abundantly.

Mr. ROLLINS. I have no occasion to argue with reference to the reason which led to this legislation, nor am I called on to animadvert on the fact that my predecessor here, Senator Cragin, who was chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, listened to the advice of naval officers. He said his motion was on the advice of the naval officers, and he came here and moved to increase the pay of officers of the retired list from one-half to three-fourths of the highest sea pay. I say the fact that that was moved by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, that it was put through the Senate under those circumstances, does not lessen the responsibility of the Committee on Appropriations in the least. They knew very well that unless it was put upon an appropriation bill the increase of the pay of the naval officers would not be had during the then session of Congress.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senate put it on.

Mr. ROLLINS. The Senate put it on and the Committee on Appropriations I have no doubt at the time agreed to it.

Mr. LOGAN. The Committee on Appropriations had reported the bill without it, and the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs reported it as an amendment at the suggestion of the officers of the Navy, and so it appears that it was done according to their direction.

Mr. ROLLINS. I simply state the fact, and what has been stated does not go at all to controvert my position, that this wicked and vicious legislation has been had upon appropriation bills. That is what I said. I did not say who offered it. I did not say who moved it. I did not undertake to argue that it was not brought in by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. I simply stated the broad, square fact that on appropriation bills you had enacted this vicious and iniquitous legislation. That is what I said, and I should like to find the Senator who takes issue with me on that point.

Mr. LOGAN. I take issue.

Mr. ROLLINS. It was on appropriation bills, and the record substantiates what I have said.

Mr. LOGAN. Of course it was.

Mr. ROLLINS. I insist on having the floor.

Mr. LOGAN. Go on.

Mr. ROLLINS. I have been led to say a great many things that I would not have said and to lengthen my remarks very much by reason of these constant interruptions.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will my friend allow me to make a suggestion. I do not wish to interrupt him, but to make a suggestion. Suppose that all the Senator from Kentucky says is true, that the Senator's predecessor came in here with a provision of this kind in the Senate of the United States and as a member of the Naval Committee and with the consent of the Senate put this provision on the bill, what does that prove with respect to the rule? The Senate by consent can do anything. Does that relieve us of the obligation of standing by the rules of the Senate in this case?

Mr. BECK. Does that authorize the Senator's colleague on the Naval Committee to charge the Committee on Appropriations with being usurpers when your own committee put this on in spite of them?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It does not appear that he did it as the organ of the committee.

Mr. BECK. It does; it appears by what he said himself that the proposition was offered by him as the organ of his committee.

Mr. ROLLINS. I do not believe that either member of the Committee on Appropriations will take issue with the statement I made, namely, that these legislative measures were on appropriation bills. That was all I said. The Senator from Illinois claims that all the valuable and desirable features of the reorganization in the Navy Department were had upon appropriation bills. Let me make one reference for his benefit.

The act of July 15, 1870, making appropriations for the Navy, &c., fixed the pay of the officers of the Navy generally, both on the active and retired lists; it also contained clauses relating to the retirement and promotion of officers in the Navy, reducing and fixing the number of officers in certain grades of the line and staff; also provisions in regard to the appointment of midshipmen; repealing acts authorizing the appointment of temporary active officers of the Navy; and fixing the pay of chiefs of bureaus. That was all the general reorganization that took place on the act of July 15, 1870.

The act of March 3, 1871, making appropriations for the Navy, &c., fixed the number and established the grades and relative rank of the officers of the various staff corps of the Navy, not touching the line.

The act of March 3, 1873, making appropriations for the Navy, &c., contained clauses providing that no officer on the retired list shall be employed on active duty except in time of war, and fixed the retired pay in certain cases at 75 per cent.

That is all the work looking to a reorganization of the Navy in part, so far as I can learn, that has been accomplished on appropriation bills since 1835, perhaps since the foundation of the Government.

Now, Mr. President, I do not purpose to go over this bill, for there are a great many features of the bill with which I am entirely satisfied. So far as it looks to a reasonable reduction I agree to it, if it can be brought about in a proper way. I suggest, however, that the original proposition of the Committee on Appropriations looking to the reduction of the various corps in the Navy is not quite reasonable, and the committee have discovered that and it is modified. As that proposition originally stood it would have required three captains to be promoted or retired for the promotion of one commander; nine captains and three commanders to enable one lieutenant-commander to be promoted; and twenty-seven captains—

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me—

Mr. ROLLINS. Allow me to finish this statement.

Mr. HALE. It is right on this point.

Mr. ROLLINS. I decline to yield until I have said a few words more.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator know that I have offered an amendment?

Mr. ROLLINS. I have stated that to the Senate distinctly and emphatically.

Mr. HALE. Then do not make any point on that.

Mr. ROLLINS. I purpose to make my own speech and not allow the Senator from Maine to make it for me.

It would require that twenty-seven captains, nine commanders, and three lieutenant-commanders should be promoted or retired in order that one lieutenant should be promoted; that eighty-one captains, twenty-seven commanders, nine lieutenant-commanders, and three lieutenants be promoted or retired that one master might be promoted; that two hundred and forty-three captains, eighty-one commanders, twenty-seven lieutenant-commanders, nine lieutenants, three masters, and one ensign be promoted or retired that a midshipman might be promoted.

That was a proper comment on the bill before it was amended or proposed to be amended by the Committee on Appropriations, and I did not know until the Senator from Maine took the floor this morning that he had any proposition to change the plan as the committee originally submitted it. Hence I suggest that my criticism upon the bill is a fair and just one.

I want to see, as I said before, some intelligent reduction of the officers of the Navy. I think there is abundant reason for it unless we largely increase the number of ships; and with this bill it may be possible that there may be some step taken under it to reconstruct the Navy; but I suggest that the appropriations contained in the bill are not sufficient and are not what we ought to have. In view of the appropriation for rivers and harbors, nearly $20,000,000, I submit that we ought to appropriate more money for the reconstruction of the Navy.

Mr. President, I will withhold what further I have to say with regard to this bill until the paragraphs are reached upon which I wish to make some comment. I will not undertake to go over the bill at this time, but will give way, and at the proper time I shall submit some further remarks in regard to it.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I thought when the Senator from New Hampshire allowed me to make an explanation that I was to have the right to finish it or I would not have spoken at all in his time. I desire now to finish what I was saying, so that he may know exactly what the truth was and take back, as I knew he would have to do, the charges he had made so violently against the Committee on Appropriations.

The last part of his speech, when read as printed in the RECORD, contrasted with the first will show how mildly he had to draw his conclusions after the vehement charges he made in the first instance. I will leave that to the RECORD.

You would have thought when he began relative to that infamous bill of March 3, 1873, that the Committee on Appropriations were a set of usurpers, and that I was in the House when it took place, and that we were all seeking to overthrow all right and all authority. After I heard my name mentioned I went at once to hunt up the record and see what the truth of the case was. I knew that was not the habit of that committee. I found the Senator from Maine had reported the bill clear of all legislation in the House, and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate had agreed to it, and the Committee on Naval Affairs, through its chairman, acting as the Committee on Naval Affairs, inserted all the legislation on the bill which he charged was so infamous and which he charged the Committee on Appropriations with being responsible for.

Why, sir, here is another provision in that same bill, introduced by Mr. Cragin, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, an "amendment proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 3351) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1874, and for other purposes," namely:

Insert the following:

"For the construction of eight steam-vessels of war, $3,200,000; this appropriation to be available from the passage of this act.

"For the construction of gas-works and piping at the Norfolk navy-yard, Portsmouth, Virginia, $10,000."

Turning to page 20 of the bill I find the following:

For the construction of eight steam-vessels of war, $3,200,000; this appropriation to be available from the passage of this act.

When the bill was reported by the House committee by Mr. HALE no such provision as that was in it. When it came back from the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate no such provision was in it. The Committee on Naval Affairs proposed the amendment I hold in my hand. The Senator from Florida says the then Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Cragin] was only a member of the Senate speaking for himself. He was chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs speaking for his committee, by authority of his committee, and as chairman of that committee and by authority of that committee he inserted both those provisions; and yet we are to be charged now as being usurpers!

Why, Mr. President, whatever there is that is legislation in this bill came from the House of Representatives. We had no right to make any point of order upon it. We have amended it, whether wisely or not is for the Senate to determine; but for the Committee on Naval Affairs now to move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to strike out that legislation is an unwarranted insult to the House of Representatives. We cannot do it; we have no right to do it; it is not the manly way to meet the propositions of the House. Whatever questions are introduced, whether they were put in rightfully or wrongfully, are not subject to a point of order here. They can be met on the floor of the Senate, and if a majority of the Senate see fit to strike them out the majority can strike out all that legislation, and instead of this motion being made to refer the bill back to us with instructions, when the question comes up on the legislation in the bill the proper course is to meet it, vote upon it, strike it out if a majority think it wrong. That is the only way to meet it.

Mr. FARLEY. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BECK. Yes.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Does the Senator believe this legislation on the appropriation bill is a correct way of legislating upon the subject?

Mr. BECK. I have never believed there ought to be any legislation on appropriation bills; I have resisted it; but I say a reference back to the Committee on Appropriations by motion of the Naval Committee is an insult to the House of Representatives. I ask the Senator from California if that is not true, and if the manly way to meet the legislation sent by the House, which they had the right to put in the bill so far as we are concerned, is not to meet it on the floor of the Senate?

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me to say here, in response to the Senator from California, that I hold in my hand [exhibiting a bundle] only a portion of the amendments that have been sent by Senators to the Committee on Appropriations on a bill that they are now considering, more than half of which require legislation that the Committee on Appropriations is asked to put upon this bill; and the Committee on Appropriations spends more than one-half of its time in resisting the demands of Senators who urge it to put legislation on these bills.

Only a little while ago I sat talking with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] on this very subject, when a Senator who has made himself foremost and vehement in opposing the legislation of the Committee on Appropriations sat down by my side here and began to importune me to put legislation on an appropriation bill, and when I resisted and told him we could not do it, that did not satisfy him, but it has been pushed since. And the Senator who has just taken his seat, who has arraigned the Committee on Appropriations, has submitted to the Committee on Appropriations more amendments asking legislation upon an appropriation bill than any Senator in this body, and the committee has felt itself bound to resist his importunities which have been "in season and out of season."

Mr. ROLLINS. Now I want to say a word about the interviews I had; I am entitled to a moment in response to the Senator from Maine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BECK. Oh, yes.

Mr. ROLLINS. The Senator from Maine undertook to assail me because of what? Because, in accordance with the instruction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I have offered several amendments to this bill and had them referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

What kind of a bill is this? This is not an appropriation bill in any reasonable sense; it is a bill for the reorganization of the Navy; and the Committee on Naval Affairs, understanding full well that in no other way could they have a voice in these amendments, instructed its various members to propose amendments. Now, gentlemen of the Appropriations Committee say I have importuned them "in season and out of season." I deny most emphatically the fact. I say I have not importuned the members of that committee either collectively or singly. I did go to the committee one morning with the Secretary of the Navy, at their suggestion, for I admit that I would not have dared to go there without their request or suggestion, and I did presume to make a single suggestion with reference to one amendment. I did occupy two or three minutes of the time of that wise committee. I admit I was not told in so many words, "You had better leave;" I was not; but I do say deliberately—

Mr. HALE. The Senator remembers that interview?

Mr. ROLLINS. The Senator does remember, and he remembers distinctly that interview, and he knows full well that he left that Committee on Appropriations with the idea thoroughly impressed on his mind that in their estimation that was no place for the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HALE. We could not grant all you wanted.

Mr. ROLLINS. Grant all I wanted! You have not granted a single thing that the Committee on Naval Affairs recommended, not one, and that is the history of this appropriation bill; and here they are lecturing our committee because we presume to offer amendments upon a bill that, one may say, has no appropriations in it really.

Mr. BECK. Now, are you through?

Mr. ROLLINS. That depends on circumstances.

Mr. BECK. I mean in my time. I did not want to stop you.

Mr. ROLLINS. Go ahead.

Mr. BECK. I desired the Senator to get through. I was about closing and about to yield the floor to the Senator from Illinois with this single remark, that having examined the charge made against us so distinctly and so fiercely and shown that there was nothing in it, that not only was it the merest babble but that it was not true in any sense at all and that the Senator did not know what he was talking about—having exposed all that, I only want to add that nine-tenths of the bad legislation that gets into appropriation bills is put there by other committees and other members, and if gentlemen only knew what the Committee on Appropriations have to resist they would have more sympathy with them when they come to see with what they have to deal. I deny all the taunts made at us about having more knowledge than anybody else. Of course, the country understands that. But I will say that the Committee on Appropriations have looked at all these matters coolly and deliberately, and they are well calculated to do it—better perhaps than some of the other committees; and why?

When the Senate is organized in accordance with an administration, what is the proper duty of the party controlling it? To go to the Secretary of War and say: "Mr. Secretary of War, we want to give you a fair representation; we want to have on our Military Committee men you can consult with, men you can confide in, men who know the affairs of your Department;" and he ought to be allowed to select a majority of the men on that committee; so ought the Secretary of the Navy as to the Naval Committee; and so ought the Postmaster-General as to the Post-Office Committee, and so ought all the other heads of Departments as to the committees concerned with the business of their Departments.

The enemies of the men who are at the heads of those Departments ought not to be put on the committees in charge of their duties; and what follows? Those committees naturally feel that it is their duty, that they are appointed on purpose to see that full justice is done to that Department which they especially represent. They do not become attorneys exactly, but they are placed there because they are the friends of the Department, and they endeavor to get all they can for their particular Department. Then they come before the Committee on Appropriations, appointed without relation to any particular Department of the Government, where all come in conflict, and then some such division has to be made as to do decent justice to all, perhaps not giving to any one all that it wants, but giving a fair share so as to keep the expenditures within the revenues at a decent limit, and in that regard the Committee on Appropriations does play an important part in the legislation of this body, and only in that regard.

I have never known a member of it to usurp anything. I have served on the Committee on Appropriations in the other House and here for a long time, and I see members all around me who have so served; and the Senator from New Hampshire, when he speaks of our personal relations to each other in a very funny way, speaks truly. No politics ever went into the Committee on Appropriations, and the members, Republicans and Democrats, on the business matters of that committee work together for the good of the service, in my opinion, as earnestly as if they all belonged to one political party. We reserve our quarrels for the floor of the Senate and for other places, and I think it is rather a compliment to us that we do that rather than to be coming here and constantly quarreling. I always repel any insinuation of any interference on the part of that committee, and that is the only excuse I have for saying so much now.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I desire, if I can have the attention of the Senate for a short time, to discuss the questions that are in the bill and not those that are outside of it.

First, I propose briefly to reply to what has been said by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. ROLLINS] in reference to the committee whence this bill came. If legislation comes before the Senate that is proper legislation that ought to be enacted into a law, I cannot understand the objection made to that legislation because of the fact that it comes from any particular committee. It seems to me that legitimate discussion in reference to bills and propositions before the Senate ought to be based on the right or wrong of the legislation that is attempted to be enacted by Congress.

I call the attention of the Senate to one fact. In all this discussion and all this wrangling about the Appropriations Committee on this bill has one Senator heard a single objection made to any one proposition that is in the bill? If any one has I should like to know what the objection is. I ask any Senator who is making war upon this bill to state one single objection he has to the propositions that the committee has reported in reference to the bill. If he has any, if I cannot answer them and answer them fairly, then I will give way and say that he is right and I am wrong.

That seems to me to be the proper way for us to discuss this measure. It came from the House on an appropriation bill, a portion of it recommended, as I understand, by the Naval Committee of the House. It was attached to the appropriation bill in the House of Representatives and it came to the Senate of the United States.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Attached in the House on the motion of a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir; and it came to the Senate of the United States, and was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. That committee took up the bill and examined its details on amendments coming from the Naval Committee, and where we thought the House had proposed improper legislation in reference to the Navy we changed it.

Now, I desire the Senator from New Hampshire to listen to what I am going to say, for what I shall say here will be in a spirit of kindness and generosity and not in a spirit of trying to maul somebody because he happened to report a proposition that I did not have the opportunity of reporting on.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. May I be permitted to ask a question?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Suppose the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate brought in a necessary appropriation for the Navy, reported it, does the Senator think no objection could be made to that beyond the question as to the necessity for the appropriation?

Mr. LOGAN. Most assuredly there could be an objection made to it. That is not a parallel case at all, and I am astonished the Senator should suggest such a proposition as a parallel case. If the Senator thinks the appropriations in this bill are incorrect, and he will explain to us that they are, I will vote with him to correct and amend them.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That is not the question.

Mr. LOGAN. But what is the question? The Naval Committee does not report appropriation bills. That is true. But suppose there was a naval bill before the Senate of the United States, and proper legislation was reported from that committee in reference to something that ought to be before another committee, when that committee had the matter referred to it by the action of the Senate, do you suppose I would vote against it merely because it was reported by the Naval Committee? I would not.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I wish the Senator to understand that I throw no blame on the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, but in a great Government like this, when one committee undertakes to trench upon the appropriate duties of another, it is the breaking up of all the safeguards and securities of the public service. You might as well undertake to remodel the judiciary establishment outside of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. LOGAN. That is all very easily said. It is very strange that Senators in their growling and grumbling and in their ill-natured manner—

Mr. JONES, of Florida. No grumbling.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well. They talk about committees usurping prerogatives that do not belong to them. Why, sir, this bill came from the House of Representatives, and it was the duty of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate to examine its propositions and either to agree to them or amend them; and when you insist that the Committee on Appropriations has gone beyond its legitimate power and authority, you insist on that which you have no right to insist on, for it has done no such thing. From the beginning of this Government down to the present day, when one House puts upon an appropriation bill a proposition, the other House considers it, and considers it fairly, and there has been no time when it has not been considered, and considered by the other House or by its committee to which it was referred.

Now, let me call the attention of the Senate to the statement made by the Senator from New Hampshire about the greatness and the grandeur and the magnificence and all that of this Committee on Appropriations. Why, sir, there is not a more humble set of men belonging to any committee in the Senate than those who are on the Committee on Appropriations. There is not, in my judgment, a more generous set of representatives than they are. They have not trenched upon the rights of the Senator from New Hampshire. The Senator from New Hampshire admits that the legislation is proper. He concedes that it is proper, but says it is on the wrong bill. Well, sir, to what extent are you to go?

Mr. ROLLINS. I said that much of the legislation proposed in this bill I was heartily in favor of.

Mr. LOGAN. But then you do not want it on this bill.

Mr. ROLLINS. I do not think it has any business here.

Mr. LOGAN. Exactly so; he is in favor of a portion of it, and the portion he is in favor of he wants stricken out of the bill.

Mr. ROLLINS. The Senator from Illinois will find out how much I am in favor of before we get through.

Mr. LOGAN. But he wants it all stricken out, that which he is in favor of and that which he objects to.

Mr. ROLLINS. The Senator from New Hampshire has not said anything of the kind.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator from New Hampshire has advocated the resolution of the chairman of his committee, and yet in the debate here he has admitted that much of the bill is proper legislation.

Mr. ROLLINS. I have not said a word about the resolution.

Mr. LOGAN. Then what were you talking about?

Mr. ROLLINS. I thought I made the Senator from Illinois understand. He tried to interrupt me a dozen times.

Mr. LOGAN. The resolution was before the Senate, and I supposed the Senator was advocating the passage of the resolution, which was to refer the bill back to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to strike from it the vicious legislation the Senator has referred to. Is not that the resolution which is before the Senate? Was he not advocating that resolution?

Now, then, according to the argument of the Senator, he is for the bill, but yet he is opposed to the committee that reported the bill. That is about the whole of it. This committee that usurps the power of the Senate we must trample under foot, we will not submit to any such usurpation as they have been engaged in! Therefore, no matter whether the legislation proposed is proper or improper, we will send it back because that committee are a committee of usurpers!

Well, sir, I learned in my boyhood that when any of my classmates mastered a subject that I had not, I had better yield to their mastery of that subject; and so I always accorded to them that which they were entitled to for doing it. If the Committee on Naval Affairs has failed for twenty years to report to the Senate of the United States a reorganization of the Navy that needs it so much, in God's name can its members stand here and sneer at a committee that does that duty to the country? Are they to stand here for all time and refuse to do that which the necessities of the country demand shall be done, and if done by others they say, "Oh, you are usurpers, we will not submit to any such proposition."

Sir, if the Naval Committee does not report a bill for the reorganization of the Navy if they believe it is proper to be done, and we do, let them show us wherein we are wrong, and not oppose it because it comes from a certain committee.

Now, sir, what objection do they make, and I demand to know of the Senators who are opposed to this proposition what it is they are opposed to?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator will excuse me. If no member of the committee will answer that question, I will give my views.

Mr. LOGAN. I shall be glad to hear them. I will patiently listen to any man who will state the objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Among other things I see this bill undertakes to abolish the entire grade of commodore. If there were no other reason than that—and I have many others—I would be opposed to it. This is a grade in our Navy, the most illustrious in its history, one that has shed more glory upon the naval history of this country than any other. Why, the very word "commodore" carries us back to Perry, to Truxton, to Decatur, and a whole host of noble men. The naval glories of this country are connected with the grade of commodore. I will never consent to strike that from the Navy list in the world.

Mr. LOGAN. That objection is just like the others that have been made and that I expect will be made. Ignorance of the history of our Navy has caused many men to fall into just exactly the error of my friend from Kentucky. Will any member of the Naval Committee stand up here and say that the grade of commodore ever existed in the Navy of the United States until 1862? There never was a Commodore Decatur or a Commodore Perry or a commodore anybody else in this country prior to 1862. Commodore Decatur and Commodore Perry and Commodore Truxton were captains in the Navy, called by the law commandants, and never had any higher rank. They got the name of commodore just as Commodore Garrison over in New York did, because he owned more than one ship. Commodore Decatur got it attached to him because he commanded a squadron, and not because he had any such title. My friend from Kentucky, with his genius, eloquence, and power, has forgotten—for I know he has read—the history, but it has passed from his mind. That is the only reason he fell into the error.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will say to my friend from Illinois that the word "commodore" means commander. I do not want to strike it from the Navy.

Mr. LOGAN. I think I know the meaning of the word "commodore;" but it never belonged to the Navy of the United States and never was attached to any man until 1862, when Congress thought during the war they would give a title to our Navy that the Navy had never had. I have not disputed with Senators around me whom I have heard say, "The English navy has commodores and our Navy has always had commodores." I did not dispute the statement, because I thought it would be probably improper in me to correct them. They might think they know more about it than I do, and perhaps it is so; but I say to my friends here—

Mr. WILLIAMS. Allow me to say that it may be true that the grade of commodore did not exist by law, yet the word "commodore" means commander, and by the unanimous voice of the whole American people those men who shed so much glory on the Navy were commodores.

Mr. LOGAN. Of course it means commander, but then we had no such word in our statutes. No such title ever existed until 1862.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It existed in fact.

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir; no more than the title of commodore attached to Garrison of New York. That never belonged to him. He was called commodore because he commanded ships. Commodore Vanderbilt and commodore everybody else were so called because they commanded ships. It is a title that belongs to men who command ships, civilians as well as naval officers. The English navy has no such rank.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There was no such rank in the Army as general until 1864, and yet the Senator from Illinois would be very loth to give up his title of "general."

Mr. COCKRELL. There has been the rank of brigadier-general and of major-general since the Army was founded.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But not General.

Mr. LOGAN. But when we made the rank of General we put in that law just what we propose in this, that when the term of the man expired who held the rank the rank should cease. The Senator from Kentucky asks why the rank of General was given in the Army? I was saying that when the rank of General was given in the Army, it being a rank that the Army in this country had never had before, Congress, in its wisdom, provided in the same law that when the officer holding that rank should die or resign or be retired the office should cease, and we should go back to the ranks that there had been in the Army for many years. That is the law now. So it is the law in regard to the Lieutenant-General. Although that applied to Lieutenant-General Scott, and that title was given to General Washington, yet we provided that the rank should cease in the Army when the officer who held it should die, resign, or be retired.

There is just such a provision in regard to commodores in this bill, it being a rank which never belonged to the Navy of the United States until the late war and a rank entirely unnecessary. There is no necessity on earth for it, except to give an extraordinary title to individuals.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. LOGAN. Let me finish and the Senator will understand me. We provide in this bill that the commodores shall not lose their rank; that they shall not cease to be commodores; but that when the time comes that the twenty-five commodores now on our list shall either resign, which they will never do, or be retired, or die, then the rank shall cease, but it does not apply to those now holding that rank.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator one question? I think perhaps I may misunderstand him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why should "commodore" be stricken from the naval vocabulary when we have Admiral and Vice-Admiral?

Mr. BUTLER. Did I understand the Senator from Illinois to say that the rank of commodore had never existed in the Navy until the war?

Mr. LOGAN. I do say that. I hope the Senator will not go into a discussion of that proposition.

Mr. BUTLER. I was only asking for information.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, it never existed until 1862; and if you will read all the statutes in reference to the commodores you mention you will find that they were commandants, and then afterward received the rank of captain, the highest rank they ever had in the Navy.

Mr. BUTLER. Why were they called "commodores?"

Mr. LOGAN. Why is Mr. Garrison called a commodore? That title is given to the man who sails ships and commands ships, but in the law the title never existed. How is it in the English navy? You find a great many people in the English navy called commodores, but the rank of commodore does not exist in the English navy. There are four persons in the English navy called commodores, and they are captains, but they are called commodores because they are what are known as fleet-captains. You find by examining the law that the only rank that was ever given in our Navy which distinguished a man who commanded more than one ship from anybody else was the title of fleet-captain—not commodore, but fleet-captain. A man who commanded a fleet was called the fleet-captain. That was the only title given in the law to a captain until 1862. In 1862, the rank of commodore was created, the rank of rear-admiral was created, and the rank of Vice-Admiral and Admiral were created for the purpose of putting men up into high places and giving them high salaries.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator has not answered my question. I asked why there was greater necessity for abolishing the rank of commodore than that of Admiral or Vice-Admiral?

Mr. LOGAN. I will give the reason for that. There are ten rear-admirals. We have five stations in the world that are stations where the command is large, and these rear-admirals are sent to command those stations. When they command a station there is no rank recognized as that of commander, except that of the officer commanding the station. These five stations are given to five rear-admirals, and when they are relieved the other five take command. These ten rear-admirals then, while in command, have charge of stations where our shipping goes. A commodore is a man who commands two ships or three ships. He is not the commander of a great fleet.

Mr. BUTLER. He can command a squadron.

Mr. LOGAN. I suppose he could. Captains have command of squadrons. Does the Senator want to reduce the rank of rear-admiral?

Mr. BUTLER. I think it a great deal better—

Mr. LOGAN. You do not disgust me at all, as far as that is concerned; but I am giving the reasons for what I do. I suppose if we had come in here with a reorganization of the Navy entirely we should have been put out of the Senate Chamber, judging from the attacks made upon us here for what we have done. We have done the smallest we could in order to economize and save money to the Government and try to reform our Navy as much as possible; but from the attacks made on us for that, I suppose if we had done what ought to be done we should have been put clear out of the Senate Chamber. If Senators who are so conversant with the Navy and know so much about commands and commanders and all those sorts of things that we do not know anything about will just tell us what ought to be done, we shall perhaps get something accomplished.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to ask a question for information. I ask why the committee provide that "hereafter all promotions to the grade of rear-admiral on the active list shall be made by selection from the grades of commodore and captain," instead of by promotion?

Mr. LOGAN. I will give the Senator the reason for that if the Senate will give me its attention.

The Senator from Delaware asks me why we provide that the rank of rear-admiral shall be filled by selection hereafter instead of by promotion, and why that selection shall be made from commodores and captains. If the Senator will examine the law as it stands he will see that the oldest commodore in the line is made a rear-admiral when a vacancy occurs. That is the law now. You cannot make anybody else a rear-admiral except a commodore. We extend that to captains, so as to make it more liberal, for the reason that captain being the highest rank in the Navy prior to 1862, that rank being composed of men having ability to exercise any command that belongs to the Navy, coming to that point, instead of contracting we extend it so as to include both captains and commodores in the selection for rear-admiral. Why make it by selection? I will give the reason for that. I believe in selection myself. I believe to-day if the policy of selection applied to both the Army and the Navy it would be better than the way it is now. We give the right to select from commodores and captains to fill vacancies made by the resignation or retirement of rear-admirals from the fact that in all probability the oldest is not competent or capable on account of disease, disability, or something of that kind. As the law now stands such a man would be forced in by the law. We propose to get rid of that condition of things and to provide so that a competent person may be selected. There are forty-six rear-admirals on the retired list to-day, drawing nearly as much pay as you or me, without doing a thing. We want to stop that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not see how you can stop that business by this bill.

Mr. LOGAN. It is the simplest proposition in the world, because your laws as they stand to-day allow a man, if he is retired as a lieutenant, in three weeks after to be promoted to the rank of commander, and from a commander to a captain; from a captain to a commodore, and from a commodore to a rear-admiral on the retired list; and that is the way you get your forty-six rear-admirals on the retired list drawing $4,500 a year. We propose to stop that. How? Because we repeal in this bill the law that allows promotion on the retired list. When we put a man on the retired list, let him stay there at the rank he goes on with, so as to prevent this fraud that has been perpetrated year after year on the Navy list by men being retired as lieutenants and commanders, and promoted to rear-admirals and then drawing $4,500 a year.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask whether promotion, both in the Army and Navy, by selection rather than by seniority has not caused a great deal of dissatisfaction in both the Army and the Navy, and whether it does not open the door for favoritism that ought not to be encouraged in either service?

Mr. LOGAN. I will answer the Senator. Mistakes are frequently made in selections, but I should think the Army in a very bad condition if the law was that every man who was made a brigadier-general should be entitled to become a major-general. The Army would be in a very bad condition if every brigadier-general should be promoted on account of his age and not on account of his ability. I should think we were then in more difficulty in reference to having an army proper than we are to-day.

So with the Navy. The best armies in the world are made by selection. The great navy of England to-day is made up by the selection of officers. But we with a republican form of government have our system, which is an aristocratic system by law, so that a man can go into an office because he is of a certain age, so that he shall follow on like the king's son follows him, and so on. I think it is wrong; I have always believed so. Make your Army like Napoleon did his when he selected his generals from the men who showed most competency to command and not because they were old. Select your officers as he did his great marshals, from the ranks. He made them marshals because they deserved the rank.

When you make your Army and Navy by selection, especially the higher officers, what do you do? You say to a man in the Army, "The skill that you exhibit in managing your command, company, regiment, or whatever it may be, the bravery that you show in battle, the skill that you exhibit in managing your troops against the Indians, shall be your recommendation for promotion; we will not promote you because you are sixty years old." But, sir, when you have two men in the Army, one much more competent than the other, who has shown it upon the frontier, who has shown skill, ability, enduring energy, who has won the spurs, and he comes forward and says "There is my record;" and what says the other? He comes forward and says "There is my age; I put my age against your record, against your gallantry, against your energy, against your skill, against your courage; you cannot help it; I am the elder and the law says I shall go in." What encouragement is that to a man to go out and be shot by the Indians, that he will have to stay twenty-five years before he can be pushed forward and have a chance for promotion?

A man in the ranks says "no matter how much I fight, no matter how brave I am, it gives me no promotion," and the captain says, "what if I do act bravely in battle, I get nothing for it; I cannot be a major, I cannot be a colonel, I need not fight; I will reserve my forces to-day; I will fight behind a tree; I am not going to get shot, it does me no good."

Sir, if you want to encourage men to be brave, to be gallant, to be true soldiers, give them the right to be designated for promotion because of the fact that they have shown their skill, their ability, and their bravery on the battle-field and elsewhere.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator from Illinois permit me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MAXEY. He says that the rank of commodore was not known in our Navy until 1862. I find an act approved February 22, 1815, which reads:

That Congress entertain a high sense of the valor and good conduct of Commodore D. T. Patterson, of the officers, petty officers, and seamen attached to his command, for their prompt and efficient co-operation with General Jackson in the late gallant and successful defense of the city of New Orleans when assailed by a powerful British force.

There is a title of "commodore" mentioned.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg the Senator's pardon; that is just an interpolation in the law because he was commonly called that. There was no such thing in the organization of the Navy from the year when it was first organized. In every organization of the Navy "captain" was the highest rank known in our Navy until 1862.

Mr. MAXEY. There may have been no statute specially conferring the title of commodore, but it is equally true that the commander of a squadron was known as a commodore and recognized by our law as commodore. The very statute I have read recognizes the gallant conduct of Commanding Officer Patterson by name as "Commodore Patterson."

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator very well knows, I presume he does at least, that there never was any such rank in the Navy till 1862. Certainly he ought to know it. You will find it so in the organization of the Navy in the Revolutionary war, in the organization of the Navy in 1806 and 1808, and in the war of 1812, and so on down. I can show it from the first statute ever enacted in reference to our Navy, and you can find nowhere that any higher rank than captain was ever given to anybody. Of course men were called commodores, admirals sometimes; but I am speaking of the rank that was given them by law for which they drew pay.

Mr. MAXEY. If the Senator will pardon me, he will not find the title "admiral" given to any officer in the Navy of the United States from the foundation of the Government down to the time that office was created during the late war; but you can find the word "commodore."

Mr. LOGAN. In all our histories you read of Commodore Decatur and Commodore Perry.

Mr. MAXEY. But not "admirals."

Mr. LOGAN. I am talking about commodores. In the histories written of our wars you find that, but that is so because the history as written gives the name commonly used by and known to the country.

Half the officers in the Army are called generals when they are colonels, and you very well know that half of them are called colonels when they are captains; but they do not have the higher rank.

Mr. MAXEY. I referred to the legislative recognition.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand all about the recognition. I am making the assertion, and I state it as a historical fact so far as our statutes are concerned, that the rank never was known in the laws of the United States as a rank. Some man in drawing a statute might have referred to a captain as a commodore, which would not have given him the rank; but I speak of the organization of the Navy under the law, and there was no such rank either in the United States or the English navy till the time I stated. Any man who has ever examined the history of the Navy knows that. I would not make an assertion of that kind without knowing what I was talking about, with reference to either the Army or the Navy.

At the time the Senator from Texas interrupted me I was speaking about promotion. I do not know whether I had finished on that point or not; but it is charged that we have done a great wrong to the Navy. I am very much astonished sometimes at the debates in the Senate. Men get up a prejudice against a thing without knowing why. I know there is much opposition to this bill. Why? You cannot introduce and pass a bill in reference to the Navy of the United States, to save your souls, without having nearly every Senator button-holed and talked to and written to on the subject by the old commodores around here, and the admirals, and everybody else. I have never been so importuned in my life as I have been since this bill has been introduced.

"Do not touch the Navy," we are told. Why not touch the Navy? God knows I do not want to detract from the Navy or the Army, but when I contrast the civil officers of the Government with the Navy I say there never have been such outrages perpetrated on the Treasury of the United States by the same number of officers as have been by the number of these officers that exist to-day. Why, sir, they crowd themselves in ships until they draw sea-pay, and certify the necessity of it, and yet you call this honor!

I want to put this question fairly before this country. I intend that the country shall know the position of this Navy; and Senators who stand up here in opposition to an honest, economical retrenchment in the Navy shall do it with a full knowledge of the facts.

How much of a Navy have we got? I want the Naval Committee to listen to this; I want the answer to it. Inasmuch as they criticised the Committee on Appropriations I want the Naval Committee to exhibit their knowledge here of the Navy. I want that committee, if we are wrong, to show by their knowledge of our Navy to-day that we are wrong, and show that they know something about it themselves before they commence to criticise others. I intend that nobody shall escape on account of ignorance of the condition of our Navy.

Let us examine the navy of England for a moment. There are three hundred and forty-one vessels in commission in the English navy afloat, armed and equipped. How many officers have they? One thousand eight hundred and fifty-four. How does our Navy compare with that? We have the magnificent number of twenty-eight vessels afloat, armed and equipped—that is, we call them armed and equipped, but some of them are out here on the Potomac where you can all see them. How many officers have we? One thousand and ninety-four! We have got, then, within nearly eight hundred as many officers as the British navy, the British navy floating three hundred and forty-one men-of-war and we floating twenty-eight, and yet we must not touch the Navy! Oh, no, these officers are all required for our Navy! You must not obliterate the rank of commodore, and when these officers go on the retired list nobody else shall be appointed commodore. Why do you need commodores? Need them for what? To command what? You have as many commodores in the Navy to-day as you have vessels, and yet you want them to command. What will they command? Your rear-admirals are for commanding stations; your commodores for commanding squadrons. Where are your squadrons, then? When you look for your squadrons you do not find them, but you find your commodores; there is no trouble about that.

Let us examine this a little further. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] a while ago asked a question, and I want as we go along to meet every single phase of this proposition, and every question that any Senator will ask me in good faith I will honestly answer if I can, and if I cannot I will state my ignorance. The Senator spoke of the difference between the military arm of the Navy and the civil arm of the Navy. I wish to understand, because I want to answer him if I can, what he meant by that.

Mr. VANCE. I meant the distinction drawn between the line officers and the staff officers. That is what I meant.

Mr. LOGAN. The reason I ask the question is that I want if I can to put that proposition at rest.

Mr. BUTLER. Before the Senator proceeds to do so I should like to ask him for information, is it not a fact that every commodore in the United States Navy is on duty?

Mr. LOGAN. I do not doubt it. They are all on duty, certainly. I do not want to say how many commodores there are on duty here in the city of Washington, but go and ask the Secretary of the Navy. I do not want to do that. I do not want to say how many naval officers there are in the city of Washington to-day drawing pay for being on duty, but ask the Secretary.

Mr. BUTLER. Why not state it?

Mr. LOGAN. Because I do not want to do so. It is a disgrace to our country.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me to answer the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. I am very glad the Senator from South Carolina has asked that question, because the answer throws a great deal of light on the other question which has been asked, why the commodores are abolished. In looking over the upper grades in the Navy no list could be found that could be so well dispensed with as the commodores, for this reason: there are to-day of commodores twenty-five in actual pay on the active list; only one is at sea; nineteen are on shore duty; and five are on waiting orders or sick. There is out of the twenty-five but one who is doing any particle of sea service where there is any danger or exposure anywhere.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator tell me what those nineteen on shore duty are doing, where they are employed?

Mr. HALE. They are employed in what are known as the easy, soft places in the Navy. They are at navy-yards and at stations where there is but little to do, and little responsibility; some of them are heads of bureaus, not many.

Mr. LOGAN. One or two.

Mr. HALE. But in looking the list all over the Senator himself will find that there is no grade that can be taken from the Navy and so little loss suffered, so little inconvenience felt, so little derangement to the machinery as the grade of commodore, and I invite him to that scrutiny.

Mr. LOGAN. When I heard the terms "military arm" and "civil arm" used I wanted to put that proposition at rest. There is a practice in the Navy, because we are running our Navy by steam nowadays, of employing engineers, who are graduates at Annapolis, the same as these gentlemen who wear the stars; and because they learn machinery and steam-engineering they are put there to control the ship, which they do; and the whole crew, captain, mate, and all are at their mercy, for they are the only ones who understand machinery and engineering and the management of the ship. They are trying to degrade those men by calling them the civil list, although they have the same rank as the other men. I do not want to hear that. They are regularly educated officers, and they perform the most important duty in the Navy to-day. But gentlemen who go in the Navy want to degrade somebody else. They call these men the civil list, although they are graduated and get their commission and have a rank of chief engineer, and the rank of captain, or the rank of commander, or the rank of lieutenant, the same rank as these other men. They must be civil officers, whereas the other are military officers. I never heard that said until I heard it from an officer in the room of the Committee on Appropriations, and I stopped him very quickly.

Mr. VANCE. Allow me to say a word.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. VANCE. If it is degrading to speak of the engineers as staff officers or in the civil department, non-fighters, non-combatants, is it not degrading to try to oust twenty-five commodores and keep a midshipman until he is forty-two years of age before he can get a commission as lieutenant?

Mr. LOGAN. I did not suppose the Senator would exhibit himself in that way. I supposed he would answer. Now I say to the Senator that when a man says on this floor that we are degrading commodores in the Navy he does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. VANCE. Are you not trying to put them out of the service?

Mr. LOGAN. No such thing. They are not touched in the slightest.

Mr. VANCE. You abolish the rank, so that none shall come in.

Mr. LOGAN. It is true we do that, for the reason that the rank is unnecessary; but we do not affect those who are in the Navy now at all. Does the Senator want the Navy to have the number of officers it has?

Mr. VANCE. I will tell the Senator what my desire is. I think the Navy of the United States, like many other departments of this Government, is top-heavy. I think there are too many officers; but I think it better to shut the gates and prevent more from going in than to ignominiously turn out a lot of them who are already in.

Mr. LOGAN. That shows the utter ignorance of the Senator about a provision of this bill. I did not wish to use such a word as that, but I must use it, for it shows his total ignorance of this bill when he says it turns out. It does not turn out a solitary man in the Navy, and when any one asserts that this bill turns out a commodore or any other man in the Navy it shows that he has not read the bill or does not understand it.

Mr. VANCE. I simply desire to say that the Senator need not apologize for using the term "ignorance" as applied to me, for I know he is more familiar than I am with ignorance.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator from North Carolina is sharp; that is splendid! Why, sir, we are not discussing the question of education. I do not boast of mine, but I would be willing to be examined before a committee with the gentleman from North Carolina, if it was necessary, for the purpose of displaying our competency on any subject; but that has nothing to do with this question.

Now, sir, I say in answer to the Senator that this bill does not remove a solitary officer from the Navy; it does not affect a solitary officer in the Navy; it leaves him with his pay, with his rank; but when the commodores are retired, which they will be in seven years, it only provides that no more shall be appointed.

Mr. VANCE. I must interrupt the Senator again, if he can tolerate my ignorance.

Mr. LOGAN. I can do it. I have tolerated a great deal.

Mr. VANCE. He says this bill does not affect a solitary man in the Navy.

Mr. LOGAN. I say it does not turn out a solitary man.

Mr. VANCE. The Senator used the word "affect." I was not so ignorant but I could hear that. He made use of that expression, that it did not affect a solitary man in the Navy.

Mr. LOGAN. Virtually it does not as to rank.

Mr. VANCE. Yet it takes three captains to be promoted before one man can be promoted to the rank of commander. Does not that affect the promotion of that man who is now in the line of promotion to commander?

Mr. LOGAN. Now, if the Senator will show the process by which he figures that out I shall be much obliged to him.

Mr. VANCE. Will you wait for a reply?

Mr. LOGAN. I will wait for any man to figure that out, because I want a man who makes such a statement to show how he comes to that conclusion.

Mr. HALE. Before the Senator from North Carolina proceeds—

Mr. LOGAN. Let him go on.

Mr. VANCE. I do not think the Senator from Maine has had a chance this morning to be heard, and I will yield to him if he desires.

Mr. HALE. I do not want the Senator to fall into a mistake; that part of the bill has been amended.

Mr. VANCE. It will be my mistake if I fall into it, and I will fall out of it if I can.

That hereafter only one-third of the vacancies which may happen in the grades of line officers in the Navy below that of commodore—

If there be such an institution—and above that of midshipman shall be filled by promotions.

Now all of them can be promoted as fast as the vacancies happen. Hereafter only one-third of them shall be filled by promotion.

Mr. LOGAN. Is that the point? Is that the explanation?

Mr. VANCE. That is the point that affects the officers of the Navy.

Mr. LOGAN. How?

Mr. VANCE. I am not able to explain to the Senator how. If he cannot see it at a glance I should despair of ever indoctrinating that proposition into him.

Mr. LOGAN. Well, I will say to the Senator that I think I understand that proposition; and I do not think he does. There is the difference. I say it will not affect any one's rank nor will it remove any one from the Navy. It does not affect his rank a particle; he retains his rank under the bill, but it affects what? It affects whom? You say it affects his promotion. He is not entitled to promotion; there is no vacancy; this bill prevents vacancies. Hence it treats all alike. It stops additions to the Navy; it reduces it to a certain minimum, and then stops any more appointments in the Navy until certain officers go out of the Navy and then promotion goes on. Now let some Senator explain to me how you can reduce an army or navy in any other way without turning them out. Will the Senator in his wisdom tell me? Here you are graduating fifty or seventy-five naval officers at Annapolis every year. [Mr. VANCE rose.] Hold on; wait until I get through. You are adding them to the Navy. We have twenty-eight vessels; we have over a thousand officers. We add from sixty to one hundred every year. We are increasing the officers all the time, and what are we going to do with them? What use are we going to put them to? How do you propose to reorganize a navy or an army? How do you propose to reconstruct it? You have got to stop the increase of numbers. If you do not you do not reorganize for the benefit of the Navy or the Government either. How will you stop the increase of numbers? There is only one way to do it; that is, to fix your establishment and wait until persons go out because of age and are retired.

Then you do not fill their places; you then promote the others; and in that way you fill up the Navy and keep it up until you reach the minimum. In a few years, when these places are all filled and you have got the Navy brought down to this point, then you make any other arrangements you choose. This has been the process the Navy has gone through three times since its organization; the Army has gone through it more than a dozen times. It is the only way by which you can reduce an army or a navy. If you turn back to the statutes of 1840 and 1850 in reference to the Navy you will find the scale exactly in the same way. They had no higher rank than captain then, but they reduced the Navy in that way two or three times, by stopping promotion. If the Senator will tell of any other way on earth you can do it better, I will agree with him. I would be glad to have him inform me of any better way it can be done.

Mr. VANCE. It strikes me that when there are too many officers getting into the Navy, we should shut the gates at Annapolis.

Mr. LOGAN. What would the Senator have then?

Mr. VANCE. We should have the officers who are in the Navy now, and when by casualties incident to the service they passed out, the number of graduates would be limited at Annapolis sufficiently to meet the requirements occasioned by casualties.

Mr. LOGAN. I can tell the Senator a great deal better way than that.

Mr. VANCE. Of course the Senator can.

Mr. LOGAN. I think I can.

Mr. VANCE. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. LOGAN. I have always heard it said "in time of peace prepare for war." The Senator's proposition would do—what? It would cut off the graduates, the young men to become qualified to enter the service, and it would let the old officers stay in until they died out, and then you would commence sending others to Annapolis and educate them. That is his proposition. When you got into a war your Navy would be in such a condition that you would have to do as we did in 1862, pass a law to retire a great number of them and then have nobody to fill up the lower grades. That is the Senator's proposition.

Mr. VANCE. That is not my proposition.

Mr. LOGAN. Then state it again, so that we may understand it.

Mr. VANCE. I said diminish the number of those who were graduated in the academy and limit it to what would be required by the casualties of the service. I said that as plainly as I could. I do not say we should put nobody into the Naval Academy.

Mr. LOGAN. You then would keep the Navy exactly the same size it is now, according to that plan.

Mr. VANCE. No.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, you would. You say limit it according to the casualties. If you limit it according to the casualties you would keep it exactly at the same number it is now, so then you are in a worse fix than before. That is your proposition.

Now I will show you what I propose to do. When these commodores are retired, which will be in seven years, that leaves out twenty-five in the higher grade. We propose that there shall be no commodores, that the rear-admirals shall remain rear-admirals and you may select from those younger men rear-admirals. We propose that the academy at Annapolis shall go on, and when the cadets graduate at Annapolis that instead of requiring them to have two years of sea-service we will graduate them at four years and let them go out, and then we give the others an opportunity to take one year's pay and go out of service, qualified as persons educated and ready to enter the service. We leave so many, ten or fifteen each year, I do not remember, to fill up in case of casualties, but only that many, so that the Navy shall not be top-heavy, but as the casualties occur they shall not all be filled up until these men go out.

We give these men a year's pay and let them be prepared if we get into a war, so that we may call regularly educated men into the service of the country. That is what we propose. We do not propose to stop the education of these men, but we propose when we educate them to give them a year's pay and let them start in life for themselves; and if a war commences they will be glad enough to enter the service of the United States.

That is the proposition we make, so that we do not prevent men from being educated; we do not interfere with the academy; we do not deprive the young men who desire naval experience from having it; we do not cut the Navy all to pieces at once, but we gradually reduce it and bring it down and at the same time keep the machinery going which will supply the Navy in time of peace. That is our proposition, and I think it is the best one. The Senator from North Carolina gets a little spirited about these things. What I said I meant in all kindness, and if the Senator wishes to try to force a thing upon another that is inconsistent with economy toward the Government and justice toward the Navy he will excuse me if I undertake to show him that he is wrong.

I come now to the next proposition that I want to make. Let us take a flag-ship. That is a very good way to understand the condition of our Navy now. Suppose you take a flag-ship during the war. I presume my friend from North Carolina knows what a flag-ship is. A flag-ship of the Navy is armed and crewed as well as any other ship. It is the ship of the commander of the fleet or squadron, and as a matter of course it has a choice and select crew, choice and select officers, and choice armament, and everything of the kind. During the war we had the flag-ship Lancaster. I desire the Senator to listen to this, for it is good reading.

The United States steamer Lancaster, for a flag-ship during the war, had of officers the following: one commodore, one lieutenant-commander, one lieutenant, two acting masters, one ensign, five master's mates, which made eleven line officers. How many staff officers? Surgeon of the fleet, one; assistant surgeons, two; paymaster, one; chief engineer, one; second assistants, two; third assistants, five; making eight staff officers and eleven line officers. That was the flag-ship Lancaster during the war. I presume they had all the officers they needed. Suppose we take a flag-ship to-day and see how it is officered. To-day, in a time of tremendous war with all the nations of the world, when our Navy is fighting every day, the Senator from North Carolina looking on with great admiration, we have on a flag-ship one captain, one commander, two lieutenant-commanders, seven lieutenants, one ensign, four midshipmen, fourteen cadet-midshipmen, making thirty line officers.

Let us go to the staff: medical inspector, one; passed assistant surgeons, two; pay inspector, one; chief engineer, one; passed assistant engineers, two; assistant engineers, two; cadet-engineers, two; making eleven staff officers and thirty line officers. It took in time of war to command a flag-ship nineteen officers, eleven line and eight staff, and in time of profound peace to command the same character of a ship it requires forty-one. Nineteen officers to command a flag-ship in time of war and forty-one officers in time of peace; and yet your Naval Committee are mad because we are trying to remedy it; they are disgusted at the Appropriations Committee. Have you not noticed it? Do you not know that? Have you never examined that question? This is a record from the regular Navy Registers of 1864 and of 1882, so there can be no doubt about its accuracy. I submit the whole list:

Record from Official Navy Registers of January 1, 1864, and January 1, 1882, showing the number of line and staff officers attached to naval ships during the war and at the present time.

[The comparison is made for the two periods with the same ship under the same condition as to being a flag-ship: when that is not practicable a ship of the same class is taken.]

Let us take two other ships. Take the flag-ship Hartford in 1864 and the flag-ship Pensacola in 1882. I take these two ships because they are the same character of ships, requiring the same number of officers and men. In 1864 the Hartford required sixteen line officers and ten staff officers, making twenty-six. The same character of ship to-day has twenty-six line officers and eleven staff officers, making thirty-seven. There is the difference. I give that merely as an illustration.

In this record ship after ship is compared right along, showing that the number of officers has been doubled in time of peace. Why is that? I will show you why it is. Sea-pay is the highest pay in the Navy. There is sea-pay, shore-pay, retired-pay, furlough-pay, and waiting-orders pay. There is quite a difference in all these pays. Sea-pay is much the largest. Why is it that all these men are crowded onto vessels? It is to give them the largest pay that is given to the Navy. Is not that a fraud upon the Government. I ask any sincerely honest man to tell me if nineteen officers could command the United States ship Lancaster in time of war, when she was fighting against forts and against men-of-war on the high seas, why, in God's name, does it require forty-one officers to command in time of peace?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. On that point will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Whose fault is that? Is it the fault of the officers who have been educated and brought up in the naval service? If the Government has not the ship to accommodate them, must we put them out of the service because of that fact, or does the Senator think the naval service as it now stands, the number of ships, particularly their efficiency, is all that the interests of this country require?

Mr. LOGAN. I can answer the Senator very readily. I am not very good at answering, but still I think I can answer that question. I do not think the ships are sufficient. Is that an answer to that? But they are all we have. The Senator asks would I turn these officers out of the Navy? Certainly not. We do not propose to do that; there is no such proposition. Is the Senator answered on that point? Now I will ask him does he think it honest to this Government to put forty officers on a flag-ship to-day when nineteen could command it in time of war?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Perfectly honest.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not think so.

Mr. VANCE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOGAN. Wait a moment. The Senator from Florida says it is perfectly honest. I do not think so, and I will illustrate it. If it is honest to put forty men on a ship to command it, then it is honest est to put one hundred on it. Here is a ship with forty officers on it and when only nineteen are required. You say it is honest to put forty on it merely to give them sea-pay.

Mr. BUTLER. The officers of the Navy do not do that. They are put there.

Mr. LOGAN. I am not talking about that, the Senator will understand when I get through.

Mr. BUTLER. I understood the Senator to say it was a fraud, and he denounced the Navy.

Mr. LOGAN. That is not the question. The Senator must understand what I say. I say it is a fraud on the Government, and I do not take it back. It is a fraud on the Government. The law provides for the number of officers who can command the ship and no more, and when you put more on you are defrauding the Government.

Mr. BUTLER. Then who perpetrates that fraud?

Mr. LOGAN. Who perpetrates that fraud?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. Has that got anything to do with this bill?

Mr. BUTLER. A great deal.

Mr. LOGAN. It has! You will not vote, then, a proper bill because somebody has done this thing that is wrong? Is that it?

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator asks if I would not vote for a proper bill. I do not think this is a proper bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I did not ask the Senator one word. The Senator got up and tried to interpolate in my speech, and wants to know whose fault it is. I do not care whose fault it is. It makes no difference. It is the fault of somebody and it is wrong, and it is your duty to help to correct that wrong, and that is all you are here for.

Mr. BUTLER. I propose to do it in my own way, not according to the dictation of the Senator.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand that. No, I do not propose to dictate to the Senator.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator must pardon me if I do not see that wrong through the same spectacles he does.

Mr. LOGAN. I certainly would pardon the Senator, but I say you and I and every other Senator have been sent here to correct the wrongs of this Government, and if this is a wrong it is your duty to help correct it; that is what I say.

Mr. BUTLER. I have not the slightest doubt about that, but the Senator must excuse me if I should not happen to see the wrong in the same way he does. I admit the Senator is well informed. I know he has more information than anybody else on this floor.

Mr. LOGAN. There is nothing smart in that.

Mr. BUTLER. There is a great deal less than smart in what you say.

Mr. LOGAN. I am not trying to be smart.

Mr. BUTLER. I think it borders upon something else besides smartness. I think it borders upon domination and dictation, if the Senator will pardon me. I know very well he knows more about the Navy than anybody else, but when a question is propounded him, I submit to the Senator there is a polite and an impolite way to answer the question, and I do not think he adopted the polite way of doing it, if he will pardon me for being frank.

Mr. LOGAN. I pardon the Senator for his irritability.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not irritable at all.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not claim to know any more about the Navy, and not nearly so much as quite a number of other gentlemen; but there is one thing very certain, when I do not know anything I do not pretend to know it. The things that I know very little about I generally keep shut upon. The Senate do not discover my weakness in all these things. Sometimes they do, but not in all. I try to keep quiet when I do not know anything. The Senator mistakes when he thinks I know a great deal, for I do not; but I know this: when I do try to play sharp I can do it, and I never try to play smart and make a mistake.

Mr. BUTLER. I should not advise the Senator to attempt to play upon a fiddle that he cannot use.

Mr. LOGAN. That is all very well, but I never play on a false string.

Mr. VANCE. I wish to ask the Senator if in showing the difference between the number of officers on the ship Lancaster in 1864 and at the present date he did not include, to make up his forty, fourteen cadet-midshipmen who were under-graduates and on board that ship to finish their course, to qualify themselves for a midshipman's warrant? I ask if there were any cadet-midshipmen on that ship in 1864?

Mr. LOGAN. They are line officers.

Mr. VANCE. Still I ask the question if the number given did not include fourteen midshipmen?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir, fourteen midshipmen.

Mr. VANCE. Under-graduates, who were there pursuing their studies.

Mr. LOGAN. Not under-graduates at all.

Mr. VANCE. Over-graduates, then.

Mr. LOGAN. They are line officers in the service of the United States; but if the Senator desires to take those fourteen out he can do that, and then we shall have more officers than we had during the war.

Mr. VANCE. Then if you take out the assistant paymasters, the increased number of surgeons, and ten engineers to every ship, where the English men-of-war run with two engineers, I think you will have the line officers at about where they were in 1864, perhaps a little lower.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator again shows very strange knowledge. I am trying to get you to do that very thing. You say take out ten engineers. That is what I am asking you to do. I am asking you to help me take those men off the vessel. That is the very thing I ask.

Mr. VANCE. The amendment says "line officers."

Mr. LOGAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. That provision reduces the staff as well as the line. That is exactly what I am asking the Senator to help us do. I am asking him to help us decrease the Navy. We decrease the line, but we decrease the staff also; so the Senator does not make anything by that. Is there anything else the Senator would like to be informed on—any other point?

Mr. VANCE. I should like to be informed, if it is convenient to the Senator, when he is going to quit. Some members of the Naval Committee had an idea of saying something, but I do not think they will get a chance to-day.

Mr. LOGAN. So far as quitting is concerned, when I look all around me I see that there are enough people for me to talk to yet. I will say to the Senator that this is a very dry subject, I know, and very uninteresting to him; but when I undertake to talk on a subject and know as little about it as the Senator from North Carolina does about the subject that he talked on yesterday, I will quit before I commence.

Mr. VANCE. A strict application of that rule would confine my friend to a deaf and dumb asylum for the rest of his days.

Mr. LOGAN. I think that would probably be a good place for a great many of us. I am reminded of a story, inasmuch as the Senator desires to cut and come and play sharp. I am perfectly willing he should do it, and that is a good way always for a man to get out of trouble when he is in trouble.

Mr. VANCE. The Senator—

Mr. LOGAN. I have the floor just now.

Mr. VANCE. I was going to make a remark in the interest of good feeling. That the Senator will permit me to do.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. VANCE. I was going to say that I did not desire to cut and come at all. I was in the cloak-room trying to sleep, and was behaving myself as a peaceable citizen of this community, when the Senator mentioned my name, and a page came to me and told me the Senator desired to ask me a question. I came in and assumed the position of catechumen, and have done the best I can. The Senator began this upon me. I did not begin it, and he began it very roughly, too.

Mr. LOGAN. That is all very well; I have no objection to it. If the Senator desires to proceed with it I have no objection, not the slightest.

Mr. VANCE. I have none.

Mr. LOGAN. I certainly asked the Senator a question, and I did it in good humor, but that has nothing to do with the matter that we were discussing to which I call the attention of the Senator and of other Senators. I was going to tell a story which was on my mind, but I shall not do it, for I do not care to indulge in a gallery scene. I will defer that to some other time; perhaps another opportunity will be afforded.

I desire to say in connection with what I was saying at the time the interruption occurred, that it is no argument for a Senator to say that any number of these officers are staff officers or line officers. That does not meet the question at all. The question is as to the number of officers, and whether we shall continue to increase the officers as we have been doing ever since 1862, or whether we shall reduce them by lapse of time, by letting them go out of commission, not by turning them out but by allowing them to retire when the time comes, and put the Navy in a proper and decent condition at least.

The Senator from New Hampshire, when making his raid upon the Appropriations Committee, denied the statement I had made, that the reorganization of the Army and Navy both had been on appropriation bills; but he got himself into a difficulty in his discussion. He undertook to prove that all vicious legislation was made by being reported on appropriation bills. I agree that one of the most vicious pieces of legislation there is in connection with the Navy is the legislation in regard to promotion on the retired list and paying as rear-admirals men who were retired as captains. That was put on an appropriation bill; but when the Senator comes to examine the question which was asked by the Senator from Kentucky he will find that it was done at the request of the Naval Committee and on the motion of the chairman; and not only that, there was an expenditure of $3,000,000 for building seven or eight ships to sail on the high seas at that same time put on in the same way. From that day to this the Naval Committee have never reported a bill to the Congress of the United States for any kind of an establishment of the Navy in the reduction of its number, in the reduction of its pay, in anything that went to economy so far as the naval staff and line were concerned.

Mr. ROLLINS. If the Senator will look on the Calendar he will find a bill there reported at this very session, from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. LOGAN. What is the bill?

Mr. ROLLINS. Senate bill No. 1578.

Mr. LOGAN. Will you let me have it?

Mr. ROLLINS. I have it not here; I will send for it.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. If the Senator will pardon me, he referred to the case of a captain having been retired as captain who is receiving pay as rear-admiral. What case was that?

Mr. LOGAN. There are quite a number of them.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I understood that the law authorizing promotion on the retired list did not carry with it any increase of pay. That was the act of 1879, as I understood it.

Mr. LOGAN. Of course it does not. That was explained by the Senator from New Hampshire, and I do not care to enter into it now. He showed how their pay was increased on an appropriation bill. I do not care to go over it; the Senator will see it in the RECORD to-morrow.

I now have the bill referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire, and a part of that bill reported from the Naval Committee is exactly the same thing we have in our bill. It is not all, but some of it is, in reference to paymasters, and some provisions in regard to cadets. If that committee have considered their bill, I ask them why they desire this bill referred back to the Committee on Appropriations? If they have a bill here which is a good bill, why not substitute it for the proposition in the appropriation bill, if you have a desire to retrench and carry on the service in the interest of economy?

If your bill is a proper bill and you have a measure that is a proper one before the Senate, I ask why it is that you do not, like any other committee would do in the Senate, allow the appropriation bill to come up before the Senate and then offer your amendments. If we have not given the proper apportionment of officers of the Navy, why not offer your bill, such portions of it as are better than ours? We shall gladly adopt it, and conform to it, if we have made a mistake in any of our propositions.

I ask if there is anything wrong in that? If the Naval Committee are earnest, if the Naval Committee are honest in desiring economy and retrenchment in the Navy, if they are in good faith and honest in this proposition, why not, I say, if they have such a bill, offer it as a substitute for this bill?

Substitute it for ours if it is better than ours, and if the Naval Committee understand the situation and will take up their bill and discuss it and show to the Senate it is a better one than the one we propose, the Senate will adopt it without any objection. If it is a better one and if you can show me wherein it is better than the proposition we have made, I will agree to adopt it so far as I am concerned, but I want some reasons given. I want some reasons other than those given by our excited friends here who are so annoyed because this bill has been reported from the wrong committee. I want some other reason than that given for a good law to be defeated.

I ask the Senator to-day if some measure for a reformation in the tariff should be reported to the Senate that we agreed to, would he vote against it merely because some other committee reported it instead of the Finance Committee? It does seem to me to be strange logic. It does seem to me to be strange economy. It does seem to me to be very strange. I want to appeal to the Senators who belong to the Naval Committee. I say so far as I am concerned I received more abuse in this country than almost any other man because of my attempts to reorganize the Army and the Navy.

When, as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs in the House of Representatives, when I was there, I introduced a bill for the reorganization of the Army, the reorganization of the pay corps, the reorganization of the pay of all the officers of the Army, so that they would not have to make it up by certifying falsehoods about servants and horses they never owned and never had, and gave them an annual salary that they could draw every month, I was attacked by nearly every newspaper in the country, and it was said that I wanted to destroy the Army. Some of the old Army officers here attacked me in every paper in Washington City. They wrote letters to Congress which were read at the Clerk's desk attacking me—said that I did not know what I was talking about, that I did not know what I was doing.

I persisted, however, with the biggest lobby there ever was from the Army right here against that proposition. It was beaten. I moved it on the appropriation bill; it was put on the appropriation bill, and passed both Houses of Congress, and there is not an officer in the Army to-day who would agree to its repeal. I might make one exception, but with one exception there is not an officer in the Army but has given me thanks for my course at that time, although it was then believed by the officers that I was ruining them. Why? Because it was changing some of their old trodden, beaten paths that had no sense in them, and I had learned better myself. They were changed, and to-day, since they have adapted themselves to the system, they all agree that the change was right.

I undertook to assist in the House once in reorganizing the Navy, almost as we propose to do it now. I was attacked all over Washington City for it. Every old naval officer said I was an ignoramus. But with all my ignorance, will any Senator or any naval officer stand up with these facts before him and discuss this proposition before an honest people and say that it is not right? I discussed it with naval officers in the committee-room, and one of the most learned naval officers agreed with me in the committee-room that I was right in this very proposition. I shall not mention his name, but when I put it to him and we discussed it, he said he must admit that I was correct.

I have given some study to this question, although it does not belong to a committee that I am on. I have studied it for years, as I have studied the military matters of this country. I may be ignorant about it, but in all my ignorance I have never found anybody yet who could stand up before an honest person and discuss this question, where the people were not prejudiced, who would not come out and say that I was right about it. When I say that I can, I do not mean that I can alone; I mean that I am now speaking for the Committee on Appropriations. So, then, some Senator on the Naval Committee, or some Senator who does not belong to it, should either give a reason why this thing should not be done or agree that he does not understand it, or else agree that we are right.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. On that point will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I ask if in all matters of this kind where objection is made to legislation on an appropriation bill the question is to turn solely upon the merits of the legislation and not upon the question as to its conformity with the rules of the body?

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir; not at all.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The Senator knows very well that if there has been any question debated more than another in the Senate it has been the question of the propriety of standing by the rules of this body.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand that.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. We have our rules here which declare that no amendment proposing general legislation shall be incorporated into a general appropriation bill. The Committee on Appropriations have put such amendments on this bill, and when that question comes up I ask the Senator whether it is to be determined by the merits of the amendment or by the other question—whether it is right to do the thing?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senator from Illinois to allow me one moment.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida just one question in answer to his. I want to ask the Senator from Florida if he did not have a different opinion in 1879?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That is no answer.

Mr. LOGAN. Ah!

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I ask the Senator what his opinion was then?

Mr. LOGAN. It does not make any difference what it was then.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It does not make any difference what mine then was.

Mr. LOGAN. But the Senator is criticising us.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to state, as to the amendments put on by the Senate Appropriations Committee, that I do not know one single point of legislation. There are some modifications of the provisions as they came to us from the House, but I think it would be hard to find a single point of legislation that the Senate committee put on the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I will show it here.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. What is it?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I read, beginning in line 175:

That hereafter only one-third of the vacancies which may happen in the grades of line officers in the Navy below that of commodore and above that of midshipman shall be filled by promotions.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is a modification; and it is further changed to "one-half."

Mr. LOGAN. I will not discuss that.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Here is a rule of your body which declares that no amendment of a general character shall be incorporated in an appropriation bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand that.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator from Florida if that was the rule in 1879 when we passed all those bills that his excellency Rutherford B. vetoed?

Mr. LOGAN. You know that was "the other fellow;" that makes all the difference.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I say, as my friend from Illinois knows very well, that the amendments put on by the Senate Committee on Appropriations are almost uniformly in the direction of economy, and simply modify the provisions of the House.

Mr. LOGAN. I want to call the attention of the Senate to one point, especially the Naval Committee, for they are like a friction match, you cannot touch the rudder but what they let down their sails. It is sensitiveness on their part; they are very sensitive. I want to say that the only practical bill that has come to the Senate this session, which has been modified and is in the interest of economy, is the very one you have attacked. This is the only bill that is in the interest of economy and justice, and the only one that has come of this character, and it is the only one you have attacked.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That may be a matter about which gentlemen may honestly differ. I think that instead of reducing the officers of the Navy down to the standard of our ships we ought to build our ships up to the standard of our officers.

Mr. LOGAN. My friend says we should build the ships up to the standard of the officers. We have officers enough in the Navy to-day to man two hundred vessels.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Oh, no.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator belongs to the Naval Committee, and I ought not to dispute with him, but I can prove it. We have enough to man two hundred vessels and have officers to spare in the Navy. Right to-day we have officers enough to man a Navy that this country never will have, and you insist on keeping it up and increasing them, instead of doing them justice and letting them retire when the time comes, as we propose to do.

Mr. President, one thing further, and I am through. The Senator from New Hampshire spoke about the pension bill, and said that we amended the pension appropriation bill. The pension bill came from the House, and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] offered an amendment to it. The Commissioner of Pensions came before us and said it was correct. We reported it back, and you made no objection to it. We all agreed to the amendment of that pension bill so that no double pensions should be paid. You all said that was right; you did not object because that was a pension bill. No one objected to it. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GROOME] had reported a bill, and when we put that provision on it the whole Senate voted for it and said it was right, because it was done to stop double pensions. Nobody objected to it. We did not do that because we were trying to usurp the powers of the Pension Committee, but we did it because the Senate wanted it done, because it was offered and agreed to by the Senate.

So far as I am concerned, there is but one line that I have ever followed since I have been a member of Congress, and that is to perform my duty as I understand what is my duty without fear from without or within, without fear of lobbyists or of armies or navies, and I try to do it honestly and fearlessly. The man who is an honest legislator, the man who is patriotic and devoted to his country, the man who loves and honors his country, who believes in economy and justice, will not be wielded or wafted from one side to the other because somebody does not want him to go that way, or because he is lobbied, or because he is pulled, or because this committee or that committee feels chagrined, but he will examine the question from a patriotic and honest stand-point, and do his duty to his country irrespective of whom it may affect. In legislating in that way we perform the duty we are called upon to perform, the highest duty a man can perform when he is the agent of a great Republic.

The Navy on our seas is laughed at because of the crowding of officers that they may get their sea-pay. With a navy laughed at as ours is, a navy of twenty-eight vessels afloat, instead of using our money to build up a navy what do you do? You use the money that might build your vessels in paying retired officers for rank that they never had and never obtained, in paying twice the number of officers needed, salaries from $13,000 down to $1,800, your rear-admirals drawing the pay of a major-general, your commodores the pay of a brigadier-general, your captains in the Navy the pay of the colonel of a regiment, your commanders the pay of a lieutenant-colonel, your lieutenants the pay of a major, and so on down, with the highest pay given to any officers of the Government, when there is no use for them and never can be, no matter what times may come.

There is no war that will come in which you will ever need the rank of commodore anywhere. Admirals command in your Navy, and captains are commanding each vessel in the best navy in the world, which is the English navy. When these things are not necessary, when they are not needed, we are called upon to approve them in a tender way so as not to affect the pay, the rank, the honor, or the dignity of any man. Then criticism is broadcast, we find it in the winds all over this town. We have forty-six retired officers buzzing everybody for fear that they will be nipped of a little something of this kind.

Let me say to my friends on the Naval Committee that if the people of the United States understood this thing, which they do not, as you are bound to understand it and will hereafter, you would hear some growls in this country in reference to these men we keep up and retiring men on high rank when they never had the rank—you would hear whisperings around somewhere; and I say it for the benefit of the Navy to-day, if the Navy expect to be treated fairly, as they desire to be, and as I hope they will be, it is better for them now to agree to that which is just.

If they agree to that which is just, that which neither compromises them nor affects them nor deprives them of their pay or their rank, then everybody will be satisfied; but if they persist in hanging around Congress and lobbying bills through Congress as they have done, it will be bad for them. That they did in regard to the pay bill of 1873, because the record itself shows that Mr. Cragin said when he introduced it that he introduced it at the request of the naval officers. Of course he did, for it was to give them pay according to their rank on the retired list; and there were men on the retired list as rear-admirals who had not got that rank before retirement. Admiral Porter recommended it, and other high officials recommended it. It was in fact the Navy legislating for themselves and the Naval Committee being used as a mere instrument. That was all there was of it.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Allow me to state to the Senator—I know he will pardon it, because I know he is a just man—that though I have been connected with the Naval Committee—

Mr. LOGAN. You were not connected with it at that time.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. No.

Mr. LOGAN. Then I am not speaking of you.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. But allusion has been made to officers of the Navy. I will say that they are a body of honorable men, and while many questions affecting them have been before the committee of which I have been a member, I do not remember during my whole period of service of but one man ever speaking to me in connection with any movement affecting his interests. It may be that my opinion was not wanted.

Mr. LOGAN. It was not at all necessary for the Senator to say that. I was not alluding to him, nor speaking of the Naval Committee; I was alluding to the law passed in 1873, when Mr. Cragin was chairman of that committee. When he came before the Senate with the measure giving them the pay they draw to-day, he said on the floor of the Senate that he offered it at the request of naval officers. Of course he had their request. I say if he did at their request, without examining the bill, he was acting as a mere figure-head for them; he was using the Naval Committee to carry out their caprices and designs without consideration of the subject. I say that, and I do not take it back, for his very speech shows that to be the fact. He did not consider the question for a moment. The law provided that officers on the retired list should receive no pay except the pay of the rank on which they were retired; and yet he brought in the bill at the request of naval officers, for he said so, and the record shows it, and asked that they be paid as rear-admirals, and it was passed on an appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Was the Senator not then in Congress?

Mr. LOGAN. In 1873? Yes, sir; but I was not on the Naval Committee then, and I was not on the Appropriations Committee either. But I do not propose to go into a discussion of what has been said, but let the Senator read the discussion that took place on that point. Let him examine it, and he will find the very fact that I state, that it shows the fact that the Naval Committee that reported that measure to the Senate groped in darkness and was blind as to what was done. There has been complaint about that all the time; every member of the committee knows that.

Not only that, but my friend from Nebraska a few days ago introduced a bill, which was referred to our committee, to put another man on the retired list as rear-admiral and pay him as rear-admiral; and not only that, but the Senator himself got a bill passed through the Senate within the last four weeks doing the same thing, and I just stepped in at the time it passed and moved to reconsider it, and it stands there yet.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I am perfectly willing now or at any time to defend my action.

Mr. LOGAN. That is all right. I only mention these facts to show that things are passed without the Senate knowing what they are, and that is the reason why the Navy to-day is in the condition it is. Half these bills have been passed through the Senate without any knowledge by the Senate as to what they were. They were brought in and passed nem con., nobody knowing what they were. That is the way these men are receiving the amount of pay they are to-day, which is an outrage on this country.

Mr. President, I have said all that I desire to say. I hope the Senate will consider this bill according to its merits, and not according to the committee that reported it. Take it if it is a just and proper measure and sustain it. The House thought it was, and we think so. If it is an unjust measure, criticise it and strike it out; but do not send it back to the committee; have manhood enough to stand up before the Senate and discuss it as to its justice or injustice, and vote it up or vote it down, according to its merits.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator yield to me for a minute?

Mr. WINDOM. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. It is so late that it is evident that no vote can be reached on the proposition of the Senator from Pennsylvania to-night, and on the whole I am very glad that that is so. All that I ask is that Senators, where it is possible, will take this bill to-night and examine its provisions carefully and find out if the things which they really desire to do are not in fact done in this bill. Examine all parts of it, examine that part of it that deals with the partial cutting off of the supply at the foot of the Navy, with the regulation of promotion in the center ranks and with the cutting off at the top, and I do not want any Senator to form any opinion as to the merit of this bill or as to the propositions before him until he has carefully examined all the provisions of the bill. I am satisfied that if any Senator will do that, if he is a good friend of the American Navy, he will see in this bill good features that he can support, and if any of them need further amendment let us discuss them and amend them and change them in accordance with the view of the Senate, and in the end get a bill that will be proper and right for the service and for the American Navy. I know there is enough in this bill to make it a good bill on which the Senate can agree, and I hope they will take that course.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. In arguing this question to-day the Senator from Maine drew a comparison between our Navy and that of Great Britain, and he stated, if I remember correctly, that there were 2,700 officers in the British navy.

Mr. HALE. Line and staff.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I think you will find that that probably will not cover the line and staff of the British navy.

Mr. HALE. I took that statement from one carefully prepared by the line of the American Navy, and undoubtedly there are extra officers as there are in ours in one way or another, but that embodies what is known as the distinctive line and the distinctive staff of the British navy just as the figures I set in the comparison embody ours.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 6242) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 126) to reimburse the Creek orphan fund, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 3493) relating to the public lands of the United States, and to require the payment of costs in certain cases of trespass or conversion of material therefrom; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 314) to designate, classify, and fix the salaries of persons in the railway mail service;

A bill (S. No. 329) to authorize the preparation and publication of a classified, analytical, and descriptive catalogue of all Government publications from July 4, 1776, to March 4, 1881;

A bill (H. R. No. 327) for the relief of John W. Humphrey; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 17) relating to the refunding of certain internal-revenue taxes illegally assessed against and collected from the Detroit House of Correction, in the State of Michigan.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

Mr. WINDOM. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) Pending the motion, the Chair will lay before the Senate House bills for reference.

The bill (H. R. No. 6517) authorizing compensation to members of Company B, Fourteenth Infantry, for private property destroyed by fire on the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. No. 3493) relating to the public lands of the United States, and to require the payment of costs in certain cases of trespass or conversion of material therefrom, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 270) for the relief of Sarah J. S. Garnet, widow of Henry H. Garnet, late minister to Liberia, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

OREGON SHORT-LINE RAILWAY.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me for a moment? The bill creating the Oregon Short-Line Railway passed the Senate some time ago and comes from the House to-day passed, but the engrossed copy has a clerical error of some importance. On consulting those best informed on such subjects I am told that the correct way is to have a short concurrent resolution passed to correct a clerical error. Here is the bill which passed both Houses.

Mr. ALLISON. Let us hear what it is.

The Acting Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That in the enrollment of Senate bill No. 972, creating the Oregon Short-Line Railway Company a corporation in the Territories of Utah, Idaho, and Wyoming, and for other purposes, the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to correct an error in line 10 of the engrossed bill by striking out the word "with" and inserting the word "within."

Mr. McMILLAN. I want to know the effect of this?

Mr. HAWLEY. The expression of the bill is "articles of incorporation within the said Territory of Wyoming." It is engrossed "with the said Territory of Wyoming."

Mr. McMILLAN. I shall object to that.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is to avoid a clerical error, the Senator understands, and nothing else.

Mr. McMILLAN. It cannot change the construction of the law.

Mr. HAWLEY. It ought to be corrected by concurrent resolution. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is objected to and goes over.

Mr. McMILLAN. As the Senator from Connecticut thinks this is only a little clerical error I will not insist upon the objection, though I am wholly opposed to the bill. The powers granted in the bill are too extensive.

Mr. HAWLEY. This is only to correct a clerical error. The resolution was agreed to.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. CHILCOTT] made a report from the Pension Committee, I think this morning, on the bill (H. R. No. 703) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Ryan. It was an unfavorable report. I have been asked to move to have the case recommitted to the committee, and I make the motion with the concurrence of the Senator from Colorado.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I renew my motion for an executive session.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock and fifty-four minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, July 26, 1882.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. O'NEILL. I ask unanimous consent to take up and pass at this time Senate bill No. 297, for the relief of Mark Walker.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to present a report from a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. The conference report will be in order.

Mr. O'NEILL. I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] will permit me to get this bill passed; it will not take long.

Mr. HISCOCK. I must insist upon presenting a conference report.

Mr. O'NEILL. I do not want to appeal to the gentleman nor to ask a favor of him here on the floor; yet he has prevented the passage of this simple bill on one occasion already, and I think he should allow me to get it through now.

The SPEAKER. The conference report is in order.

Mr. MCKINLEY. The gentleman can call up his bill at any time.

Mr. O'NEILL. I know that is said; but I cannot do it.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 2374) granting to certain parties right of way over lands and waters of the United States.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HISCOCK. I present the report of the committee of conference on the general deficiency appropriation bill.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing vote of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6243) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

FRANK HISCOCK,
GEO. M. ROBESON,
S. S. COX,

Managers on the part of the House.

EUGENE HALE,
W. B. ALLISON,
F. M. COCKRELL,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The accompanying statement was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the general deficiency appropriation bill submit the following in explanation of and to accompany the conference report submitted:

The conferees of the House and Senate have been unable to agree on the amendment in conference allowing mileage to Senators for the extra session of the Senate, and have agreed to so report to their respective Houses.

FRANK HISCOCK,
GEO. M. ROBESON,
S. S. COX,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and concur in the same.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let the gentleman state upon what point the disagreement is.

Mr. CARLISLE. I was not giving attention when the gentleman sent up his report; I understand it is a report from a committee of conference.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is a report from a committee of conference of a disagreement; the Senate insisting upon its amendment and the House conferees refusing to concur in the amendment.

Mr. CARLISLE. Then I suppose that before the motion made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] can be in order, the House must dispose of the report.

The SPEAKER. The report calls for no action; it simply states the fact that the conference committee has disagreed.

Mr. CARLISLE. I understand that the report does not propose that the House shall recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The report does not propose that.

Mr. CARLISLE. And while that report is pending the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] proposes to submit an independent motion that the House recede from its disagreement. I think the regular course, and the course always pursued heretofore, is to dispose first of the report; and then the motion to recede is in order, and perhaps the House ought to recede.

The SPEAKER. The Chair inquires of the gentleman from Kentucky what action he thinks is necessary to be taken on a report which simply states the fact that the members of the conference committee have been unable to agree?

Mr. CARLISLE. Do I now understand the gentleman from New York to say that the conference committee has disagreed on every proposition?

Mr. HISCOCK. On every remaining proposition; there is but one.

Mr. CARLISLE. Then of course my point of order is not good.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from New York will state the point of disagreement.

Mr. HISCOCK. The House conferees disagree with those of the Senate on the amendment to pay Senators mileage for attending here at the special session of the Senate in October last. On behalf of the Senate the argument in equity for this allowance is about this: in the first place, an extra session of the Senate was called in March, 1881, for which the Senate asks no mileage because a very large proportion of the Senators were already here. I have seen it stated in the RECORD that there were nineteen new Senators in attendance at that session; but although that is the statement of, I think, Senator HOAR, as I read it in the RECORD, it seems to me there could not have been so many new Senators at that session. But to attend the extra session in October the Senators all came from their homes; and I understand that with the exception of some three or four they all returned to their homes before the beginning of the regular session. Members of the House will recollect that the extra session closed on the 29th of October; and the fall elections occurred after that date, which fact of itself would afford evidence of the truth of the statement that the Senators with few exceptions returned to their homes before the meeting of Congress in December. This is the case which is made by the Senate in equity for this allowance. I will add that Senators think they, and they alone, should be held responsible for this legislation. I will remind members that in these matters of conference there must be concessions on the part of the House as well as on the part of the Senate in order that the two Houses may get together. It is eminently proper, in fact it is absolutely necessary, that the House should upon some points recede. On this bill, as upon other bills from the Committee on Appropriations, the conferees on the part of the House have sought with all their power to have the conference reports express the sentiments of the House. We have tried to translate the wishes of the House in our action, and we have very largely succeeded.

There is great necessity that this bill should become a law. It may be replied that then the Senate should recede. But in this matter of concessions I think, so far as dollars and cents are concerned, the Senate in our conferences has conceded quite as much as, perhaps more than, the House conferees have conceded to the Senate. In regard to matters affecting the District of Columbia, the schools here, and some other deficiencies provided for in the bill, it is important that the appropriations should be available at the earliest practicable day; and while, in view of the action of the House the other day, we have not felt justified in bringing in a report recommending that the House recede from its disagreement to this amendment, I do feel justified and believe it to be my duty to make the motion I have made, on which I now call the previous question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman will not cut off debate. I would like to say a word or two.

Mr. HISCOCK. I call the previous question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I do not think this is a fair way to treat the House.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. Before the gentleman from New York sits down I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I hope we shall not be deprived of the privilege of expressing our views upon this question.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not yield the floor, but will answer any question which may be asked.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. Will the gentleman inform the House what has been the practice heretofore in respect to this subject—whether mileage has ever been allowed to Members and Senators at any extra session?

Mr. HISCOCK. I will say in reply to the gentleman that I know of no such extraordinary case as is now presented—two extra sessions coming in immediate succession.

Mr. BRIGGS. What is the difference between this case and that of the extra sessions of both Houses in the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses?

Mr. ELLIS. Not a bit.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. And at that time we decided that mileage should not be allowed.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not believe there is any great difference; and I think that in all fairness Congress would have been justified in allowing its members mileage for those extra sessions. The fact that it was not done then affords no reason why we should not do it now; and it affords no good reason why when concessions have been made to the House we should not in the spirit of harmony get together somewhere and allow this bill to become a law.

Mr. BRIGGS. Then I understand the position of the case to be this: here is a report of a committee of conference on an appropriation bill which ought to be passed immediately in order to furnish the Departments with funds to carry on the Government. The Senate has put upon this bill an amendment which virtually puts $30,000 into the pockets of Senators, and they insist upon the House yielding and giving them this money for the sake of passing the bill. In such a position of the case I am not prepared to yield.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is hardly a fair statement of the case. If the Senate had refused to recede from any of its amendments—if it had said, "We have put our amendments upon the bill and the House must come to us upon all these amendments," then the case would be correctly stated by the gentleman. But I say that when the conferees of the two Houses get together there must be mutual concessions; and I believe that in this case quite as important concessions have been made by the Senate as that which I propose shall be made by the House in receding from its disagreement to this amendment.

Mr. ELLIS. I should like to see—

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Has not the Senate manifested a willingness to recede where it does not affect their personal interest, but on this which affects their personal interest they have declared time and again they will not yield?

Mr. HISCOCK. That is not a question for me to answer. I suppose I should be called to order if I should attempt to pass upon the motives which operated upon members in the other end of the Capitol. The Senate insisted in reference to the salaries of its employes and in reference to the matter of mileage and other things of that kind it was so far responsible to the people it should be held solely responsible for such legislation.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. How many of the conferees agreed?

Mr. HISCOCK. I think they all did.

Mr. CARLISLE. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman from Kentucky was not on the conference committee.

Mr. CARLISLE. I ask the gentleman who has charge of this matter if he does not think it would be fair and just to the House as well as to the Senate that an amendment should be adopted, if we are to agree to the Senate's proposition, providing that hereafter there shall be an allowance of mileage for each session of Congress, excluding of course all double or constructive mileage? It seems to me but fair and just to the House and the Senate that some such provision should be added to prevent the occurrence of this controversy hereafter. We undoubtedly have the right to concur with an amendment, and I think such an amendment should be adopted by the House if it concurs in the Senate amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. So far as I am concerned, and of course on the question suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky I speak for myself, and myself alone, I will not consent to such an amendment. I will not support such an amendment, and for this reason: that on this question of mileage and the compensation of members the country is extremely sensitive. We are here in our representative capacity, and for myself I certainly shall not consent to increase my own compensation. The Senate do it in their own case and take the responsibility of it.

Mr. CARLISLE. The gentleman will not increase his compensation by consenting to the amendment. The Senate proposes to go back and make compensation for the past, while the amendment suggested by me refers only to the future.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not know but what it might apply to me in the future, and I do not propose to support any measure that possibly might apply to me in the future. I am well content with the compensation and salary now given to Representatives in Congress, and I am opposed to any bill looking to the increase of that compensation. While I am opposed to so doing, yet, if the Senate chooses to take the responsibility of this, rather than have this bill fail and in view of the fact we have to get together and make mutual concessions, I shall let the Senate take that responsibility.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. As the guardian of the Treasury I ask the gentleman whether it is not the right and duty of the House to resist any such action on the part of the Senate?

Mr. HISCOCK. The question which the gentleman asks is rather in the suggestion of tutorship or schoolmastership. He would seem to insist there is some question of morals involved, and that I have violated some principle of honesty and good legislation in doing this. To any such question as that of the gentleman from Illinois I of course can make no reply.

Mr. CALKINS. I ask the gentleman from New York in charge of the bill whether the Senate is to be charged with this responsibility. Must not the House assume its share of responsibility for this legislation?

Mr. HISCOCK. That is a matter of argument, a matter of fact.

Mr. CALKINS. For one, Mr. Speaker, while I have no disposition to undertake to fix the compensation of members in the other end of the Capitol, yet I am opposed to this demand of the Senate. I should like very well to see whether the House will consent to the Senate, without regard to the House, fixing this matter of mileage. I do not think it is at all incumbent upon us to yield, and for one I am opposed to doing it.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Clerk to read section 7 of Rule XIV.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the rule referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

7. While the Speaker is putting a question or addressing the House no member shall walk out of or across the Hall, nor, when a member is speaking, pass between him and the Chair; and during the session of the House no member shall wear his hat, or remain by the Clerk's desk during the call of the roll or the counting of ballots, or smoke upon the floor of the House; and the Sergeant-at-Arms is charged with the strict enforcement of this rule.

Mr. BROWNE. Is there anything in that rule about standing in the main aisle? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is obliged to the gentleman from Tennessee for calling special attention to this paragraph of the rule.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman from West Virginia, I understand, desires to ask a question. I will yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. KENNA. What I desire to say is rather in the nature of a suggestion in connection with the subject which the gentleman has been discussing. I am not specially squeamish about the allowance of this mileage to the Senate except upon this principle: that there is not a member of this House and there is not a member of the Senate of the United States who is not fully compensated (by the mileage which he receives under the operation of the present law for attending the regular sessions of the two Houses) for all of his necessary outlay for traveling expenses. And for one I am unalterably opposed to conceding this mileage to the Senate for attending to its legitimate part of the public business, or conceding to them what the House, under similar circumstances, has never claimed for itself.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say only a word or two upon this point.

Mr. HISCOCK. I yield a moment to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. ELLIS. I remember, since I have been a member of this House, I think three extra sessions of Congress. The first one was called, I believe, in October, 1877. We were summoned from our homes here, and remained in session, holding a regular normal session of Congress in that extra session. Again, in March, 1877, some fourteen days after the adjournment of the regular session, we were called in extra session, and again held a regular normal session of Congress under a special call. I remember these two sessions particularly. No claim was ever set up for mileage on that account. On the contrary, nobody in this House, so far as I am advised, ever made a suggestion either in committee or on the floor of the House looking to the granting of mileage on that account. I recollect, however, we were paid extra compensation for stationery one time. I think, and I am informed by members of the Appropriations Committee of that House, that one of these allowances for one of the extra sessions was most bitterly fought in the Senate, and after it was agreed to by the House committee and by the House itself objection was made to it in the Senate, who insisted upon striking it out; and finally it was stricken out.

Mr. KENNA. But even that was authorized by existing law.

Mr. ELLIS. However, it was not granted to the House, and by the action of the Senate, who, as I have stated, objected to it. Now, I see no use or sense in yielding to the Senate on this question. They are not entitled to mileage under the law for that extra session, and I for one will stay here until December, if necessary, before I would agree to this demand.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. CASWELL.]

Mr. CASWELL. I think, Mr. Speaker, that there is a wide difference between the case now presented and the allowance of mileage at the extra sessions which took place during the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses. I remember very well in the Forty-fifth Congress we were called here in October, 1877. At that time the session was prolonged into the regular session, and for that reason, if I recollect correctly, the other side of the House, who was then in a majority, thought it ought not to report a bill for mileage except for the one session. It would have been somewhat in the nature of constructive mileage if it had been done.

Now, in the extra session which followed in March—the Forty-sixth Congress—it was the intention of the Executive to convene Congress while most of its members were here in the city; and two weeks only intervened between the sessions. If mileage had been granted on that occasion it would be largely constructive mileage also, for many of the members staid here waiting for it.

Now, it is claimed that there is no law which gives this mileage to the Senate. But that was a session which was an extraordinary one; one in which the House did not participate; one which was called long before the regular session of Congress, and which terminated before the regular session began, in which the members of the House in no way participated. It was service performed by the Senate alone; and hence their claim for mileage.

Now, it has always been the practice of the House where members of its body have been sent away on special services, such as investigating committees or something of that kind, to pay their expenses, and pay them liberally. In this case the Senate performed an extra service entirely outside of their ordinary legislative functions and met in extraordinary session for an extraordinary occasion. I think they ought to be paid this mileage, for in looking this matter all over it is my earnest conviction that the Senate have a claim justly and properly for mileage, and we ought to yield to it as the best thing that can be done.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now demand the previous question.

Mr. ROBESON. I would like to be heard for a moment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. ROBESON. I desire simply, Mr. Speaker, to say a word or two upon this question as one of the conferees of the House.

The distinction between this case and all others mentioned is just this: it is admitted on all sides that there is no law now existing to pay this mileage. Why is that? Because the law as it now stands upon the statute-books covers only the ordinary usual condition of things. What is that ordinary usual condition of things? It is the regular sessions of Congress meeting under the law and the special sessions of the Senate called under the Constitution by the President of the United States for purposes of executive business.

Those are the usual meetings of Congress. The law contemplates that condition of affairs only. And when it provides that mileage shall be had for regular sessions it means to exclude those extra sessions which are called for executive business, and to exclude those general and ordinary sessions which come under the Constitution, and which are the ordinary habit and custom of public business.

But this session last October was an extraordinary session. It was not only an extra session but it was an extraordinary extra session; a session which was brought about by the anomalous condition of the country, by the fact that the whole Government was threatened with anarchy on account of the wounding, the illness, and the death of the President, and by the fact that in the absence of the Senate and the non-existence of a Presiding Officer of that body there was no life between that of the incumbent of that office, President Arthur, and utter confusion in our Government. The Government would have been criminal if extraordinary means had not been taken to call that session.

Now, then, we are all paid whenever we travel on public business. If we are sent off as a special committee to transact any ordinary or extraordinary public business our traveling expenses and mileage are paid. It is true that the law did not contemplate this thing when it was made. It contemplated only the general sessions and the general extra sessions. I am in favor of this proposition not because the Senate insists upon it but because it appeals to my sense of justice and of right, and because I am not willing to say, merely because it is a thing which is not written on the statute-book, that we will not yield to it. We must accommodate ourselves in the ordinary progress of Government to those extraordinary exigencies which no man can foresee and which no power can control. These people were called here; they came; they actually performed this duty; they did this work; they paid these charges, and the equity of the case in the face of the letter of the legal provision requires that we should be just to them.

Mr. HISCOCK. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.]

Mr. KASSON. I only desire to state the principle upon which I propose to vote for the motion to recede from the disagreement; and I do it more especially because of my familiarity with all the discussions on the mileage and pay question prior to the final adjustment as it now stands in the law. Being in that Congress and taking considerable part in that legislation, my recollection is very distinct as to the principle upon which mileage was arranged. The other day a gentleman on the other side of the House spoke of this as if it were in the nature of a salary-grab. Let me say, sir, in reply that the whole principle of mileage was discussed at the time I refer to, and that instead of actual expenses, which was proposed at that time, it was argued and adopted by a majority of the House that gentlemen who were obliged to abandon all their business at home were entitled according to the plan of the original law to something a little more than the actual expenses of traveling when they were obliged to come long distances away from home.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Why was not this matter provided for when the old law was changed?

Mr. KASSON. I will come to that. We restored the old law with the mileage as it is now. It was found that prior to that time the Senate, called every four years on the accession of a new President, drew mileage, although no distance was traveled and no time consumed from business at home in traveling to and fro from distant or near States. It was said that was wrong; that there was no actual travel.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Was it not because very large sums were charged by gentlemen from the Pacific coast for constructive mileage that the law was changed?

Mr. KASSON. It was, and we finally adjusted it at much less than the old rate of forty cents a mile. [Mr. HUTCHINS rose.] My time is limited, and I think my explanation will be complete when I shall have finished.

It was therefore adjusted in the way in which it now stands, Congress foreseeing no extra sessions of the Senate except those which were guarded against, being in fact continuous sessions arising from the inauguration of a new President and the necessity of confirming new appointments.

This case arises upon a different principle and upon the identical principle upon which we are paid for our regular sessions. And let me say to gentlemen that if we should be called here the 15th day of September for any purpose, having adjourned and gone home on the 10th day of August, and should leave here on the 15th of October and come back again for the regular session, I ask if there is a gentleman on this floor who would affirm that it was not just to allow traveling expenses there in the form of mileage or otherwise?

Mr. ELLIS. It has never been done.

Mr. KASSON. Because the case has not arisen in the same manner.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It did arise in 1877.

Mr. KASSON. Gentlemen are aware I have very little time, and I want to explain the principle upon which the existing law as to mileage was adopted. It was this, that it should only cover the cases where there is actual traveling for which expenses are incurred and time taken; and on that principle every regular session is allowed its mileage.

Now, if there comes an irregular and unexpected session, with its consequent actual traveling expenses, I affirm that upon the identical principle upon which mileage is allowed for the regular session mileage should also be allowed for the irregular session, because the expenses are incurred in the same way exactly as for the regular session. In this case, therefore, finding the extra session divided from both the preceding and subsequent sessions, finding that the expenses were actually incurred and that there is nothing to do except to refund them, or leave them to be paid on private account, I affirm that the same principle upon which mileage for regular sessions is allowed applies to this case, and therefore I shall vote to recede from our disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BROWNE.]

Mr. BROWNE. The statute under which we serve gives to members of Congress as their measure of compensation the sum of $5,000 a year. It contemplates that if necessary the Representative shall give his whole time to the Government service during the year for $5,000. I assume that should the necessities of the Government require our presence here during the whole of the two years of our term, the full measure of the contract is that we shall have $5,000 per annum as compensation. In addition to that the statute gives us in express language mileage for regular sessions at the rate of forty cents per mile one way. That is the law; that is the stipulation in the contract between the people and their representatives.

Now, let us make a little honest confession to our constituents. Mileage is intended to cover as is said the necessary traveling expenses of the Representative from and to the place where he resides. I live six hundred and fifty miles from the capital, and my mileage is $260 per year. It costs me $60 for traveling expenses. I therefore have $200 of profit out of my mileage.

I assume to say that if in the exigencies of the Government I am required to come here twice or thrice a year, all that I as an honest man ought to have is just such sum as is allowed by the statute under which I was elected.

Now, if we want to increase the measure of our compensation there is but one safety to the people; that is, to allow an election to intervene between the time when the compensation is increased and the time when it shall take effect. We are absolute; we may make our compensation prospective or retroactive in any sum we may please.

A Congress of the United States has already done so. Elected under a statute allowing its members $5,000 a year, after having served the full term, it passed a law allowing its members $7,500 a year. It is supreme in this regard, and might have made it $17,000 a year. There is, therefore, no safety to the people except we make the increased compensation to begin with a Congress to convene after our term expires, and thus give the people an opportunity of determining whether or not we ourselves shall put our hands into the Treasury and take an increased salary as their representatives.

For that reason I said to my people, and I reassert it here, that I will not vote to myself, I will not vote to any other member of Congress, whether in the House or in the Senate, one penny of compensation that was not provided by express law at the time the Congress began. I stand on that position now, whether it applies to the House or to the Senate.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. TOWNSHEND.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. One objection I have to receding from the House disagreement to the Senate amendment is this: the

The House deliberately declared its position upon this question of extra mileage in 1877; it was then a Democratic House. It then declared that there was no warrant of law authorizing the payment of extra mileage when under precisely similar circumstances it was proposed to pay such mileage to the members of the House. It was believed then as now that the regular mileage is enough to cover the expenses not only for attending the regular session but for attending any extra sessions that might occur.

I admire the position taken by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] when he says that he would not vote in favor of an appropriation increasing his own mileage and salary in excess of that allowed by law, and asserts that it would be wrong to do so. But I do not admire his position when he proposes to allow the Senate to do what he characterizes as wrong and unjust to the Treasury. If it is wrong for him to put his hand in the Treasury and take out money not contemplated by law for himself and the House, it is equally his duty to stand here and resist, whether from the Senate or any other source, the effort to wrongfully appropriate the public fund for other purposes.

I surmise from what the gentleman from New York has said that the Senate is not very tenacious for amendments that do not affect their own personal interests; but it is extremely tenacious of those affecting their mileage, &c. From what we learn of the demand of the Senate and its conferees it will never yield to the right of the House to pass upon the question of how much they themselves shall receive or what shall be the compensation of their employes.

I think this House owes it to itself, and I believe it is a solemn duty imposed upon us, to stand firmly upon the position which was taken in the Forty-fifth Congress, and which has been taken during this session, that we should resist the dictation of the Senate upon questions like these and insist upon our constitutional right and duty to pass upon the propriety of all appropriations of the people's money, whether it be to a Senator or a citizen. When discharging our trusteeship over public money we have no legitimate right to permit it to be wasted as an act of courtesy to Senators or others.

I know that my mileage is ample to pay all the traveling expenses I incur in attending the regular session of Congress; and indeed is amply sufficient to pay all the traveling expenses that would be incurred by me for attending an extra session of Congress. Each and every member on this floor is aware of the fact that his allowance is ample for such purposes. We cannot avoid our share of responsibility by making a concession like this and wrongfully using the public funds as a matter of courtesy to the Senate.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. CALKINS.]

Mr. CALKINS. Since I have been a member of this body there have been two extra sessions of Congress, one in the Forty-fifth Congress and one in the Forty-sixth. I do not know that anybody ever seriously contended that members of this House ought to have had extra mileage for those two extra sessions. However that may be, this House certainly never insisted upon that right; and I think there is a sound consideration of law which determines or ought to determine this question against the position that the Senate has assumed. Each Senator having accepted his office, as we did ours, at a compensation already fixed by law, he took the office with whatever burdens followed; and after doing this he ought not to ask any increased compensation. It was fairly within the knowledge of every Senator and every member on accepting his office that he might be called upon to perform public duties at an extra session; and such extra services if rendered come fairly within the contract which he made with the people in accepting the office they gave him, that he would serve at the compensation then fixed. This being so, I think the Senate has no right to say that an extra session of the Senate is an extra burden upon Senators. It was fairly within the terms on which they accepted their offices.

As to the Senate employes I take a different view. Twice this House has receded from that position assumed by my friend from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSEND] that we ought to fix the amount of compensation for Senate employes. I think we must again in reason recede when we come to determine that proposition, because, as a matter of courtesy, if on no other ground, each body has probably the right to say what its employes should receive. If this right does not belong to each House legally, it is a right by courtesy, one which has always been extended.

Mr. BROWNE. I wish to ask my colleague whether he is willing to concede that the Senate may fix the compensation of its employes without regard to amount?

Mr. CALKINS. Of course whenever the Senate undertakes to fix an amount of compensation which outrages the sense of propriety of members of the House, we have the legal right to intervene at any time; there is no question about that. But I should be ready to concede to the Senate, as a matter of courtesy, the right to fix the salaries of its employes.

There is another objection in my mind to the allowance of this claim by the Senate for extra services in the extra session. The Senate has no right to put this appropriation on a general appropriation bill and to issue to us a threat in order to coerce us into voting this appropriation. If it is right that the appropriation should be made, let it be put in a separate bill, and let it stand or fall on its own merits.

Mr. HISCOCK. Before calling the previous question I think it proper to say a word in reply to the suggestions of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. TOWNSEND.] I believe the only reason why the Forty-fifth Congress did not vote mileage to its members was the fact that the extra session was called on account of the failure of Congress to make the necessary appropriations. I will add, and the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. ELLIS,] I believe, has alluded to the fact, that under the title of an allowance for stationery that Congress sought to do what was practically equivalent to an allowance for mileage. An appropriation for stationery for the extra session was made, when, as every member knows, there was no need of such an allowance, because the ordinary allowance was sufficient for the uses of members. That allowance for stationery was made in some degree in compensation for the mileage which was not voted.

Mr. RYAN. The stationery allowance was authorized by law just as much as the salary of members.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am only making these suggestions with reference to that Congress in reply to the gentleman from Illinois, who held up that Congress as an example for us upon this question. I call the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment with reference to the mileage of Senators, and agree to the same.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky, and others called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 65, nays 115, not voting 109; as follows:

YEAS—65.

So the House refused to recede from its disagreement.

During the roll-call the following pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. LOWE with Mr. HERNDON.
 Mr. JONES, of New Jersey, with Mr. HERBERT.
 Mr. HELLMAN with Mr. BLAND.
 Mr. MCCOY with Mr. CLARK.
 Mr. LINDSEY with Mr. LADD.
 Mr. HUMPHREY with Mr. BRAGG.
 Mr. HALL with Mr. WISE of Pennsylvania.
 Mr. SPAULDING with Mr. KLOTZ.
 Mr. HUBBS with Mr. SHACKELFORD.
 Mr. BARR with Mr. DAVIDSON.
 Mr. STONE with Mr. HEWITT of Alabama.
 Mr. DUNNELL with Mr. DUGRO.
 Mr. YOUNG with Mr. CLARDY.
 Mr. BOWMAN with Mr. SPARKS.
 Mr. GROUT with Mr. TALBOTT.
 Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, with Mr. COOK.
 Mr. SCRANTON with Mr. BEACH.
 Mr. CORNELL with Mr. LATHAM.
 Mr. CURTIN with Mr. THOMAS.
 Mr. RYAN with Mr. ATKINS.
 Mr. HUBBELL with Mr. WILLIS.
 Mr. DEZENDORF with Mr. WISE of Virginia.
 Mr. HAMMOND, of New York, with Mr. PHISTER.

 Mr. VAN AERNAM with Mr. AIKEN.
 Mr. MASON with Mr. MONEY.
 Mr. FARWELL, of Illinois, with Mr. SCALES.
 Mr. MILES with Mr. SINGLETON of Illinois.
 Mr. MCCOOK with Mr. RANDALL.
 Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa, with Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina.
 Mr. WILLIS. I find that Mr. HUBBELL has not voted, and therefore I withdraw my vote, as we are paired. I was paired last Monday, but it was not properly announced.

Mr. RITCHIE. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. GEDDES, on political questions, but not considering this of that character, I have voted.

On motion of Mr. HISCOCK, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move the House further insist on its disagreement, and ask for a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

The Speaker appointed as managers of said conference on the part of the House, Mr. HISCOCK, Mr. ROBESON, and Mr. COX of New York.

Mr. BROWNE. I desire to say my colleague, Mr. ORTH, is ill, and to ask he have indefinite leave of absence on that account.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask for unanimous consent at the close of the day.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. I present the following privileged report:

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6244) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

J. G. CANNON,
 FRANK HISCOCK,
 J. D. C. ATKINS,
Managers on the part of the House.
 W. B. ALLISON,
 H. L. DAWES,
 H. G. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement accompanying the conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the legislative, executive, and judicial bill submit the following in explanation of the conference report:

The conferees having failed to agree, leaves the bill in the same condition as when last referred to a conference, namely, on amendments 330 to 337 inclusive, touching the transfer of the records of the Surgeon-General's Office relating to pensions, together with the clerks and others employed thereon, to the Adjutant-General's Office, and relating to the division of rooms in the State, War, and Navy building between the State, War, and Navy Departments, the Senate refuses to recede.

J. G. CANNON,
 FRANK HISCOCK,
 J. D. C. ATKINS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments and ask for a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. BROWNE. The gentleman from Illinois will yield the floor for a moment?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BROWNE. At the time this appropriation bill was pending in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union I antagonized the last section.

Mr. CANNON. In part?

Mr. BROWNE. Yes, in part; providing for the transfer of the Surgeon-General's division to the custody of the Adjutant-General. I am in favor of transferring all the clerks of the Surgeon-General's Office to the new building, whether part of the War, the Navy, or the State Department building. I am willing to put them in one of the Departments or all of them. It is indispensable they should go there or to some other safe building. Indeed, there is no room for an increase of clerical force in the rooms now occupied by the Surgeon-General's division. I want to know if the House conferees—if it is a proper question—are not willing to concede the Surgeon-General shall still continue to exercise supervision of the records of his division as heretofore?

I will stand with the gentleman and with the committee for this transfer if so much may be conceded. I think that concession ought not to stand in the way of an agreement between the two Houses. I do not know that I have the right of course to inquire into the secret conferences or questions at issue between the committee; but I do hope that the House conferees may concede so much—that is, that the Surgeon-General shall still continue to exercise control over the medical records of the War Department as he has been doing heretofore; and I hope also that the House committee will insist continually, persistently insist, that this new building, safe, commodious, and convenient, containing ample room, or so much of it as may be necessary, shall be appropriated for this necessary purpose. There is no reason in the world why it should not be done. It belongs to the Government, to the people, paid for by them, and there is no purpose to which it may be better appropriated than to the accommodation of the records pertaining to the applications and allowances or consideration of pension claims. I believe the people will stand by the committee in insisting that so much at least shall be accorded.

Mr. CANNON. I will reply, Mr. Speaker, to the question or suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana. I can say to him that I am not embarrassed at all in giving him a full and perfect reply as to the status of the conference up to this time. We thought at one time that we had agreed touching the Adjutant and Surgeon General's Offices. The minds of both committees seemed to have met upon a proposition, which was reduced to form in writing. It was this: that the text of the House bill touching the consolidation of the records of the Surgeon and Adjutant General's Offices, which the Senate objected to, as well as some members of this House, that looked toward the direction or expression of opinion upon the part of Congress that this consolidation ought to be made, should be stricken out, and that the Secretary of War upon his own motion should be allowed to exercise only that discretion which he now has and has always had over these bureaus; and in lieu thereof that we should insert a provision making the contingent funds of these bureaus for furniture, &c., interchangeable, subject to use in whole or part for either or both bureaus, without anything else, so as to throw upon the Secretary of War the responsibility by giving him the power to exercise it with reference to the appropriations if he saw proper and necessary, and without what might be construed as a direction on the part of Congress. But when we came to the subsequent part of the section which directs the placing of the official records of the Army in that new War, State, and Navy building, taking them from a place of insecurity to one of security, they there totally failed to make any agreement; and perhaps it is just to the House that I should state here the reason why I propose to move that the House insist upon its disagreement and ask a further conference.

We expect to dispose of the pension claims in three years, and by the help of the gentleman from Indiana and of his committee we have now made provision by which $2,000,000 is appropriated to do this work, making necessary the employment of some 1,200 additional clerks upon these claims. While that part of the bill has been agreed upon as a part and parcel of that scheme, and a legitimate portion of it, the House enacted section 6, a proposition to put these records where they can be safe and where they can be practically operated upon by the present and the increased force. If that is not done the Secretary of War and the Commissioner of Pensions cannot be held to the performance of that which they proposed in the event of giving them the increase of force, for want of proper safety as well as proper facilities to work that force in. So that the bill is closed up as to the force, but is open as to a proper place to work the force upon these records in safety. You may say section 6 is legislation directing the reapportionment of this building.

I do not think it is legislation within the general rule. It is certainly not within the substance of the rule which discourages legislation upon an appropriation bill, because it does not affect the rights of anybody. It does not affect the rights of any part of the people or of a section, nor does it do otherwise than afford security to the property of the people. It merely utilizes that which belongs to the people, namely, this public building to enable them to economically and safely spend the money appropriated by this bill for the protection of its records and the employment of the force to work upon them. Therefore it is more in the direction of proper administration, which proper administration has not been had for ten years at the hands of the Executive, when for all of the ten years the Executive has had the power and has the power to-day to regulate it. We simply come now and put that limitation upon the bill which the House regarded as a wise one with reference to this particular work.

Now, we exhausted the question in the sub-committee of appropriations, and the committee exhausted it when considering the bill; but when it went to the Senate—and I may not speak of what took place there; suffice it, however, that it was sent to a committee of conference, along with all other amendments of the Senate. As to any or all of the amendments other than section 5 with which the committee of conference had to deal, we could bring the officers of the Government, at the instance of the Senate or House conferees, before the committee, and we could inquire of them in reference to the propriety of certain amendments, examine them as to details, and make statements in extenso.

But when we struck this one provision, so far as the Senate conferees were concerned, they seemed to intimate the House conferees were treading upon sacred ground, and they announced at the commencement and maintained from that time to this that they neither would assent to the House provision nor would they inquire as to its necessity.

Compromises have been talked of. Other provisions have been proposed. But in the opinion of the House conferees there has been no provision proposed by the Senate conferees that is anything more than an excuse to avoid doing what the House seeks to do. Now, there it is and that is all there is of it.

One word in conclusion upon that matter.

Mr. PAGE, (in his seat.) Let us have a vote.

Mr. CANNON. Not just yet. I feel that with this expenditure of $2,000,000, and in view of the surrounding circumstances and necessities, it is legitimate and fair that the House should exercise its privilege to ask that this matter be considered, and that this direction, by way of limitation of the use of this money, ought to go upon the bill.

But I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that we are rapidly nearing the last of the month, when the appropriations for the legislative and executive service run out. If we are in earnest about it—I do not desire to make any threats, I would not make any; it would not be parliamentary in me to do it, because I am acting as the mere servant of the House. Nor have I any desire to make any, even if they would be effective; but I do say let us recede outright if we are not in earnest. If we are in earnest about it, if we feel in our hearts it ought to be done, let us insist in a dignified manner that it ought to be done; and let us do this, not as a by-play, but in earnest.

Mr. BROWNE. I am satisfied, Mr. Speaker, that the increase of the clerical force in the Pension Bureau and in the offices of the Adjutant-General and Surgeon-General will be of very little consequence unless we can procure additional room in which the service of these employés may be performed. We might as well repeal the appropriation for this purpose unless Congress provides for enlarging the room in which the duties are to be performed. There can be but two ways in which this can be done, either in going out into the city and renting other buildings and charging the expenditure to the Treasury, or else taking a building already provided belonging to the nation containing ample room adapted to the purpose. I can see no reason in the world why these records may not be sent to that building and why these duties may not be performed there.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. What is the cause of this opposition? Is it insisted this is an invasion of the right or privilege or dignity of a co-ordinate branch of the Government?

Mr. BROWNE. I presume that the reason for it, at least in one Department, is that they think they have a right to appropriate the building for the purposes of that Department, and that this is an invasion of their rights. Now, it cannot be an invasion, so far as the War Department is concerned, because this duty and these records belong to that Department of the Government. But as I understand there is not sufficient vacant room that can be occupied in that Department building alone for the performance of this service. Now, there ought to be no objection from the State Department or the Navy Department. This service perhaps will continue but for a few years until it be closed.

Mr. ATKINS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BROWNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ATKINS. What is the precise objection of the gentleman from Indiana to the position of the conferees?

Mr. BROWNE. As I understand there is no difference between us now.

Mr. CANNON. I think the gentleman from Indiana is with us.

Mr. BROWNE. I understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to say they were willing to concede that the question of transferring the custody or the control of the records of the Medical Bureau to the Adjutant-General should be left to the discretion of the Secretary of War, just where it now is under the law. With that concession there is no difference between the gentleman from Illinois and myself. I agree with him, and in the remarks I am attempting to make I am giving some reasons why the House should insist on its disagreement, because the building which belongs to us is appropriate for the purpose, and because unless this or some other building be procured we cannot expedite the settlement of pension claims.

Mr. ATKINS. The gentleman from Indiana might have added to the remarks he has made that the transfer from the Surgeon-General's Office to the Adjutant-General's Office would save considerable clerical force in the sending of letters from the one office to the other.

Mr. CANNON. I think the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] did not misunderstand me. He is correct about our being willing that the Secretary of War should have the same discretion that he has under the law now. But if the gentleman paid attention to my remarks he would understand that we did formulate and at one time we substantially agreed upon a proposition which made the continuing funds of these bureaus of the War Department interchangeable, so that that discretion could be a living discretion.

Mr. BROWNE. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to say only one word in reference to this matter, and that is to emphasize what has been said by the chairman of the House conferees, the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON.] I believe that there is no trouble so far as the first proposition contained in the sixth section of the legislative bill is concerned, about our getting together there and agreeing to the provision of the bill.

So far as the other question is concerned, there is no doubt but what the Senate conferees—whether they represent the Senate or not in that sentiment of course I do not know—are earnestly and determinedly opposed to the House provision in reference to the distribution of the space in the new departmental building. I say this because I wish the House upon this question to speak emphatically its sentiment and its opinion.

If there is any doubt on the part of the House as to the course that should be pursued by the conferees of the House, that doubt should now be expressed. If the House is emphatically of opinion that we should continue to maintain the position we have taken, then we desire to go into that conference backed up by an expression of the House which shall not be doubtful or uncertain.

Mr. ANDERSON. We will give it to you.

Mr. CANNON. I now call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to have a rising vote on that question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the question a little more fully. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] moves that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments, and ask a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I do not know that the suggestion which I desire to make is of importance; but it seems to me that the House is taking a position upon one bill after another of sharp antagonism to the Senate, expecting, as the saying is, that the Senate will back down on everything. I do not know but what we may succeed. I do not refer alone to the position of the House on the pending proposition, but to the position of the House also on the river and harbor bill, and on the last bill which we had up, the deficiency bill. The proposition is that we stand firm to our position in antagonism to the Senate. That is all right perhaps, but I presume something is due to the other branch of Congress.

Mr. RYAN. The House ought to stand firm on this.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 98, noes 4.

So (no further count being called for) the motion of Mr. CANNON was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. CANNON of Illinois, Mr. HISCOCK of New York, and Mr. ATKINS of Tennessee.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PAGE. When the House adjourned yesterday there was pending a motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference on the river and harbor appropriation bill was rejected. I now call up that motion and ask that it be disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon laying upon the table the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STRAIT] to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to adopt the report of the committee of conference on the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. PAGE. I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] who made the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider to let us take a vote directly on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. COX, of New York. I call for tellers on the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The question was taken upon ordering tellers; and there were 20 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative not being one-fifth of a quorum) tellers were not ordered.

Mr. COX, of New York. I will withdraw the motion to lay on the table, and call for the yeas and nays directly on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. PAGE. That is right.

Mr. CALKINS. All right; let us have the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to adopt the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. McLANE. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion to reconsider is not debatable, because the previous question was operating on the main question, and that cuts off all debate.

Mr. McLANE. I desire to say but a few words.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not debatable at this stage of the proceedings.

Mr. McLANE. Do I understand the Chair to rule that it is not in order to submit any remarks at this time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not at this time. The yeas and nays have been demanded on the motion to reconsider.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 117, nays 77, not voting 95; as follows:

YEAS—117.

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. CANNON with Mr. RANDALL.

Mr. HARRIS, of New Jersey, with Mr. COX, of North Carolina.

Mr. LOWE with Mr. HOUSE.

Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. TOWNSHEND of Illinois.

Mr. LACEY with Mr. AIKEN.

Mr. FARWELL, of Illinois, with Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky.

Mr. HOUK. I am paired with my colleague, General DIBRELL; but as I know that if present he would vote "ay" upon this question, I have felt at liberty to vote in the same way.

Mr. COX, of New York. I have received a telegram from the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] stating that the train on which he was coming to this city has been detained by an accident; that he desired to be paired on this question, and if present would vote against the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have my vote recorded on this question. I was in the House, but happened to be speaking with my colleague, [Mr. HUTCHINS,] and therefore failed to answer when my name was called.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman states that he was giving attention at the time his name was called, and could not hear it, his vote will be received.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I simply state the fact that I was talking to my colleague and was also paying attention to the roll-call, but my name was called without my hearing it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the gentleman's statement brings him within the rule.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. On this question, if permitted to vote, I should vote "no."

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon agreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the river and harbor appropriation bill. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. McLANE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is the operation of the previous question exhausted?

The SPEAKER. The previous question is still operating upon the question of agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. O'NEILL. I thought the Speaker had indicated that the previous question would cease to operate if the motion to reconsider should prevail.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not intimate anything of the kind.

Mr. O'NEILL. I merely wanted to say, Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable.

The question on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference was taken; and there were—yeas 112, nays 82, not voting 95; as follows:

YEAS—112.

So the report of the committee of conference was adopted.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. McCook with Mr. COBB.

Mr. HOUK with Mr. DIBRELL.

Mr. BLACKBURN with Mr. HEILMAN.

Mr. CABELL with Mr. CROWLEY.

Mr. HOUK. As I have understood that General DIBRELL, with whom I am paired, would, if he were present, vote "no" on this question, I have refrained from voting. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "ay."

Mr. SPRINGER. I am paired with Mr. BINGHAM. If he were here, I would vote "no."

Mr. WISE, of Virginia. I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. DEZENDORF,] but as, if present, he would vote "ay," I have voted in the same way.

Mr. RANNEY. I was momentarily engaged. I did not hear my name called. If I had voted I should have voted "no."

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. PAGE moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. PAGE. There was an error in the enrollment of this bill, which the Senate has, by unanimous consent, agreed to correct. I understand that the message of the Senate in reference to this matter is at the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call attention in this connection to the message of the Senate on the same subject.

Mr. PAGE. Yes; I ask that the request of the Senate be agreed to. I ask unanimous consent of the House to correct an error which occurred in transcribing the amendments to the bill adopted by the Senate. The item in regard to Echo Harbor, New Rochelle, was reported as amended by the engrossing clerk of the Senate, when the item preceding was the one which had been amended. In line 19, on page 3 of the bill, I ask to insert, where the word "ten" occurs, the word "fifteen," and further to disagree to the amendment numbered 5 to the bill, which is the one which was inaccurately made. It is a clerical error, and I am desired by the conference committee to have the correction made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to agreeing to the request of the Senate in that regard, and also in disagreeing to amendment numbered 5, and that the bill be enrolled accordingly? The gentleman from California will explain what amendment 5 is.

Mr. PAGE. It was a clerical error made by the engrossing clerk of the Senate. The bill as passed by the Senate is the correct bill of course, but in engrossing the amendments the engrossing clerk made a mistake in placing the amendment upon a wrong item in the bill. The change will reduce the amount of the appropriation $2,000, and it corrects it in accordance with the action of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands this is outside of the conference report.

Mr. PAGE. Entirely.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the request of the Senate is agreed to, and the correction in the enrolled bill is ordered to be made accordingly.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. DUNN. I rise to a question of privilege, and ask the Clerk to read from this morning's RECORD what I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, there is a great deal of very sound discretion in what the Senator from Indiana has said. It is more than probable that the best thing the representatives of the people of the Mississippi Valley can do is to accept the report as it comes to us, but I do not propose that it shall be agreed to until I express my opinion in regard to the extraordinary conduct of a co-ordinate part of the Government, the House of Representatives and its conferees, in regard to this question. In the battle of epithets which raged here the other day, when the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] attacked the conference committee, I took no part. I satisfied myself upon reflection to "let the galled jade wince," my "withers are unwrung." I had made no increase on the bill for the local interests of any portion of the State of Missouri, although I was a member of the Committee on Commerce. Five thousand dollars was placed in the bill at my instance for a river in Southeast Missouri, and that was stricken out by the committee of conference. I made no complaint of it; I let it go.

I devoted all my energies, all my strength, and what little ability I possessed in the Commerce Committee to the improvement of the Mississippi River and the Missouri River. For those great national highways I was willing to strike out every dollar for every local interest in Missouri if the Government would give its bounty to those great rivers, whose improvement is so necessary to the people of the Northwest and of this whole country.

Now, what is the result? The Senate of the United States, representing the sovereign States of the Union, by a unanimous vote, declared that $5,000,000 should be given to the improvement of the Mississippi River, and $1,000,000 to the Missouri River. The President of the United States, coming from the eastern portion of the Union, and one of the Atlantic States, never having been upon the banks of the Mississippi River, with no local influence about him, but induced by the overwhelming interests involved in the improvement of that great river, sent an extraordinary, a special message to the Senate and the Congress of the United States, recommending the appropriation made by the Senate, and even a larger one.

In the face of all these facts, after we had unanimously voted in favor of $5,000,000 for the Mississippi River and $1,000,000 to the Missouri River, the House of Representatives send us a bill for over $17,000,000; and while the whole country indorses the Mississippi River appropriation, the press of the country, the public men of the country, the officials of the country without a dissenting voice, so far as I know, the House of Representatives says, we will strike down the appropriation for every river and harbor in the United States rather than put on $1,000,000 more for the Mississippi River in accordance with the recommendation of the Mississippi River commission.

Sir, the Senate of the United States has come to this, that it must give up its deliberate judgment under an oath of office taken by each of us. If we are to give up our judgments thus to the House of Representatives, then we might as well abdicate all right and all part in any portion of the legislative power of the country.

The bill comes back to us with a million dollars struck off for the Mississippi River, and half of the $100,000 added for the Missouri River which had been voted unanimously by the Senate struck off, and a provision put upon it which absolutely destroys the system recommended by Mr. Suter, the engineer for that river.

Mr. President, I have no official information of the fact, but I want to say that some potent influence is at work in the House of Representatives, subtle—I will not use the word of the Senator from Kansas, "sinister"—but most extraordinary. I have heard it said, I cannot believe it, but the air is rife with the rumor and the statement that members from States upon the banks of the Mississippi River have protested against the increase made by the Senate.

Mr. KASSON. I rise to a point of order, that in what has been read there is no question of privilege.

Mr. DUNN. Let it all be read.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is right to take up the time of this House in reading a long Senatorial speech which raises no question of privilege.

Mr. DUNN. That is not the end of it; let it all be read.

Mr. KASSON. If the gentleman says there is something to follow that raises a question of privilege, then I withdraw my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The whole must be read before the Chair can pass upon it.

Mr. KASSON. I raise the point of order there is no question of privilege involved.

Mr. REED. It is a pity the very excellent speech which follows that cannot be read.

Mr. McLANE. Does the gentleman from Iowa say there is no question of privilege here? Why, sir, it is the grossest reflection on this House and the conferees of this House.

The Clerk continued to read, as follows:

I do not blame the conferees of the Senate; they have doubtless done their best; but I have heard it, and I believe it to be absolutely correct, that this opposition does not come from other sections, but it comes from the representatives of the people who are vitally interested in the improvement of that great river. Those representatives, I am proud to say, are not from the State of Missouri.

I want the people of this country to know who has done this thing. I want the people of the Mississippi Valley to know from my place in the Senate that my skirts and those of my colleague and of the Senators from Louisiana and of Mississippi and all the Senators representing those States are free from the responsibility of this reduction. It comes from another source, and let the people of those States hold to the strictest responsibility the men who have done it.

I shall vote probably in the last resort, if I can do no better, for this report, but I do it under protest. I do it remonstrating against the rank, the gross injustice perpetrated upon the people of the Mississippi Valley and upon the Senate. If my course were mapped out and pursued by myself without reference to anything but my own feeling, I would say to the Senate, "stand by the original amount of $5,000,000. If the House of Representatives see proper to defeat the river and harbor bill rather than give us $1,000,000 more for the Mississippi River, after they have appropriated over $13,000,000 for all the minor improvements, let them take the responsibility and go back to their constituents and answer for it.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to the following language:

Mr. President, I have no official information of the fact, but I want to say that some potent influence is at work in the House of Representatives, subtle—I will not use the word of the Senator from Kansas, "sinister"—but most extraordinary. I have heard it said, I cannot believe it, but the air is rife with the rumor and the statement that members from States upon the banks of the Mississippi River have protested against the increase made by the Senate.

Then he goes on to say that the Representatives from Missouri did not do it. There remains on the banks of the Mississippi River, below Missouri, Tennessee, Arkansas, Mississippi, and Louisiana, and this is a direct aspersion on the Representatives of those States, designated by locality where they live; an accusation that is false in fact, and I have the right—

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. And Kentucky and Illinois as well.

Mr. KASSON. Iowa also. I now insist on my point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to inquire whether Iowa is sensitive on the subject?

Mr. KASSON. Iowa never appropriates to herself anything that is not aimed at her.

Mr. DUNN. I feel it to be my duty, living in the locality alluded to, to answer this charge. There is also a broad charge made against the House itself. Sir, the House can well afford to rest upon its record upon this great question, in contrast with the record of the Senate upon the same subject, meeting record with record—

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I hope the point of order will be ruled upon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Arkansas must confine himself strictly to the question which he claims to be one of privilege.

Mr. DUNN. That is exactly what I am going to do. The point I make is that the Representatives designated in those States are charged you may say by name, absolutely charged with dereliction of their duty; and I desire to answer that charge. Now, I say the difference between the action of the Senate and of this House upon this subject is one of record, and I am willing that the record of the House shall be placed against the record of the Senate—

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, I present this reason for making the point which I have made—

Mr. DUNN. I propose simply to answer with the record—

Mr. KASSON. I must insist upon the point of order. Now, we have limited by rule the specific questions of privilege which may be admitted, and to enlarge them would tend more to bring the House into ridicule than it would to preserve its dignity and respect. Unless, therefore, this be a question which affects the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings, it does not present a question of privilege. If it does not affect the rights, reputation, and conduct of members individually in their representative capacity only, it is not in order as a question of privilege. I claim that no member of the House is subjected, by that which has been read, to any imputation whatever. The attempt to construe it into anything insulting to the House exhibits a degree of sensitiveness that gentlemen, I think, ought not to manifest toward a co-ordinate branch of the Government in any such matters. I think myself that "potent influences" have been at work to secure the passage of this bill, and if there is anything in that of which complaint might be made it is that potent influence which I understand to be the great aggregated amount of the bill and the division or dispersion of it into so many Congressional districts. But under our rule of privilege, Mr. Speaker, it is very clear that nothing has been exhibited in what has been read here to present a question of personal privilege.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. KASSON. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to ask the gentleman whether it is not true that anything which touches any one or more of the members of the House of Representatives, acting in their capacity as members of that House, does not touch the dignity of the whole, and in that respect present a question of privilege?

Mr. KASSON. I fail utterly to discover anything that applies to a single individual member of the House in what has been read, and I fail to discover anything that assails the dignity or integrity of the House as a body.

Mr. HASKELL. Permit me to ask a question or to make a suggestion in the line of that submitted by the gentleman from Iowa. The only thing here that can possibly be subject to the construction placed upon the language by the gentleman from Arkansas are the words used in that speech, "potent influence." There is not an intimation in that speech that may not be construed to mean that the potent influence referred to was not an entirely legitimate one; that it was a beneficent influence, and there is not a member on this floor that in any vote which will ever be cast upon the floor in the future but will, I hope, be actuated, impelled, and moved by just such potent influences.

Mr. KASSON. The "subtle" character of the influence is the contents of the bill itself, I will add, and its application to numerous districts. I see nothing else in the language which has been read to which the most sensitive nature could be presumed to attach any personal bearing.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, the language which I have quoted charges that members of this House living along the Mississippi River below the State of Missouri have urged the reduction of the total amount, or rather opposed the addition of $1,000,000 to the appropriation for the improvement of that river; that they have exerted some subtle if not sinister influence to prevent the addition of $877,000 to the appropriation for the Mississippi River, as provided in the House bill.

Mr. KASSON. They had a perfect right to oppose it if they saw proper. There is nothing that can be charged against them of an improper nature for doing that.

Mr. DUNN. But the fact of the case is that they did not; and this goes before our constituents and presents grave, damaging charges that their Representatives here upon the floor of this House have endeavored to defeat one of the most important objects which they have in view.

Mr. KASSON. But you have the record of the vote to which you can point.

Mr. DUNN. But I want to answer that statement so that the facts will go before the people as they really are and as they ought to go.

Mr. HASKELL. This appears to be a question of privilege with constituencies, and not one in which the members themselves appear to be interested.

Mr. KASSON. I do not think the gentleman from Arkansas ought to take that language to himself.

Mr. DUNN. It reflects upon all the members living along the Mississippi River below Missouri, and places them in a false position before the country and their respective constituencies, and to that extent affects them in their representative capacity.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that in any sense a member of the House has a right to attack a member of the Senate for words spoken in debate in that body.

Mr. DUNN. I do not mean to make any such attack.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct the Clerk to read from the Manual, as bearing upon this question, pages 102 and 110.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is highly expedient, says Hatsell, for the due preservation of the privileges of the separate branches of the legislature that neither should encroach on the other or interfere in any matter depending before them so as to preclude, or even influence, that freedom of debate which is essential to a free council. They are therefore not to take notice of any bills or other matters depending or of votes that have been given or of speeches which have been held by the members of either of the other branches of the legislature, until the same have been communicated to them in the usual parliamentary manner. (Page 102.)

It is a breach of order in debate to notice what has been said on the same subject in the other house, or the particular votes or majorities on it there, because the opinion of each house should be left to its own independency, not to be influenced by the proceedings of the other; and the quoting them might beget reflections leading to a misunderstanding between the two houses. (Page 110.)

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that these two rules are very salutary ones; and it is not for the Chair to go beyond their terms. The difficulty here is whether or not a member who thinks himself aggrieved by a statement of fact with reference to himself may not be allowed to answer, not by way of recrimination, but by way of stating the fact so as to set himself right before the House and the country. This is not quite a question of unfavorable comment upon what is said in the other body, because it is a personal matter relating to the individual and not to the general proceedings of the House. The Chair is inclined to sustain the point of order; but to the extent indicated will allow the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. DUNN,] if he desires, to state what he thinks is an answer to the charge, without making any charge himself of any kind against the Senate.

Mr. KASSON. Allow me to ask if the gentleman says that vote was such as is described by the Senator?

The SPEAKER. That is a matter for the gentleman himself.

Mr. KASSON. If it is it touches the point of order.

Mr. McLANE. Before the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] proceeds I desire to ask the Chair a parliamentary question. I want to know if the gentleman from Arkansas or any other member should feel the House was insulted, its privileges violated, its deliberations reflected upon, without any reference to himself individually, would he not have a right to call the attention of the House to it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would rather not pass upon that question now.

Mr. KASSON. That is hypothetical.

Mr. McLANE. I want to know if the gentleman from Iowa denies my right, if I find in the RECORD an offensive reflection on the deliberations of this House by a Senator—does he deny my right to call the attention of the House to it?

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman might call the attention of the House to it, but not as a personal question.

Mr. McLANE. As a question affecting the privileges of the House. Now, here is certain language which the gentleman from Arkansas regards as offensive to the House.

Mr. KASSON. And I make the point that it is not offensive in its character.

Mr. McLANE. That is to the merits and would come in later. I submit to the Chair my inquiry whether if in the RECORD any member of this House finds reflections upon the House made by a Senator, is it not the privilege of the member to vindicate the rights of the House? I am amazed at the gentleman from Iowa. He would be the first if he had been reflected upon—

Mr. KASSON. Undoubtedly a member would have a right to call the attention of the House in that case to what was offensive for the action of the House. This is not that case.

The SPEAKER. When that question arises the Chair will try to rule on it. [Mr. O'NEILL rose.] For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. O'NEILL. I wish to know how much time is to be occupied with this matter, and whether the members from all these States are to be allowed to speak. I want to resume the floor, which I believe I had some time ago.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] is recognized.

Mr. DUNN. I am not so vain as to assume and take to myself all that is implied in the language which has been read of the Senator from Missouri. I am not so self-conceited as to assume that I have been such an important figure in that matter as to have been singled out and referred to specially; but there is in that language a charge and aspersion upon all the members who live along the Mississippi River, and upon the whole House, that are not warranted by facts and is without foundation; and, sir, I am surprised, indeed amazed, to find that any one could be found anywhere reckless enough to make such a charge as this against the members of this House who represent the States along the Lower Mississippi River, whose long and faithful services in this House and whose steady fidelity to this great and important work are so well known to the whole country. Sir, their record in this House and upon this work of national importance is well known, and dates far back beyond the very recent date of that Senator's election to a seat in the Senate. For myself I do not claim any of the honors of paternity of this great measure, but I do claim for myself and my colleagues absolute and perfect fidelity to it since its origin and through every stage of its progress to the present hour.

Mr. Speaker, I repel that charge, so far as I and my colleagues are concerned, as being unjust and unwarranted in fact. I am ready to place our record and the record of all the members along that river with whom I stand and have stood during the Forty-sixth and Forty-seventh Congresses before the country, and upon that to rest our claims for the approval of the country and of our constituencies. What is that record? Since the committee upon which John C. Calhoun served as a member visited the Mississippi River in 1846, the great problem for this Government to solve has been to find a method for the improvement of that river, a method to overcome the obstacles that had baffled engineering genius and skill successfully for half a century or more.

Mr. HISCOCK. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is the gentleman from Arkansas in order in his present line of remark?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Arkansas must confine himself to answering such portions of the charge as he complains of.

Mr. HISCOCK. I object to a question of this kind being turned into an occasion for gentlemen defining their position on the whole question of the Mississippi River improvement. Let them print.

Mr. DUNN. I do not intend to do anything of that sort.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not intend to allow the gentleman from Arkansas to go beyond the mere statement of facts so far as he considered that was called for to vindicate his position assailed by the remarks which have been read.

Mr. HISCOCK. How does that question come here? Is there any motion pending in the House; any resolution offered?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to raise a question of personal privilege.

Mr. DUNN. It is very difficult for gentlemen who have been out of the House and do not know the origin of this matter to perceive the application of my present line of remark.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman has denied that this was a question of personal privilege. He brought it up, as I understand, as a matter of House privilege. Is it intended the motion shall be submitted to expel the gentleman from Missouri from the Senate, or that he be committed for contempt, or something of that sort?

Mr. DUNN. I might call the gentleman from New York to order. He is indulging in facetious remarks which amuse him perhaps, but I do not see that they amuse anybody else, nor do I see that they are dignified, courteous, or pregnant with the evidences of greatness.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas must proceed in accordance with the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. DUNN. I assume that these remarks amounted to a charge against these members. To answer that I have offered the record of the members living in those States, a brief résumé of the history of their labors here. Is not that in order?

Mr. HISCOCK. I object to that.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. DUNN. If the gentleman thinks he can state my proposition better than I can, perhaps I had better yield to him. But I have to answer for myself, and I will not answer, indeed I would scorn to answer, in his way for myself upon that question.

Now, I have stated that the origin of this legislation as to the settlement of a practical plan—

Mr. HISCOCK. I now call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order. The gentleman must not proceed to debate the question. He has only the privilege of answering that which he takes to himself.

Mr. DUNN. May I not be allowed to print that part of the record?

Mr. KASSON. Oh, yes.

Mr. SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the printing.

Mr. DUNN. That record shows that—

Mr. HISCOCK. I object to its being given here; he can print it.

Mr. DUNN. I will not give you the record, for there is a great deal of it. I would be very much obliged, however, if gentlemen in common decency and courtesy would allow me to proceed. This is a matter that concerns me and those of us who live in those States referred to; and it is not courteous, it is not dignified, in gentlemen to jump in with facetious remarks.

Mr. HISCOCK. So far as the question of dignity is concerned,

"the gentleman from New York" is entirely capable of taking care of the matter in a manner satisfactory to himself.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hold that this presented a question of privilege any further than to allow the gentleman to make a correction of the statement made so far as it was applicable to himself.

Mr. DUNN. What I desired to say was that all the investigations and legislation that have led up to the development of the present great system of improvement of the Mississippi River and protection of its delta have originated in the House of Representatives, and were introduced and pressed to final passage by members representing States along the Lower Mississippi River.

The records of Congress show that the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. GIBSON,] on the 26th day of June, 1876, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 134) authorizing and directing the President to appoint a commission to provide for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River. This was during the Forty-fourth Congress. No action was taken upon this important measure during that Congress. But it is worthy of note here that this was, so far as I can find out, the first of the series of measures that followed and that finally resulted in the appointment of the Mississippi River improvement commission.

The same gentleman introduced several bills and joint resolutions for the same purpose during the Forty-fifth Congress, as did also Mr. Chalmers, of Mississippi, and Mr. ROBERTSON, of Louisiana, during the first and second sessions of that Congress.

On the basis of these various measures the bill (H. R. No. 4318) was formed by the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River and reported to the House by its chairman, Mr. ROBERTSON. This bill passed the House on the 5th day of February, 1879, and was reported to the Senate and there suffered to die for want of action.

A special session of the Forty-sixth Congress was called to meet on the 18th of March, 1879, and numerous copies of the same bill that had passed the House as before stated were introduced and referred to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River, of which committee I had the honor to be a member during that Congress. I will here read the history of this legislation, as given by the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] in a speech delivered by him upon this floor on June 3, 1882, and to the correctness of which I will add my own testimony:

This commission bill failed, falling between the two Houses, for the last session of the Forty-fifth Congress terminated the 4th of March, 1879. But an extra session of the Forty-sixth Congress was convened and legislation for the river was pressed vigorously. Several bills were offered for a Mississippi River commission, modeled on the bill from the committee in the Forty-fifth Congress, substantially like it, limiting the commission to Saint Louis, Alton, and Warsaw, on the same day and in the same call, by Messrs. ROBERTSON, Chalmers, and SINGLETON, as will be seen by comparing these bills with one another and the commission bill of the Forty-fifth Congress.

A few days after, another bill was introduced and referred to the committee, different from all these in its title and in the extent of jurisdiction conferred, and in adhering more closely to the commercial idea and to other bills previously introduced on the same subject by the same person in the Forty-fifth Congress, as follows:

"A bill to provide for the appointment of the Mississippi River commission for the improvement of the said river from the head of the passes, near its mouth, to its headwaters."

After this bill had been under discussion in the Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River and certain amendments as to details made and accepted, at the suggestion especially of General Joseph E. Johnston and others, the author, when the hour of adjournment arrived, remained in the committee-room to perfect it so as to introduce it again without delay, and invited Mr. ROBERTSON and Mr. DUNN to remain with him for a few moments, and to assist him in incorporating the amendments and suggestions adopted by the committee and to arrange the order of the phraseology of the fourth section. Valuable aid was freely given by both gentlemen. Mr. DUNN's suggestions as to the arrangement of the phraseology of the fourth section were mainly adopted by the author, and, as thus perfected, the bill was reported the same morning to the House, referred again to the committee, and was adopted without change by the committee at the next meeting, as would naturally follow, from the fact that all changes agreed on in the committee had been embraced in the revision.

This bill constituting the commission became the law, and was approved June 28, 1879, and the members of the commission were appointed and began the work committed to their charge. They have submitted two reports to Congress, with their recommendations, plans, surveys, and estimates.

The last Congress voted $1,000,000 to enable them to undertake the execution of their plans. This appropriation was placed in the regular river and harbor bill by the Committee on Commerce at the urgent solicitation of the member who had introduced the bill and carried it through the Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River. If the Committee on Commerce had declined to incorporate the appropriation in this annual bill, all our efforts would have failed in the last Congress.

At the opening of the Forty-seventh Congress an energetic effort was made to secure for the Committee on Levees and the Improvement of the Mississippi River—which, under the new rules, had the authority to consider subjects relating to levees only—jurisdiction over questions relating to the improvement of the river, with the power to make appropriations and to report at any time, and we failed. It only remained then for the friends of the river to go, under the orders of the House, before the Committee on Commerce, where it was embraced in the bound volume of estimates, submitted by the Secretary of War with his approval, for the improvement of all the rivers and harbors of the country.

This committee not only considered the report but called before it the members of the Mississippi commission, and after thorough discussion they voted to allow $1,123,000 to be expended by the Secretary of War in order, as the old acts recite, to afford "ease and safety" to the navigation and commerce of the river, in accordance with the plans and estimates and recommendations of the Mississippi River commission, from the passes to Cairo.

I have entered upon this sketch of the legislation to show the care and circumspection with which it has been conducted. In the Forty-sixth Congress, after the commission had submitted their plans, in order that they might be more fully understood and appreciated by Congress, a resolution was offered and adopted directing a sub-committee to go down the river and to verify for themselves, as far as might be possible, by personal inspection and investigation the plans of the commission, to acquaint themselves with the phenomena of the river. Members from the North who went there incredulous and apprehensive came back enthusiastic advocates. The report of this committee should be read by every member of Congress. It constitutes a valuable addition to our knowledge of the river, and the character of the members who signed it entitles it to great weight and influence.

I may be pardoned if I add here that I had the honor to go as the chairman of that committee; and I shall ever take pride in the fact that the report of that committee received the sanction and approval of the whole Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River and of Congress.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let honor be given where honor is due. I will not criticize here the long-apparent indifference of the Senate, nor characterize what some might term the new-born zeal of some Senators on this great and important measure which lately makes its first appearance. Sir, if I have been more earnest in any one great measure than another; if I have labored harder for any one than another, it has been for this improvement of the Mississippi River and the protection of its delta. And, sir, I can say the same for my colleagues and for all the Representatives of those States.

And so far as a sinister or subtle motive actuating members from those States along the river is concerned, it is untrue, it is absolutely untrue. We have desired to be practical. We have not desired to antagonize the Committee on Commerce, who had this measure in charge, but we have yielded to their views. We have in this matter deemed it wisest not to hazard a great interest by insisting upon what was thought by the committee and by some of the engineers to be a larger sum than could be expended during the remainder of the fiscal year. We have desired to be practical in this matter.

Now, so far as the action of the committee of conference is concerned, so far as the reasons which influence that committee in leaving out the million of dollars added by the Senate are concerned, my information has been, and is, that they did so because some member or members of that committee may have received information from General Gillmore himself—

Mr. KING. General Wright.

Mr. DUNN. Or the Engineer Corps, that the appropriation made by the House without that addition was all that probably could be expended during the year. So far as I am concerned, and so far as I know of the acts of members living in the region of country designated, I know of no influence on their part, and I deny that any influence on their part has induced the committee of conference to strike off that addition.

Mr. STEELE. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEELE. Are the remarks of the gentleman upon the question of privilege?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. DUNN. This innuendo, this charge made generally, no one being named—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] that this is not a subject to be debated; not a subject to be entered upon for discussion; only the personal matter that the gentleman was permitted to explain.

Mr. DUNN. So far as I am concerned then—

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot allow the gentleman to make a speech.

Mr. DUNN. So far as I am concerned then, I desire to disclaim any and all responsibility for that action. I have voted with the Committee on Commerce in this matter, because it was the opinion of the committee and because I was brought to so understand and believe that unless we concurred in such action we would probably hazard the entire bill. I have voted for it as the best and the most that could be had, being made to understand that the committee were informed that that amount is probably as much as could be used this year.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I now call for the regular order.

Mr. GIBSON. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GIBSON. So far as any criticism may have been made against any member or members of the Louisiana delegation, I feel that it is hardly worth while for us to notice it. Every member of this House knows, and I believe every man, woman, and child in the State of Louisiana feels that they have in each member of the Louisiana delegation in this House, on the Republican as well as on the Democratic side of the House, a Representative honest, faithful, and devoted at all times and under all circumstances to their best interests.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. KING. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I shall not detain the House but a few minutes.

Mr. KING. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING] cannot be recognized while another member is speaking. The Chair desires to state that in many instances gentlemen insist upon recognition and upon speaking when another member has the floor, which is quite embarrassing to the Chair and certainly to the gentleman occupying the floor. The Chair makes this remark without any personal reference to the present case.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I should not have referred to the remarks of the Senator from Missouri, for whom I entertain the highest regard, but for the fact that the gentleman from Arkansas has caused his remarks to be read and has commented upon them, and a member on the other side of this House in the colloquy referred to the fact that Kentucky was on the Mississippi River, leaving possibly the inference that the Senator may have alluded to myself or some member of the Kentucky delegation. Mr. Speaker, I represent the only district in Kentucky which touches on the Mississippi River, and when I read the Senator's remarks I went to him and asked him to whom he referred. He said he did not refer to me or any member from Kentucky. I told him that if he had his remarks would have been unjust to me, for I had upon all occasions advocated the improvement of the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers and had never advised or tried to cut down any appropriation to improve the Mississippi.

Mr. Speaker, this is all that I deem necessary to say. My position in regard to the improvement of the Mississippi River is well understood. I have upon various occasions at every session of Congress expressed upon this floor my views in regard to the improvement of the Mississippi, Ohio, and navigable rivers of this country. I have uniformly advocated the improvement not only of the Mississippi and Ohio but all of their navigable tributaries; but have opposed appropriations to streams that are not navigable and never will be, and the improvement of which will not benefit the commerce of the country, that have been incorporated in river and harbor bills. My remarks are to be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, made at every session of Congress when this question was under consideration since I have been a member of Congress. My remarks have been published in the Courier-Journal and other papers in the West. I have had some of my speeches on this question published and sent all over my district, and my position is well understood, except by those who do not want to understand them and desire to misrepresent me. I stand, sir, upon the record I have made upon this question, and rely upon it for a full vindication of my course with all fair-minded men.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I rise to indorse most emphatically the statements made by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] and my colleague, [Mr. GIBSON.] I am sure every member of every delegation from the States bordering on the Lower Mississippi has done everything in his power to secure all the money possible to inaugurate and further the work of improvement of the river and to protect the people who live along it from overflow. I am further satisfied that the people living along that great stream are convinced of this fact, as are the members of this House.

The great work of the Congress is now complete. All that is necessary will be to annually appropriate sums to continue the improvement until completed. God grant that these people may get the full benefit of the vast sum now placed at the disposal of the Mississippi River commission, and that they may be saved from another such disaster as overwhelmed them in ruin this last spring and filled them with despair. In their name I appeal to the President to give his sanction to this wise and munificent legislation and make good the words of his patriotic message that carried courage and hope to so many millions of his countrymen.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. No. 314) to designate, classify, and fix the salaries of persons in the railway mail service.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 327) for the relief of John W. Humphrey.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts, and others called for the regular order.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, before this proceeding commenced I had the floor upon a request for unanimous consent to pass a bill. I desire to resume the floor.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for, and unless the call be withdrawn the Chair must announce the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I will not withdraw the call, because I think that if we go on for half an hour we shall get out of this hole.

HEIRS OF THOMAS TOBY.

The SPEAKER. Yesterday at the conclusion of the morning hour, under the special rule, there had been called up by the Committee on the Judiciary for consideration the bill (S. No. 543) for the relief of the heirs of Thomas Toby. The bill had been read, and also, by unanimous consent, the accompanying report, the right to object being reserved. The question is now, Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

The question being taken, six members objected.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask unanimous consent to state the grounds on which this claim rests,

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is in the nature of an objection. The next committee is—

Mr. CHACE. I rise to a question of personal privilege. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot interrupt the business of this hour.

Mr. CHACE. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The House is proceeding now under the special rule.

Mr. CHACE. The Pound rule?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to set apart a day for the consideration of "questions of personal privilege?"

Mr. ELLIS. If we are proceeding regularly under the Pound rule, I wish to inquire what has become of the bill from the Committee on the Judiciary which came over from yesterday?

The SPEAKER. Six members objected, and of course it was not considered, under the rule.

The Speaker proceeded with the call of committees until the Committee on Foreign Affairs was reached.

WIDOW OF GENERAL STEPHEN A. HURLBUT.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. By direction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I desire to call up Senate joint resolution No. 75, providing for the payment of the balance of the salary of the deceased American minister to Peru, General Hurlbut, to his family. I wish to follow this with a request for unanimous consent that Senate joint resolution No. 77, making similar provision for the family of General Kilpatrick, may be considered at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin, as instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, calls up for present consideration Senate joint resolution No. 75, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 75) allowing the widow of General Stephen A. Hurlbut, late minister to Peru, one year's salary.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That there be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to Mrs. Sophronia R. Hurlbut, the widow of General Stephen A. Hurlbut, late envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Peru, one year's salary as said minister, from August 1, 1881, in addition to all legal allowances, deducting the amount of salary received by said Hurlbut since that date, and also to pay the necessary expenses incurred in the removal of his remains from Peru to the State of Illinois for interment, to be paid under the direction of the Secretary of State.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I wish to inquire whether any committee of this House has reported upon this matter?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. This is a joint resolution passed by the Senate. It has been brought to the attention of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and I am instructed by that committee to move that it be taken up and passed.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I would inquire whether a joint resolution of similar character has been acted upon by a committee of this House, as the rule requires.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. The subject has been acted on by our committee.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. The rule requires that the substance of the measure called up shall have been acted upon by a committee of this House and reported upon and the report printed. I only wished to know whether the rule had been complied with.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. There has been no such action on the part of the committee of this House, but I suppose it is competent to take the joint resolution from the Speaker's table and put it on its passage under the new rule.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I do not think it comes within the rule, but I do not object.

Mr. HISCOCK. Cannot this joint resolution be amended by adding a provision in reference to a similar case?

The SPEAKER. The first question is, Will the House consider the joint resolution?

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not the question whether the subject is before the House under the rule referred to? I understand the gentleman from Michigan to state that this subject has not been considered by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Perhaps I am mistaken in that.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. It has been considered in this informal way. The attention of the committee has been called to this joint resolution on the Speaker's table. The subject-matter is fully and fairly considered as if it was a joint resolution reported from the committee. They have not considered it formally and reported any proposition.

Mr. HOLMAN. Has the subject been referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. There has been no formal reference.

Mr. HOLMAN. The substance of the bill has not been referred to the committee and no report has been made from that committee?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Except in this informal way.

The SPEAKER. The only question which the Chair is to determine is whether the Committee on Foreign Affairs has considered a proposition similar to this.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman states it has not.

The SPEAKER. And considered it favorably. That is the only question for the Chair.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I have already stated to the gentleman from Indiana that we have considered the substance of this joint resolution as carefully and fully as though it had been regularly referred to us. There has been no bill referred to us on which we acted perhaps under the strict letter of the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the matter of the bill is necessary, but the subject must have received a favorable consideration of the committee. Although this is a Senate bill, it would come within the rule.

Mr. HOLMAN. Would not the subject-matter in some form of joint resolution or bill have to be before the committee before it can be the subject of instruction?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman and the House to the language of the rule. After speaking of the House bills it refers to Senate bills and joint resolutions which are substantially similar measures to those which have received the favorable action by House committees.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman from Wisconsin has stated that joint resolution was not referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The rule contemplates measures which have not been reported, but are upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. McMILLIN. But they must be the substance of measures considered and reported from the committee. This may be a meritorious claim, but we should construe this rule strictly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to answer the question.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. The matter of these joint resolutions has been considered in the committee informally.

The SPEAKER. Favorably?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Yes, sir; they acted upon them favorably. Although they have not been referred to the committee, that Committee on Foreign Affairs has had them under consideration, and they directed me without a dissenting voice to make this motion.

Mr. RANDALL. If there is a point made against these joint resolutions the better way would be perhaps for the gentleman from Wisconsin to withdraw them, and immediately after the hour has expired he can call them up by unanimous consent, for it is not likely that anybody will object to them. We will thereby avoid a construction being placed on this new rule which may come up to plague us hereafter.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I am willing to accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. It will be better in another view, as the gentleman can then call up the two joint resolutions he has indicated, while under this rule only one can be considered.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think any one will object.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I accept the suggestion, and with the permission of the House will withdraw my motion with the understanding at the close of the hour I shall ask unanimous consent to take up the joint resolutions.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think anybody will object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that if my objection obstructs the passage of this resolution I will withdraw it, if it be now in order to do so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the matter is withdrawn by consent of the gentleman from Wisconsin, to be called up at the close of the hour.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to ask permission to state in this connection that there are in my judgment no more pressing or meritorious matters pending before the House than those to which I refer.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let me suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, that when this matter shall come before the House for action he move an amendment to one of these bills including the widow of Dr. Henry H. Garnet, our late minister to Liberia. That, I think, is an amendment which should be put upon one of the bills. There is certainly no more meritorious case than that.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Unless there be objection to doing so, I shall certainly be glad to include an amendment for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. That question is not now before the House.

COMPANY B, FOURTEENTH INFANTRY.

The Committee on Military Affairs was called.

Mr. STEELE. By consent of the Committee on Military Affairs, I desire to ask present consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6517) authorizing compensation to members of Company B, Fourteenth Infantry, for private property destroyed by fire on the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad.

I will simply say that this takes no money whatever out of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable. The bill will be read.

The bill was read. It is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to cause to be ascertained the actual value of the private property belonging to the officers and men of Company B, Fourteenth Infantry, as well as the company property belonging to said company, and the camp and garrison equipage and stores belonging to the United States, that were destroyed by fire on the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad on the 14th day of August, 1869, and certify such values when so ascertained to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, who shall thereupon proceed to state an account in favor of the persons to whom any money may be so ascertained to be due; and the Treasurer shall pay the same to them out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That the aggregate sum so paid by virtue of this act for private property shall not exceed the sum of $5,726.29, whatever may be the certified value of said property.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to institute proceedings, either in the courts or otherwise, as he may deem best, to recover for the United States the value of the property so destroyed from the person, company, or corporation found liable therefor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. McMILLIN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have the report read.

Mr. STEELE. I can state briefly, if the gentleman will permit me, the exact substance of this claim. In 1870, when the Indian war broke out in Montana, a car with the baggage of these soldiers was being transported from Chattanooga to Nashville on the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad. It was set off on a side-track and while there was destroyed by fire. The railroad company paid the amount of money for loss of baggage into the Treasury to reimburse the men for their loss. Now the Comptroller wants authority to pay the money out of the Treasury to the company. It will be seen, as I have stated, that this takes no money whatever out of the Treasury.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. How much money does it involve?

Mr. STEELE. About $5,000.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. That is all right.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I must object, for the reason—

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order; the only question before the House is whether the bill shall be considered.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Then I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. This bill does not come before the House by instructions from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter of fact upon which the Chair is not called to rule. The Chair will, however, request the gentleman from Indiana to state the facts for the information of the Chair.

Mr. STEELE. I stated that I presented this by the consent of the Committee on Military Affairs. I have traveled around and seen every member of the committee personally, and obtained his consent to this bill. We have been unable to secure a quorum; but for the benefit of these men who have been kept out of their money for a long time, I have made personal efforts and conferred with every member of the committee and obtained his consent.

The SPEAKER. Since the adoption of the new rule?

Mr. STEELE. Yes, sir; this very day.

Mr. RANDALL. That is not technically a meeting of the committee.

The SPEAKER. It is not a meeting of the committee, it is true; but the Chair thinks the committee can determine its action.

Mr. STEELE. This has been pending since 1870—

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable. The Chair will again submit to the House, Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RANDALL. I think the Chair had better say now whether there should not be a regularly called meeting of the committee in each case authorizing or directing a member to submit these motions to the House.

Mr. MAGINNIS. The gentleman has tried to secure a meeting of the committee, but could not get a quorum.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to have a construction by the Chair, so that we may know how we will be governed in these cases.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls attention to this rule, for the reason that it is bound to take the statement of the member who calls up the subject for consideration. The Chair thinks it is for the committee itself to determine as to the manner in which it shall make the order or give its consent for calling up such matters. The Chair thinks, however, that to grant consent individually by members about and over the House is not strictly within the rule; but that, as the Chair has said, is for the committee to determine.

Mr. RANDALL. That is what I desired the Chair to say.

Mr. MAGINNIS. It has not been possible to secure a quorum of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot engage in controversy as to whether the committee ordered the matter to be presented or not.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I hope unanimous consent will be given to the gentleman from Indiana to take up this bill.

Mr. POUND. I dislike very much to raise a point of order upon this bill; but inasmuch as the precedent will be established under this rule, I feel compelled to do so. I therefore make the point of order that this is a private bill and does not properly come before the House under the provisions of that rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that private bills are included under the rule.

Mr. POUND. I cannot so understand the rule. It provides for the consideration of public bills—

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks, however, that private bills are also included, as the gentleman will find.

Mr. POUND. Then the committee have amended the rule in a manner of which I was not aware, and I ask that it be read.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I think it ought to be understood whether it is necessary to call a meeting of the committee to take action on these matters as a committee, or whether it is enough to go around among members of the committee and get their consent in order to bring ourselves within the meaning of this rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated its view of that matter as well as it can. The committee must decide for itself what it regards as a meeting of the committee. The Chair thinks the committees should be called together and have a quorum in order to agree about calling up a measure; but when a member rises and says he is instructed by his committee to call up a bill the Chair cannot make inquiries beyond that.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. But the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] says a meeting of his committee was not called, but that he consulted members of the committee and got their consent. I hope the bill will pass, but I would rather it should pass by unanimous consent, so that the rule may not receive such a construction as is sought to be given to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MUTCHLER. I object.

The SPEAKER. But one gentleman objects. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. It is whether under this rule the report may now be read?

The SPEAKER. The report could have been read if the gentleman had asked it in time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rose to ask for the reading of the report, but the Chair had already begun to put the question.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman states he rose in time, the Chair will direct the reading of the report.

Mr. HOLMAN. As soon as the Chair began to put the question I began to rise, and I rose as quickly as I could.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report. Five minutes having been occupied in the reading,

Mr. HOLMAN said: I desire the reading of the report shall be finished as a part of the five-minute debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks that the report be read in his time.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the report, which is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred bill H. R. No. 6517, having duly considered the same, beg leave to report as follows:

That on the 14th day of August, 1869, certain officers and men of Company B, Fourteenth Infantry, with their baggage and sundry articles of public property, were being conveyed by order of proper military authority by the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad Company, under a contract made by said railroad company with the United States, from Nashville to Chattanooga; that at Murfreesborough, Tennessee, while in transitu as aforesaid, the car containing said baggage and public property, while in charge of the agents of said railroad company and through their negligence, was, together with the baggage of said officers and men and said public property, destroyed by fire.

The officers and men by direction of the Quartermaster-General prepared itemized accounts of their losses, substantiated them by affidavit and the certificate of the commanding officer, and forwarded them to General Meigs, January 3, 1870. The Secretary of War, February 5, 1870, directed that officer to take measures to collect the amount of the losses from the company. General Meigs directed a stoppage of the amount of the losses, ascertained by him, $5,723.29, for officers and men, and $1,397.33 for public property destroyed, against the transportation accounts of the railroad company, and referred the claims to the Third Auditor with a recommendation for payment. The Third Auditor had doubts of his jurisdiction to liquidate the claims, and his scruples on this point have been the sole cause of the long delay in their settlement.

The Second Comptroller, Mr. Brodhead, on the contrary, strongly asserted the jurisdiction of the accounting officers of the Treasury.

The Secretary of the Treasury concurred with the Second Comptroller. In a letter to the Third Auditor June 21, 1870, Secretary Boutwell says:

"I suggest that the case be settled by you, deducting the value of goods lost from the amount found due the company. If the company is dissatisfied with this settlement, they still have the right to refuse to accept payment and carry their case to the Court of Claims."

November 14, 1871, General Meigs writes to the Third Auditor:

"I do not consider that these sufferers have individually any authority to enter suit against the railroad company. It has been taken from them and assumed by the War Department. They were at the time servants of the War Department, and that Department being satisfied that their claims were just, has taken upon itself to see that they are righted."

"The Court of Claims is open to the company if they should consider themselves wronged."

"I think that the strong arm of the Government should be brought into requisition to cope with this powerful corporation."

Judge-Advocate-General Holt, in an opinion delivered January 9, 1872, suggests to the Secretary of War that the passage of an act of Congress be procured indemnifying the claimants in amounts not exceeding a certain sum, or in such amounts as might be deemed just by the Secretary of War.

(A bill (S. No. 618) was introduced at the second session of the Forty-second Congress, and passed that body April 9, 1872, but was not reached in the House of Representatives.)

In the view thus arrived at, it is further held that the United States having itself contracted for the entire transportation, for the price of which it became immediately responsible, was the only party in privity with the company, and has therefore a just claim against the latter for the proper and reasonable value of all property lost."

The company having advanced some objections to the claims, General Meigs made a second and thorough examination, which he reported to the Secretary of War February 5, 1874. He wrote the railroad company for full information as to the circumstances attending the losses, caused a re-examination of the officers and men present at the fire and still to be found, and submitted to the company, for their examination, the statement of the officer in command of the troops at the time of the fire.

"The weight of testimony is to the conclusion that the fire originated from sparks from the engine, and the position of the car in the train being next after the tender to the locomotive adds weight to the testimony on this point, and I think there can be no reasonable doubt that the fire originated in this way."

This report further states that the charges made by the enlisted men are found to conform generally to the prices at which Army clothing was then issued, and that the officers adhere to the charges which they had originally made and supported by their oaths. That the passenger tariff of the railroad company did not restrict the passenger as to articles of baggage.

April 29, 1874, Judge-Advocate-General Dunn, having received this report of General Meigs, in an opinion delivered to the Secretary of War, asserts the liability of the company to the Government as common carriers, and renews the suggestion of his predecessor, General Holt, as to providing for a settlement with the claimants by special act of Congress.

January 17, 1878, the Secretary of War, Hon. George W. McCrary, called upon the Judge-Advocate-General for opinion upon the following points:

"First. Is it the duty of this Department to continue longer to retain the money withheld from the railroad company to meet the claims of officers and soldiers for loss of baggage?"

"Second. Does it appear from the papers now filed that proper legal steps have been taken by said officers and soldiers to have the amount of their several claims liquidated and determined so that they can be properly paid by the United States?"

January 21, 1878, Judge-Advocate-General Dunn, in reply, says:

"I am of the opinion that the United States is entitled to offset against the amount due to the company for transportation the reasonable value of the proper baggage of the military detachment lost by the fault of the company in August, 1869. The contract of the company was made not with the individual parties but with the United States, for the transportation not only of public property, but of the proper effects of its employees and servants, the troops in question. Between the company and the latter there was no privity of contract; indeed they had no right or power to contract, but were obliged to accept and abide by such contract as the United States should make for them. I think, therefore, that the company is equally liable to the United States for the proper personal baggage of these parties as for any public property lost by its fault."

"Second. It does not appear that any legal steps have been taken by the officers or soldiers in this case to have their claims liquidated or determined. But in my judgment they are not properly called upon to take such steps in regard to the loss of property which they were entitled to have transported by the United States, but it is for the United States to assume and make good the same."

February 4, 1878, the Secretary of War again referred these claims to the Second Comptroller with this indorsement upon the last report of the Judge-Advocate-General: "Respectfully referred, &c., in order that the matters involved may be duly and properly adjusted."

There the claims have since lain, laboring under the identical embarrassment which met them at the outset, the conviction of the accounting officers that they have not jurisdiction to liquidate the claims. In this connection is submitted a recent indorsement of the Second Comptroller:

Claim of Lieutenant Philo Schultze and others. No. 20497.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, SECOND COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 10, 1882.

Respectfully returned to the honorable Third Auditor.

While in my opinion the accounting officers are fully justified in withholding payment of the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad Company until such time as they shall deal justly with the claimants, I am unable to perceive (notwithstanding the recommendation of the Quartermaster-General and the favorable reports of Judge-Advocate-Generals Holt and Dunn) how any balance can be certified against the United States in favor of the claimants without adequate legislation by Congress in the premises.

The claims being for unliquidated damages for the destruction of private property, are not, under existing law, within the jurisdiction of the accounting officers.

W. W. UPTON, Comptroller.

A true copy:

JAS. S. DELANO, Deputy.

Therefore it is necessary that this bill be passed, which is identical with one which heretofore passed the Senate, except the additional words "and the Treasurer shall pay the same to them;" that, thus the accounting officers may be enabled to act, and these long-delayed obligations to public servants, whose duties at distant posts on the frontier preclude the personal presentation of their rights, may be promptly paid.

Your committee therefore recommend a favorable consideration.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEELE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THOMAS G. CORBIN.

The Committee on Naval Affairs was called.

Mr. MORSE. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to call up the bill (S. No. 14) for the relief of Thomas G. Corbin. It is identical with the bill (H. R. No. 917) which is now on the Calendar.

The bill (S. No. 14) was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to restore Thomas G. Corbin, now a captain on the retired list of the Navy, to the active list of the Navy, to take rank next after Rear-Admiral J. W. A. Nicholson, with restitution from December 12, 1873, to November 15, 1881, of the difference of pay between that of a captain retired on half pay and that of a commodore on the active list on waiting-orders pay, and with restitution from November 15, 1881, of the difference of pay between that of a captain retired on half pay and that of a rear-admiral on the active list on waiting-orders pay, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. NEAL. I would like to hear the report read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. McMILLIN. Before objection is called for I desire to know if the committee have acted on the bill?

Mr. MORSE. We have, and we reported it unanimously.

Mr. McMILLIN. It is a very peculiar bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. For the purpose of ascertaining what is to be the operation of this rule, I ask the Chair whether it contemplates the reading of the report prior to or after the asking for objections?

The SPEAKER. The reading of the report may be called for after consideration is entered upon.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not this principle apply, that inasmuch as the House is amenable to reason and the rule is founded upon that presumption it must admit of the interpretation that the report shall be first read? Otherwise the House cannot act intelligently.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the rule does not admit of that interpretation. But the bill must be first read. The reading of the report is in the nature of debate, and the rule expressly states the time to be given to debate on each bill or resolution is to be limited to ten minutes, exclusive of five minutes which will be occupied in reading the reports of the committee, and that is after the time for objection. The Chair does not understand that objection is made.

Objection was made by Mr. McMILLIN, Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. BROWNE, and Mr. HOLMAN.

PUBLIC LANDS OF THE UNITED STATES.

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads was called, but did not present any measure for consideration.

The Committee on the Public Lands was next called.

Mr. POUND. The Committee on Public Lands have instructed me to call up from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3493) relating to the public lands of the United States, and to require payment of costs in certain cases of trespass or conversion of material therefrom.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That in all suits, civil or criminal, for any trespass on the public lands of the United States, or for any conversion of timber or material taken therefrom, the actual expense of the survey, scalement, or estimate necessarily incurred to ascertain the damages by reason of such trespass shall be proved and included in the costs of the suit and in the judgment entered therefor; and whenever any suit shall be abated or discontinued, under the provisions of section 1 of the act entitled "An act relating to the public lands," approved June 15, 1880, by reason of the entry of and payment of the Government price for the lands so trespassed upon, the costs required to be paid on such discontinuance or abatement shall include the expense of such survey, scalement, or estimate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. Before that question is put let me say this bill seems to be quite an important one, and perhaps is a very proper measure, but it could not be distinctly heard. I was unable, from the reading, to learn the purport of the bill. I ask unanimous consent that it be again reported.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the bill will be again read.

Mr. POUND. If the House will give attention it will require but the reading of the bill to secure the approbation and approval of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope it will be read and the gentleman from Wisconsin can explain it afterward.

The bill was again read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I presume there is a report accompanying the bill. I should like to have it read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's request is made too late. The question is now on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the report should be read.

The bill was passed.

Mr. POUND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CREEK ORPHAN FUND.

Mr. HASKELL. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to call up for consideration in this hour Senate bill No. 126, to reimburse the Creek orphan fund. I desire to state to the House, before objection is called for, what the committee have directed me to ask to be done with this bill.

On Saturday last a bill similar to this was passed by the House, a House bill. I was unaware at that time that a Senate bill for a similar purpose was on the Speaker's table. The Committee on Indian Affairs instruct me to ask that the Senate bill be now called up, and to move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the provisions of the House bill as it passed last Saturday, and to ask for the passage of the Senate bill thus amended. That will enable us to have a conference at once upon the bill, and save action by the Senate on the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $247,555.97, with 5 per cent. interest on $176,755.97 from April 6, 1872, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of reimbursing the Creek orphan fund, which sum has been diverted from the said fund and is due to the Creek orphans and their heirs, under the treaty of March 24, 1832: Provided, That said sum shall, in the discretion of the President, be paid to the Creeks who were orphans on March 24, 1832, and their heirs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain who are entitled under the aforesaid treaty of March 24, 1832, and the provisions of this act, to receive the money hereby appropriated; and it shall be his duty to see that said moneys are deposited in the Treasury as now provided by law for Indian trust funds, and the interest thereon only shall be paid to the actual beneficiaries under said law, the orphans and their heirs, to the exclusion of all claims by attorneys for fees, except such reasonable attorneys' fees as shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior after the pas-usage of this act: Provided further, That all bonds heretofore purchased with moneys belonging to this fund shall be the property of the United States: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and instructed to charge the sum of $176,755.97, and the interest accruing thereon, used for general purposes of the Creek Nation, against the general fund of said nation, and said sum shall be retained by the Secretary of the Interior in such installments as shall not seriously embarrass the object of the annual appropriations for the support and necessities of the Creek Nation.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is a Senate bill?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is whether this bill, or a bill containing the same matter, has been considered by a committee of this House?

Mr. HASKELL. Let me state the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The question is whether there is objection to the consideration at this time of the bill which has been read.

Mr. HASKELL. Let me state the proposition which the committee have directed me to submit to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas will be patient; he cannot amend the bill until it is before the House. When the Senate bill shall be before the House he will be recognized for the purpose of submitting a motion to amend, if he so desires. The question now is whether the House will consider the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is a question of order, which is whether or not this bill or one containing the substance of it has been heretofore considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs of this House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas has answered that question by stating that he is instructed by his committee to call up this bill.

Mr. HASKELL. It was considered by the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent, in view of the peculiarity of the present rule, that the report be first read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to reading the report?

Mr. HASKELL. Will the Chair now allow me to state to the House that on last Saturday—

The SPEAKER. This is not a debatable proposition.

Mr. HASKELL. I do not want to debate it. I want to state that the report does not fit the bill, and I want to put before the House that which the committee asks me to submit to the House.

The SPEAKER. That does not come within the rule.

Mr. HASKELL. I ask unanimous consent to submit the statement. On Saturday last a bill passed this body which had been agreed to by several committees of the House as well as of the Senate; that was a House bill. At that time the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs was not aware that a Senate bill covering about the same ground was on the Speaker's table.

The Committee on Indian Affairs have instructed me now to call up the Senate bill, and move to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the provisions of the House bill which was passed last Saturday, in order that it may go to the Senate as an amendment to the Senate bill. That is the proposition that I am trying to get before the House for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate bill, which has been read? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HASKELL. I now move to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the provisions of House bill No. 307, passed last Saturday.

The substitute was read, as follows:

That the sum of $251,055.97, with 5 per cent. interest on $176,755.97, from April 6, 1882, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of reimbursing the Creek orphan fund, which sum has been diverted from the said fund and is due to the Creek orphans and their heirs under the treaty of March 24, 1832: Provided, That said sum shall, in the discretion of the President, be paid to the Creek orphans and their heirs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain who are entitled under the aforesaid treaty of March 24, 1832, and the provisions of this act to receive the money hereby appropriated; and it shall be his duty to see that said moneys shall be paid to the actual beneficiaries under said law, the orphans and their heirs, to the exclusion of all claims by attorneys for fees, except such reasonable attorneys' fees as shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior after the passage of this act: Provided further, That all bonds heretofore purchased with moneys belonging to this fund shall be the property of the United States: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and instructed to charge the sum of $69,956.68, used for general purposes of the Creek Nation, against the general fund of said nation, and said sum shall be retained by the Secretary of the Interior in such installments as shall not seriously embarrass the object of the annual appropriations for the support and necessities of the Creek Nation.

The substitute was agreed to.

The bill as amended was then ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HASKELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill as amended was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HASKELL. I now move that the Senate be requested to return to the House the bill passed last Saturday, House bill No. 307, and which has been rendered nugatory by the action of the House at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is not necessary; it is not likely the Senate will take any action on that bill.

Mr. HASKELL. Very well.

OREGON SHORT-LINE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HAZELTON. I am instructed by the Committee on the Pacific Railroad to call up for consideration at this time Senate bill No. 972, creating the Oregon Short-Line Railway Company a corporation in the Territories of Utah, Idaho, and Wyoming, and for other purposes. It is identical with House bill No. 2381, now on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. May I inquire of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAZELTON] whether there has been a regular meeting of his committee at which he was authorized to call up this bill?

Mr. HAZELTON. Certainly.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. In this hour?

Mr. HAZELTON. I would suggest to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] that the Committee on Territories would be a good committee for him to look after. [Laughter.]

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Oregon Short-Line Railway Company, a corporation of that name duly incorporated and organized under the laws of the Territory of Wyoming, the amended articles of incorporation of which were duly filed in the office of the secretary of the said Territory on the 12th day of July, A. D. 1881, be, and the same is hereby, made a railroad corporation in the Territories of Utah, Idaho, and Wyoming, under the same conditions and limitations and with the same rights and privileges that it now has and enjoys under said articles of incorporation within the said Territory of Wyoming, and with all the rights and privileges within said Territories of Wyoming, Utah, and Idaho which are secured to railway companies by the act of Congress approved the 3d day of March, A. D. 1875, entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States:" Provided, That the said corporation shall at all times hereafter be subject to all the laws and regulations in relation to railroads of the United States, or of any Territory or State through which its line of road may pass. And suits against such corporation may be instituted in the courts of said Territories, or either of them having jurisdiction by the laws of such Territory.

SEC. 2. That Congress may at any time add to, alter, or repeal this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. ANDERSON. I object for one.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears but one objection. The bill is before the House.

Mr. HAZELTON. Let the report be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Pacific Railroads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2381) creating the Oregon Short-Line Railway Company a corporation in the Territories of Utah, Idaho, and Wyoming, and for other purposes, have had the same under consideration, and report as follows:

The Senate Committee on Railroads, having had Senate bill 972, almost identical with this, under consideration, and having reported thereon, your committee have adopted the language of said report, which is as follows, as their report on said House bill:

"That the Oregon Short-Line Railroad Company, as appears by a certified copy of the articles of incorporation exhibited to the committee, is a corporation duly organized under the laws of the Territory of Wyoming, for the purpose of constructing a railroad from Granger, on the Union Pacific Railroad, in a north-westerly direction from Wyoming over the northeast corner of Utah, and across Idaho, on the most eligible route to Baker City, in the State of Oregon, or to such other point in said State as the company may determine, and thence to such point on the Columbia River or the Pacific Ocean as the company may select.

"As the proposed line of road crosses the Fort Hall Indian reservation, your committee have made inquiry of the Secretary of the Interior in regard to the matter, and have learned that an agreement has already been made with the Indians occupying said reservation for the right of way, as will more fully appear by reference to Executive Document H. R. No. 18, first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, in which the agreement, maps of the line of the road through the reservation, and the bill for ratifying the agreement will be found. (This bill has passed the House of Representatives.) The fact that the line of the road crosses this reservation is therefore no objection to the passage of this bill.

"From an examination of the map it will be seen that this road, when constructed, will pass through a region wholly destitute of railroad facilities, excepting that it crosses the Utah and Northern Railroad in the Fort Hall reservation. It will open to settlement a vast region of country that is now comparatively inaccessible; it will undoubtedly be of great advantage to the Government, not only by aiding in developing the country through which it passes, but in the matter of transportation; by the connection with the Union Pacific road it will add to the business of the latter, and thereby enhance the value of the security of the Government for the indebtedness of the last-named company to the Government.

"The company asks for the passage of this bill for the reason that there is no law in the Territory of Idaho under which a railroad company can be organized. There will be no session of the Legislature of that Territory until next winter, and consequently if the company must wait until Territorial legislation can be had a year will elapse before any work can be done in that Territory. In view of this the company has applied to the governor of the Territory to convene the Legislature, but while he expresses a desire for the construction of the road on account of the great advantage it would be to the Territory, he declines to do this, among other reasons, because of the expense, but chiefly because the act constituting the Territory gives no power in the premises.

"Your committee has conferred with the Delegates from the Territories named in the bill, and they strongly urge the enactment as one that would be greatly promotive of the public welfare.

"If this bill is not passed the work will be retarded for at least a year. About sixty miles have been completed from Granger, and one hundred miles more are nearly completed. The company is undoubtedly proceeding in good faith with the work. It asks no aid from the Government.

"The act of March 3, 1875, grants to all railroad companies organized under State, Territorial, or Congressional legislation the right of way through the public lands, &c., and if this act is passed that is the only material advantage the company will acquire from the Government, and this it would equally receive if organized a year or more hence under some general or special law of Idaho.

"The bill in general is similar in its provisions to the act declaring the Utah and Northern Railroad Company a corporation in the Territories of Utah and Montana, under which the road of the last-named company was constructed. (See 20 Statutes, page 241.)

"In view of the detention that must ensue in the construction of this important line of road if this bill is not enacted into a law, and especially in view of the manifest public advantage to be derived from its speedy construction, your committee report said bill with a recommendation that it do pass."

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to inquire of the gentleman calling up this bill whether the committee is informed that the Indians whose lands are to be affected by this bill consent to its passage?

Mr. AINSLIE. A bill has already been passed granting this right of way and providing payment therefor to the Indians.

Mr. HAZELTON. I understand that this is entirely satisfactory to the Indians.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Indians have been paid for the right of way?

Mr. AINSLIE. Yes, sir. A bill for that purpose passed both Houses of Congress two or three months ago.

Mr. HOLMAN. And under that bill, as I understand, payment has actually been made to the Indians for the right of way?

Mr. AINSLIE. I so understand.

Mr. MAGINNIS. The bill provided for payment of the money into the Treasury for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. AINSLIE. The payment was at the rate of $7 an acre or a little more.

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill affects also in some degree lands not owned by the Indians, but by the Government. As to such lands does the bill embrace more than the mere right of way?

Mr. HAZELTON. Not at all.

Mr. MAGINNIS. It embraces only what is allowed under the general statute.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAZELTON moved to reconsider the motion by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUPPORT OF COMMON SCHOOLS.

The SPEAKER proceeded with the call of committees until the Committee on Education and Labor was reached.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. By instruction of the Committee on Education and Labor, I offer for adoption the resolution which I send to the desk, setting apart a day in next December for the consideration of important bills from that committee.

The SPEAKER. Has this resolution been reported to the House?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. It has not been. I report it now.

Mr. McMILLIN. It cannot be reported in this hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that resolutions of this character come within the rule. This resolution has not been previously reported.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. But the bill to which the resolution refers has been reported and the report printed.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman call up the bill?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. Yes, sir; I send the bill to the desk.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman been instructed by his committee to call up this bill?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. I have been.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio, under instructions from the Committee on Education and Labor, calls up for present consideration the bill which will be read.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. I ask that the reading of the bill be waived, as I propose to move that its consideration be postponed until a designated day.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not yet before the House. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the following bill:

A bill (H. R. No. 6158) to aid in the support of common schools.

Whereas it appears from the tenth census that one-eighth of the people of the United States are totally illiterate, and it seems that those States in which illiteracy exists to the greatest extent are not at present able to provide by local and State taxation for the adequate support of common schools to meet the emergency; and

Whereas the general welfare and perpetuity of our whole country depend upon the intelligence of all its citizens, and it is deemed to be the duty of the General Government to aid temporarily in the support of common schools: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That for five years next after the passage of this act there shall be annually appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000,000 to aid in the support of free common schools, which amount shall be known as the common-school fund.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall annually apportion to the several States and Territories the said sum of $10,000,000, according to the number of their respective populations of ten years old and upward who cannot read and write, as shown by the tenth census of the United States, which report shall be submitted to the Commissioner of Education.

SEC. 3. That before any State or Territory shall be entitled to receive its share of said fund it shall have provided by law for the free common-school education of all its children of school age, without distinction of color, for at least three months in each year, from the funds provided for schools under the laws of said State or Territory; and in no case shall any State or Territory be allowed out of said fund a greater sum than such State or Territory shall have expended during the previous year for the common-school education of the children of such State or Territory exclusive of the amount received from the United States, and exclusive of the sums paid for grounds, school buildings, or repairs on the same: Provided, That separate schools for white and colored children shall not be considered a distinction of color.

SEC. 4. That an amount not exceeding 5 per cent. of the sum apportioned to each State and Territory may be used by them for the education of teachers in normal schools, teachers' institutes, or otherwise.

SEC. 5. That it is hereby further provided that before any State or Territory shall be entitled to receive its share of said fund it shall have complied with the following conditions:

First. That it shall have applied all moneys by it previously received under the provisions of this act in accordance therewith.

Second. That it shall have caused to be made such reports to the Commissioner of Education concerning the condition of the schools in the same, on or before the 1st day of August in each year, as said Commissioner of Education, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall deem desirable; and shall especially report for each county as follows: The number of public schools of every grade; the whole number of days actually taught in each during the year preceding; the total amount received from State taxes and from local taxes, and the total amount expended for educational purposes in the preceding year; the total amount expended for white and colored schools separately; the number of public-school buildings owned and hired, and the character, condition, and value of the same; the number of children, white and colored, male and female, in attendance on the public schools, and the length of attendance; the number of male and female teachers, white and colored, employed at the same time and at different times in the same year, with particulars as to qualifications of same; the number of school libraries, and the number of volumes therein; the branches taught and the text-books used; the total amount of wages paid to teachers, male and female, white and colored.

SEC. 6. That the Commissioner of Education shall prepare forms of such blanks as shall facilitate the making of the reports herein provided for, and transmit the same to the State and Territorial authorities.

SEC. 7. That in such States or Territories as shall maintain separate schools for white and colored children the money so apportioned shall be divided according to the respective number of such white and colored children in such State or Territory.

SEC. 8. That no part of the money so received from the United States shall be expended in the purchase of real estate, the construction or repair of school buildings, or in paying the salary of any public officer not engaged in teaching.

SEC. 9. That in case any State or Territory shall misapply or misappropriate the money, or any part thereof, received under this act, or shall fail to comply with the conditions thereof, or to report as herein prescribed, such State or Territory shall forfeit its right to any subsequent apportionment by virtue hereof until the amount so misapplied or misappropriated shall have been replaced by such State or Territory and applied as herein required; and until such report shall have been made all money so retained and not paid to such State or Territory shall be kept separate in the Treasury until disposed of by Congress.

SEC. 10. That on or before the 1st day of September of each year the Commissioner of Education, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall certify to the governor of each State and Territory whether it is entitled to receive its apportionment under this act, and, if so entitled, the amount of such apportionment, and it thereupon shall be entitled to receive the same; but such certificate shall not be issued until all the requirements of this act referring to the duties of the officers of such State or Territory shall have been complied with.

SEC. 11. That the amount apportioned to any State or Territory and certified as herein provided, shall be paid on or before October 1 of each year, upon the warrant of the Commissioner of Education, countersigned by the Secretary of the Interior, out of the Treasury of the United States, to such officer as shall be by the laws of such State or Territory entitled to receive the same.

SEC. 12. That the Commissioner of Education shall annually report to Congress the information received by him from the reports of the school officers of the several States and Territories provided for herein, together with such recommendations as will in the judgment of the Commissioner subserve the purposes of this act.

SEC. 13. That there is hereby appropriated the sum of $10,000,000 for the year commencing September 1, 1882, which shall be apportioned as directed herein; and those States and Territories which have provided by law for the free common-school education of their children of school age, without distinction of color, shall be entitled to their apportionment of said sum, all other requirements precedent to the right to receive such apportionment being hereby waived for the year 1882.

SEC. 14. That any State signifying its desire that the amount allotted to it under the provisions of this act shall be appropriated in any other way for the promotion of common-school education, in its own borders or elsewhere, its allotment shall be paid to such State to be thus appropriated: Provided, That its Legislature shall have first considered the question of its appropriation to the general fund for use under the provisions of this act in States and Territories where the proportion of illiterate persons is more than 5 per cent. of the whole population.

Before the reading of the bill was concluded,

The SPEAKER said: The hour has expired. This matter will go over until to-morrow.

Mr. RANDALL. The right of objection is reserved.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly. The time has not yet come for the presentation of objections.

WIDOW OF GENERAL STEPHEN A. HURLBUT.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table and put upon its passage the joint resolution (S. R. No. 75) allowing the widow of General Stephen A. Hurlbut, late minister to Peru, one year's salary.

The SPEAKER. This resolution has been read once to-day.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that it be read again, reserving the right to object.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That there be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to Mrs. Sophronia R. Hurlbut, the widow of General Stephen A. Hurlbut, late envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Peru, one year's salary as said minister, from August 1, 1881, in addition to all legal allowances, deducting the amount of salary received by said Hurlbut since that date, and also to pay the necessary expenses incurred in the removal of his remains from Peru to the State of Illinois for interment, to be paid under the direction of the Secretary of State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Reserving the right to object, I wish to make an inquiry. I believe it has been the custom for a considerable number of years to appropriate the money necessary to bring home from foreign countries the remains of deceased American ministers. It has also been customary within the last ten or twelve years to appropriate the balance of the current year's salary to the widows of naval and military officers who have died while in the performance of their duties. The question I wish to ask of my friend from Wisconsin is whether prior to the present session of Congress there has been any precedent for appropriating to the family of civil officers of the Government the balance of the current year's salary?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. In view of the small time I have had in which to examine this question, not anticipating that there would be any objection, I can only say to the gentleman that there is a precedent in the Thirty-third Congress in a case which I understand is parallel to this.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is it customary?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I do not know of other precedent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. COX, of New York. Yes; there is a precedent in the case of the minister to Bolivia.

The joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WIDOW OF GENERAL JUDSON KILPATRICK.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I now move to take from the Speaker's table joint resolution (S. R. No. 77) allowing the widow of General Judson Kilpatrick, late minister to Chili, one year's salary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the joint resolution was taken up and read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That there be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to Mrs. Louisa V. De Kilpatrick, the widow of General Judson Kilpatrick, late envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Chili, one year's salary as said minister, from June 21, 1881, in addition to all legal allowances, deducting the amount of salary received by said Kilpatrick since that date.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is the proposition to pay the remainder of the salary undrawn?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. That is it.

Mr. McMILLIN. No more than that.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WIDOW OF DR. HENRY H. GARNET.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution similar to the one just passed for the widow of Dr. Garnet, our late minister to Liberia.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, &c., That there be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to Sarah J. S. Garnet, widow of Dr. Henry H. Garnet, one year's salary as said minister in addition to all regular allowances, deducting the amount of salary received by said Henry H. Garnet since the date of his appointment.

Mr. BROWNE. Is it not in order to refer this joint resolution to the Committee on Foreign Affairs?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] asks unanimous consent for the introduction and present consideration of the joint resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. McKENZIE. I hope the color line will not be drawn here.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before that is done, I wish to say that this resolution seems to stand upon the same footing as those we have already passed.

Mr. COX, of New York. We all recollect Dr. Garnet, the eminent divine, was appointed minister to Liberia and went to his post this spring. He died, as the House and country know, in Liberia, leaving a widow in impecunious and straightened circumstances. I hope that by unanimous consent I will be permitted to introduce this joint resolution, and that it will be passed at once. This widow, who is very poor, desires to be paid what remains thus far unpaid of the first year's salary belonging to her husband.

Mr. KASSON. That is eminently just.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman is permitted to introduce his joint resolution.

Mr. COX, of New York. I introduce then the joint resolution (H. R. No. 270) for the relief of Sarah J. S. Garnet, widow of Henry H. Garnet, late minister to Liberia.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COX, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RUSSIAN HEBREW REFUGEES.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I ask by unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution (H. R. No. 271) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan twenty-five wall tents to the colony of Russian Hebrew refugees at Cimarron, Foote County, Kansas.

There was no objection, and the joint resolution was read the first and second time.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to loan to the Russian Hebrew refugees twenty-five wall-tents for the use of said refugees, said tents to be loaned to said colony under such arrangement as to use and return of the same as the Secretary of War may deem it proper to make.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 63.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will allow me to introduce a resolution similar to those that have already passed.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the morning hour for the call of committees for reports.

Mr. HASKELL. Does that take precedence of the order for the continuance of business from the Indian Committee?

The SPEAKER. It does, the language of that order being "after the morning hour."

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Indiana withdraws his demand for the regular order to enable me to submit this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded by several gentlemen.

Mr. BROWNE. There are three or four pension bills on the Speaker's table with amendments of the Senate, and until the House consents that they shall be taken up and the amendments concurred in I shall have to object to any other business than the regular order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no objection to that, and I hope the gentlemen will yield for a moment to permit this resolution to be read at all events for information.

Mr. VALENTINE. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move to dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. RAY. I hope that will not be done.

The House divided and there were ayes 42; noes 36.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the motion to dispense with the morning hour was not agreed to.

EXPORTATION OF IMITATION BUTTER.

Mr. HERR, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 4909) to regulate the exportation of imitation butter and cheese; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

A. S. STREAM.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 272) granting permission to A. S. Stream to accept a medal from the British Government; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HENRY VIGNAUD.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, also, from the same committee, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 273) granting permission to Henry Vignaud to accept the National Order of the Legion of Honor from the president of the Republic of France; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES ARSENAL GROUNDS, BRIDGESBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 4388) granting the right of way for railroad purpose through the United States arsenal grounds at Bridesburgh, Pennsylvania, to connect the manufacturing establishments of Bridesburgh with the Philadelphia and Trenton Railroad; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EDWARD K. WINSHIP.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 93) to authorize the settlement of the accounts of Acting Assistant Paymaster Edward K. Winship, United States Navy; which was referred to the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

Mr. DWIGHT, from the Committee on Public Lands, submitted the views of the minority on the bill (H. R. No. 6597) to quiet the title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa and for other purposes; which were ordered to be printed with the majority report, and referred to the House Calendar.

HOMESTEAD AND PRE-EMPTION SETTLERS, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. RICE, of Missouri, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 3559) for the relief of certain pre-emption and homestead settlers in California; which was referred to the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY E. MATTHEWS.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with favorable recommendation the bill (S. No. 2026) granting a pension to Mary E. Matthews; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

KATE QUILLIGAN.

Mr. RAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 4060, a bill (H. R. No. 6833) granting a pension to Kate Quilligan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CAROLINE FRENCH.

Mr. RAY also, from the same committee, reported back with favorable recommendation the bill (S. No. 2089) granting a pension to Caroline French; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH E. MOORE.

Mr. HILL, from the Committee on Claims, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1042) for the relief of Joseph E. Moore; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REBECCA BIRDSALL.

Mr. HILL also, from the same committee, reported back with adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 4024) for the relief of Rebecca Birdsall; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CHARLES L. DAHLER.

Mr. RAY, from the Committee on Claims, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1918) for the relief of Charles L. Dahler; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FREDERICK W. RUGGLES.

Mr. RAY also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 606, a bill (H. R. No. 6834) for the relief of Frederick W. Ruggles; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

VICKSBURG AND MERIDIAN RAILROAD.

Mr. RAY also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 5860) to provide for the settlement of accounts with the Vicksburg and Meridian Railroad Company, for internal-revenue taxes, and to refund the amount of said taxes erroneously assessed and collected; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DAVID WEBSTER.

Mr. RAY also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6835) for the relief of David Webster; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES W. HARVEY.

Mr. RAY also, (for Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa,) from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6836) for the relief of James W. Harvey; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FRANKLIN CROCKER.

Mr. BOWMAN, from the Committee on Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6837) for the relief of Franklin Crocker; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN FRASER.

Mr. BOWMAN also, (for Mr. CROWLEY,) from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 5680) for the relief of John Fraser; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JAMES G. WILLIAMS.

Mr. RANNEY. I am instructed by the Committee on War Claims to ask that the bill (H. R. No. 5578) for the relief of James G. Williams be taken from the Private Calendar and recommitted to the Committee on War Claims.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

W. E. TOMLINSON.

Mr. ROBERTSON, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6838) for the relief of W. E. Tomlinson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. JADWIN, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with adverse recommendations the following petitions; and they were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

The petition of John T. Stratton and others; and The petition of Z. C. Nolen.

WILLIAM G. FORD.

Mr. WISE, of Virginia, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 6039) for the relief of William G. Ford; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. WISE, of Virginia, also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6839) for the relief of William G. Ford, administrator; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CLAIM OF SCHUYLKILL COUNTY, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 1463) to authorize the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to audit and pay the claim of the county of Schuylkill, in the State of Pennsylvania, for money advanced by it under allotments made by soldiers from said county during the late rebellion by virtue of section 12 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to authorize the employment of volunteers to aid in enforcing the laws and protecting public property," approved July 22, 1861; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PETER MARCH AND OTHERS.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa, also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 1328) for the relief of Peter March and others; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

RICHARD MAYES.

MOBILE AND OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. HUTCHINS, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution (H. R. No. 191) to provide for the settlement of accounts with the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The call of committees for reports is now completed. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] is recognized. Mr. HASKELL. The regular order I believe is a continuation of the execution of the special order for the consideration of business called up by the Committee on Indian Affairs. I ask consent of the House, inasmuch as it is getting near the hour of adjournment, that such portion of the three and a half hours remaining to the committee as may not be used to-day may be allowed to-morrow and next day. In other words, I ask that this shall hold its place as a continuing order until the day is used up.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CLERK OF COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. HASKELL. If the House will be patient with me I desire to hold it in session for only about an hour longer. I now call up a resolution which I have been instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to offer in reference to the clerk of our committee.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the clerkship of the Committee on Indian Affairs of this House be and is hereby, declared an annual clerkship, with compensation fixed at $2,000 per annum; and the Clerk of this House is hereby directed to pay the clerk of said committee such compensation for the fiscal year 1883 from the contingent fund.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan.) The question is upon the adoption of the resolution which has been read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that we ought not to be increasing the salaries of our employés. It is somewhat a matter of regret that in the present Congress the House of Representatives has so largely increased the number of its employés and in some instances the compensation of its employés, when it is well known that a very large number of the employés of the House cannot be profitably employed all the time; and when it is borne in mind also, as to the clerkships, that they are exceedingly well paid as they now are.

Almost all the clerks are employed only during the sessions of Congress. During a term of two years, for almost one-half of that period they are unemployed. I do not think that any of these salaries ought to be increased; I think that in many instances they could very properly be diminished. I know that the number of employés about this House could be greatly diminished without any possible injury to the public service. I have never yet known an employé of the House whose compensation was not ample, and I could mention some persons who have not been compelled on account of their employment to remain at the Capitol during all of the present session.

Mr. HASKELL. This does not propose any increase of compensation; it is simply making the clerkship an annual one.

Mr. HOLMAN. That increases the compensation.

Mr. HASKELL. The gentleman is right in this: that it increases somewhat the amount of money that the clerk could earn in the year, because it provides for his employment throughout the year. But at the rate per month which he is now paid under present regulations he would receive over $2,200 a year, while this resolution proposes to fix his compensation at $2,000 a year. Take this present year, with its long session, and this resolution would give him little or nothing in addition to what he now receives.

Mr. HOLMAN. But it would be an increase of compensation for three-fourths of next year.

Mr. HASKELL. His compensation would be greater next year. But the committee is very anxious to keep its affairs within its own charge and custody, as can be done only with an annual clerk.

The Committee on Agriculture of this House, the Committee on Public Lands of this House, and by a recent report from the Committee on Accounts the Committee on Military Affairs have been given annual clerks. Now, the gentleman from Indiana will agree with me that the Committee on Indian Affairs has before it more important measures, and measures greater in number, than those other committees.

The Committee on Indian Affairs have unanimously expressed a desire to leave its room and business in the custody of a clerk until the expiration of this term of Congress. I believe it to be in the best interests of good legislation that the important interests pending before that committee, the papers and bills and great mass of correspondence, should be kept in our hands rather than during the vacation of Congress allowed to be open to the inspection of anybody and everybody, and then tumbled into a basket and sent up to the file room in the promiscuous condition they are always in when there is only a session clerk.

I will refer to the former chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. SCALES] to sustain me in the assertion that the first month of every session, if not the first six weeks of the session, is consumed in getting the business of the committee in shape so that it can proceed properly.

Mr. SCALES. I agree with what the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] says upon this subject. As the Chair well knows, on Saturday last I objected to this resolution because I thought it ought to receive further consideration, not that I supposed that an annual clerk should not be allowed to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I have been on that committee long enough to know and to believe that the best interest of the business before the committee requires that it should have an annual clerk. For that reason I withdraw my objection to the resolution, and am ready to support it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say further that, judging from my experience in this House, I believe there are but three committees of the House which can profitably employ a clerk during the entire year; the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Claims, and the Committee on War Claims. I concede that as to those committees permanent clerks are very desirable.

But I contend that the number of employés of this House, even in this Congress, is greatly beyond any public necessity or demand. I must say that I look with great regret on the constant tendency of this House to increase the number and compensation of its employés. The example is a bad one. If anywhere in this Government there should be a spirit of economy it should be displayed right here in the House, where the people themselves are most directly represented. And yet right here the tendency is in favor of extravagance.

And unhappily I may say that this tendency is not confined to one side of the House only. We have demanded economy, especially on my own side of the House. Yet I find that under the influence of our social relations and pleasant surroundings we yield very generally to the requests of our friends for increased compensation.

Mr. UPSON. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has designated the Committee on War Claims as one committee that should have a permanent clerk.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes.

Mr. UPSON. How many bills does the gentleman suppose that committee has reported at this session?

Mr. HOLMAN. I should not suppose more than sixty or seventy.

Mr. UPSON. Not more than sixty or seventy?

Mr. HOLMAN. I should suppose not.

The resolution as reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs was adopted.

Mr. HASKELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALE OF OMAHA INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. HASKELL. I now call up and ask to have passed, with the amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, the bill (S. No. 1255) to provide for the sale of a part of the reservation of the Omaha tribe of Indians in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes. The amendment is in the form of a substitute.

Mr. VALENTINE. The bill was read on last Saturday, and was published in the proceedings of that day.

Mr. SCALES. Let it be read again. A great many members are here now who were not here on Saturday.

The Clerk read the proposed substitute, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That with the consent of the Omaha tribe of Indians, expressed in open council, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to cause to be surveyed, if necessary, and sold, all that portion of their reservation in the State of Nebraska lying west of the right of way granted by said Indians to the Sioux City and Nebraska Railroad Company under the agreement of April 19, 1880, approved by the Acting Secretary of the Interior July 27, 1880. The said lands shall be appraised, in tracts of forty acres each, by three competent commissioners, one of whom shall be selected by the Omaha tribe of Indians, and the other two shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior."

SEC. 2. That after the survey and appraisal of said lands the Secretary of the Interior shall be, and he hereby is, authorized to issue proclamation to the effect that all unallotted lands are open for settlement under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe. That at any time within one year after the date of such proclamation each bona fide settler occupying any portion of said lands, and having made valuable improvements thereon, or the heirs at law of such settler, who is a citizen of the United States or who has declared his intention to become such, shall be entitled to purchase, for cash, through the United States public land office at Neligh, Nebraska, the land so occupied and improved by him, not to exceed one hundred and sixty acres in each case, according to the survey and the appraised value of said lands as provided for in section 1 of this act: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may dispose of the same upon the following terms as to payments, that is to say: one-third of the price of said land to become due and payable one year from the date of entry, one-third in two years, and one-third in three years from said date, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum; but in case of default in either of said payments the person thus defaulting for a period of sixty days shall forfeit absolutely his right to the tract which he has purchased and any payment or payments he might have made: And provided further, That whenever any person shall, under the provisions of this act, settle upon a tract containing a fractional excess over one hundred and sixty acres, if the excess is less than forty acres, is contiguous, and results from inability in survey to make township and section lines conform to the boundary lines of the reservation, his purchase shall not be rejected on account of such excess, but shall be allowed as in other cases: And provided further, That no portion of said land shall be sold at less than the appraised value thereof, and in no case for less than $2.50 per acre: And provided further, That all land in township twenty-four, range seven east, remaining unallotted on the 1st day of June, 1885, shall be appraised and sold as other lands under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That the proceeds of such sale, after paying all expenses incident to and necessary for carrying out the provisions of this act, including such clerk hire as the Secretary of the Interior may deem necessary, shall be placed to the credit of said Indians in the Treasury of the United States, and shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, which income shall be annually expended for the benefit of said Indians, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 4. That when purchasers of said lands shall have complied with the provisions of this act as to payment, improvement, &c., proof thereof shall be received by the local land office at Neligh, Nebraska, and patents shall be issued as in the case of public lands offered for settlement under the homestead and preemption acts: Provided, That any right in severalty acquired by any Indian under existing treaties shall not be affected by this act.

SEC. 5. That with the consent of said Indians as aforesaid the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, either through the agent of said tribe or such other person as he may designate, to allot the lands lying east of the right of way granted to the Sioux City and Nebraska Railroad Company, under the agreement of April 19, 1880, approved by the Acting Secretary of the Interior July 27, 1880, in severalty to the Indians of said tribe in quantity as follows: to each head of a family, one-quarter of a section; to each single person over eighteen years of age, one-eighth of a section; to each orphan child under eighteen years of age, one-eighth of a section; and to each other person under eighteen years of age, one-sixteenth of a section; which allotments shall be deemed and held to be in lieu of the allotments or assignments provided for in the fourth article of the treaty with the Omahas concluded March 6, 1865, and for which, for the most part, certificates in the names of individual Indians to whom tracts have been assigned have been issued by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as in said article provided: Provided, That any Indian to whom a tract of land has been assigned and certificate issued, or who was entitled to receive the same under the provisions of said fourth article, and who has made valuable improvements thereon, and any Indian who, being entitled to an assignment and certificate under said article, has settled and made valuable improvements upon a tract assigned to any Indian who has never occupied or improved such tract, shall have a preference right to select the tract upon which his improvements are situated for allotment under the provisions of this section: Provided further, That all allotments made under the provisions of this section shall be selected by the Indians, heads of families selecting for their minor children, and the agent shall select for each orphan child; after which the certificates issued by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as aforesaid shall be deemed and held to be null and void.

SEC. 6. That upon the approval of the allotments provided for in the preceding section by the Secretary of the Interior he shall cause patents to issue therefor in the name of the allottees, which patents shall be of the legal effect and declare that the United States does and will hold the land thus allotted for the period of twenty-five years in trust for the sole use and benefit of the Indians to whom such allotment shall have been made, or, in case of his decease, of his heirs according to the laws of the State of Nebraska, and that at the expiration of said period the United States will convey the same by patent to said Indian or his heirs as aforesaid, in fee discharged of said trust and free of all charge or incumbrance whatsoever. And if any conveyance shall be made of the lands set apart and allotted as herein provided, or any contract made touching the same before the expiration of the time above mentioned, such conveyance or contract shall be absolutely null and void: Provided, That the law of descent and partition in force in the said State shall apply thereto after patents therefor have been executed and delivered.

SEC. 7. That upon the completion of said allotments and the patenting of the lands to said allottees, each and every member of said tribe of Indians shall have the benefit of and be subject to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State of Nebraska; and said State shall not pass or enforce any law denying any Indian of said tribe the equal protection of the law.

SEC. 8. That the residue of lands lying east of the said right of way of the Sioux City and Nebraska Railroad, after all allotments have been made, as in the fifth section of this act provided, shall be patented to the said Omaha tribe of Indians, which patent shall be of the legal effect and declare that the United States does and will hold the land thus patented for the period of twenty-five years in trust for the sole use and benefit of the said Omaha tribe of Indians, and that at the expiration of said period the United States will convey the same by patent to said Omaha tribe of Indians, in fee discharged of said trust and free of all charge or incumbrance whatsoever: Provided, That from the residue of lands thus patented to the tribe in common allotments shall be made and patented to each Omaha child who may be born prior to the expiration of the time during which it is provided that said lands shall be held in trust by the United States, in quantity and upon the same conditions, restrictions, and limitations as are provided in section 6 of this act touching patents to allottees therein mentioned. But such conditions, restrictions, and limitations shall not extend beyond the expiration of the time expressed in the patent herein authorized to be issued to the tribe in common: And provided further, That these patents when issued shall override the patent authorized to be issued to the tribe as aforesaid, and shall separate the individual allotment from the lands held in common, which proviso shall be incorporated in the patent issued to the tribe.

SEC. 9. That the commissioners to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of this act shall receive compensation for their services at $5 for each day actually engaged in the duties herein designated, in addition to the amount paid by them for actual traveling and other necessary expenses.

SEC. 10. That in addition to the purchase, each purchaser of said Omaha Indian lands shall pay $2, the same to be retained by the receiver and register of the land-office at Neligh, Nebraska, as their fees for services rendered.

Mr. SCALES. I hope that we shall have some explanation of this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order: that this bill makes an appropriation of money, and must receive its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole. I call attention to the first section of the substitute on page 5, which provides for the appointment of commissioners, and also to section 9, which is in these words:

That the commissioners to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of this act shall receive compensation for their services at the rate of $5 for each day actually engaged in the duties herein designated, in addition to the amount paid by them for actual traveling and other necessary expenses.

The bill seems clearly to involve an appropriation of money; but I shall be glad to reserve the question as to the right to consider the bill in the House until the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] have been heard. Upon explanation the bill may appear to be so clearly right that it ought to be passed without further delay. But it is manifestly a very important measure. It involves a principle to which I am irrevocably hostile—speculation in the public lands. I do not care what this Government may have to pay to the Indian tribes for their lands, I wish those lands when acquired to be held by the Government for the benefit of its landless people. I regret to see any bill brought in here which tends to furnish facilities for the transfer of these lands to the hands of speculators. Still I wish to reserve the question of order until gentlemen have been heard in support of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is reserved.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have the opportunity to say a word or two in behalf of this bill. As it stands before the House every provision referring to the rights of the Indians, the disposition of their lands, their location, &c., has been drafted on their behalf by their representatives and at their suggestion absolutely.

Mr. Speaker, if there is one tribe in the United States that has earnestly desired a severalty selection law and that they might receive from the United States patents and an absolute title to their lands, these Omaha Indians are pre-eminently such a tribe. Not a single Indian nation out of the dozens that have applied to us has so unanimously asked this character of legislation as have these Omaha Indians. They are a tribe living without annuities, farming their own lands, making their own living, managing their own affairs. The money that is paid to them on behalf of the Government is paid merely to support an agency school, with the expenses of the surrounding agency. These Indians themselves are intelligent, capable, hard working, and upright. It has been stated with a great deal of truth that they are the most advanced and enlightened of the Indian tribes west of the Missouri River.

Now, these Indians, numbering about 1,200, have a reservation of 150,000 acres. They have asked that a portion of this reservation west of the Sioux City and Nebraska Railroad may be sold at an appraised value in order that a national fund may be created upon which they may draw. They have a great deal more land than they need, and if this bill passes a portion of their land will be sold at an appraisement. One of the appraisers is to be appointed by the Indians and one by the Interior Department, and in no case is the appraisement to be less than $2.50 an acre. This is the protection of the Indians in the sale. Before any land is sold they are at liberty to make their individual selections of one hundred and sixty acres to every head of a family, eighty acres to every widow, and forty to every child. These severalty selections are to be held in trust by the Government for the sole use of the Indians for twenty-five years, at the end of which time patents are to be issued in fee-simple. All the lands not allotted are to be patented under the broad seal of the United States to the tribe in common, so as to give them an absolute, indefeasible title to about 100,000 acres. These are the features of the bill as it respects the Indians. It is their earnest desire and prayer, as appears by their petitions appended to the report which I have made to the House, that a measure of this kind be adopted.

Now, as to the other side of the case—the disposition of the lands to white settlers. This portion of the bill I drew myself with special care, having some knowledge of the disposition of public lands, so that not an acre of this land shall go to any white person by purchase, unless he be the actual occupant of it, living upon it, improving it, making it his home. In no case can any one man secure more than one hundred and sixty acres. Thus all speculation is cut off, and the 49,000 acres contemplated to be sold are opened up to the actual bona fide settler. With these guards to prevent the disposition of these lands to speculators, and securing absolutely the right and title of the Indians, with an abundance of land allowed to them over and above their allotments, and patented to them in solido, we present to the House this bill as a measure absolutely in the interest of these Indians, with every possible loophole carefully guarded, and a bill which the Indians earnestly desire to see passed.

Mr. HOLMAN. May I inquire what portion is proposed to be sold?

Mr. HASKELL. The western portion or all that lying west of the Sioux City and Nebraska Railroad, which runs through their reservation.

Mr. HOLMAN. How many acres?

Mr. HASKELL. About 45,000. The total reservation is about 150,000 acres. It will leave some 100,000 acres to these Indians. They are to have their severalty allotments patented after twenty-five years, during which time they are to be held in trust by the Government for these Indians. The remaining portion of their lands, not taken by severalty allotments, is to be patented to them in solido. It is the perfection of Indian legislation as recommended by Secretary Kirkwood, and the present Secretary and by all the Indian officials who have been connected with the business. It was the intention of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I believe this bill does embody every valuable suggestion which comes from the Indian Office in reference to the handling of Indian lands and similar questions.

Mr. HOLMAN. The selection of the tracts by the Indians is to be a voluntary act of their own and not of the commissioners.

Mr. HASKELL. They make their own selections in their own behalf and for their own children. I wish to say, further, the right of severalty selection is specifically laid down in their treaty. They asked for it themselves, and the whole scheme of severalty allotment is stipulated in their treaty. They have taken out certificates of allotment, which are provided for in the bill. We wish to go further, and protect every Indian selection so as to secure to him an absolutely indefeasible title.

Mr. WELLBORN. Can those severalty selections be made anywhere in the reservation?

Mr. HASKELL. Yes, sir; anywhere within the reservation.

Mr. WELLBORN. Before the sale takes place?

Mr. HASKELL. The treaty stipulation in reference to severalty is not to be affected by this.

Mr. SCALES. The gentleman is mistaken as to that.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman from Kansas what proportional part of the lands are asked to be sold?

Mr. HASKELL. About one-third.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. How much land per capita is there now belonging to these two tribes of Indians?

Mr. HASKELL. As much as 1,200 will go into 150,000.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. That would be about one hundred and twenty-two acres each. I think there are about 2,400 Indians.

Mr. HASKELL. No; there are between 1,100 and 1,200.

Mr. SCALES. In the Winnebago tribe and this together?

Mr. VALENTINE. The Winnebago tribe has nothing to do with this reservation. They live in my county and I know about them.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Is it not a fact that the Indian agent has reported to the Indian Department that these lands lying west of the Sioux City and Nebraska Railroad are very valuable?

Mr. HASKELL. They are. The tract sought to be sold is one of the best in the country.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If that is the most valuable part of their lands why do you seek to sell it. Is it prudent for men owning property to sell the most valuable portion of it?

Mr. HASKELL. We let the Indians take their severalty allotments in the most valuable part. The fact is, the timber, which is the great desideratum in Western lands, lies where they are now located. Many of them have good farms and fields well fenced, with cattle, &c., and they wish to take their severalty allotments where they now have their homes. Any Indian, however, who wishes to take his piece of land to the west of the railroad can do so.

Mr. SCALES. My friend does not mean to say after this land is sold there can be any allotment?

Mr. HASKELL. Before any is sold that right of allotment is specially guaranteed, and they can make their selections wherever they choose.

Mr. VALENTINE. I desire to say there is now a law authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell 50,000 acres of that land. It embraces all the land mentioned in this bill and some other land in addition; and that land may be sold indiscriminately to any persons. It may be sold to persons not expecting to become actual settlers.

After this railroad was built through there the Indians then asked that he sell no land under the law as it now exists, and made their petitions for a bill of this character, the one which is now pending before the House, and which was framed in accordance with their wishes.

Speaking as to whether it is the best agricultural lands or not, I will state in reply to gentlemen that it is just such lands west of the road that are offered for sale as are east of the road for a considerable distance; but, as stated by the gentleman from Kansas, the agency buildings are over nearer the Missouri River among the timber where most of the Indians have their homes and have made their selections. These Indians I know very well, and they are anxious to sell this portion of the reserve and have allotments made to them in severalty of the remainder. It is at their request, as I have stated, that the bill was drawn, and it is in my judgment the best bill I have ever seen brought into the House for the sale of Indian lands.

Mr. HASKELL. I desire to take the floor again in order to make a statement, for when I referred before to the total amount of the land belonging to this reserve I was not sure that I was correct. The Commissioner, as I understand it, says that there will be remaining after this sale, when the allotments are provided for, 143,000 acres, so that instead of the entire reserve being 150,000 acres, after this sale and these allotments are made there still remain 143,000 acres.

Mr. VALENTINE. I think it is considerably over 100,000; the report will show, however.

Mr. NEAL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas a question.

Mr. HASKELL. Certainly.

Mr. NEAL. As I understand it the minimum price fixed for this land is $2.50 an acre.

Mr. HASKELL. Yes, sir; and it cannot be appraised for less than that. It must be appraised by the joint action of the Interior Department and the Indians themselves, and the settlers pay the appraised value for the land, every dollar of which goes to the Indians to be invested for their interest.

Mr. NEAL. Now, still further, let me ask why you make the minimum price $2.50?

Mr. HASKELL. Let me state first that I find, according to the report of the Commissioner, there will be over 100,000 acres of this land remaining—

Mr. NEAL. The question I was going to ask the gentleman is whether or not that land is not very rapidly appreciating in value, so that it will be worth three or four or five times as much in a few years from now as it is now worth?

Mr. VALENTINE. Not while it remains in the possession of the Indians.

Mr. NEAL. It has appreciated though, in late years.

Mr. HASKELL. I will answer the gentleman. As a general proposition covering the wild lands of the West, unless it happens that a man makes a selection where a town subsequently springs up, no man in the world ever had wild lands to appreciate in value on his hands to such an extent that it could pay 5 or 6 per cent. interest; never in the world. And if I owned this Omaha reservation myself to-day I would prefer to have it sold under the terms of such a bill as this at an appraised value, as fixed in this bill, and would be sure to get an interest on that money, at Government rates, far in excess of any possible increase of the value of the lands while they remained in my possession.

I think that is a proposition in which every man who has cognizance of the value of these western lands will bear me out. It is only those lands which are improved by having a town spring up upon them, or by having railroads passing through them, where any considerable increase in value takes place; and if these lands remain in the possession of the Indians who now occupy them there is no possible chance of any such increase of value. So if we put the minimum at $2.50 an acre, and then appropriate every dollar received from the sale of them for the benefit of these Indians, after they have received their allotments, their interests will be greatly increased rather than by permitting them to retain the land in their own possession. They see the wisdom of this themselves and urge its adoption.

Mr. NEAL. The answer of the gentleman, so far as I am concerned, is perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. VALENTINE. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to say a word as to the amount of lands that will remain after the allotment and sale not exceeding 50,000 acres lying west of the railroad, as provided by this bill, and I will read here from the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs, page 2, where it is shown:

There then remained of the unallotted lands (outside of the lands to which the provisions of the present bill authorizing the sale of not exceeding 50,000 acres extend) an area of 100,526.66 acres.

Mr. SCALES. Mr. Speaker, I beg the attention of the House for a few moments while I make some statements I think they should be in possession of before acting upon a bill of this importance. When I objected to the consideration of this bill on Saturday last I did not then know that I would upon examination be opposed to it. Upon going to my room, however, I examined into the effect of it, and became well satisfied that whatever the object of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, or whatever might be the object the gentleman from Nebraska had in view, this in effect if passed by this House would be nothing more nor less than a swindle upon the Indians; and I say this, sir, without meaning any personal offense to anybody who is interested on the other side.

Now, so far as that part of the bill is concerned which proposes to allot the lands in severalty, I am in hearty accord with it. I believe those provisions of the bill are the best I have ever seen. I believe that they ought to be passed and hope they will pass, but I do ask this House, in the interest of the Indians to whom these lands now belong, before you make this allotment, not to say that you will sell the very best part of the lands that belong to them, and that you will sell only that part which is fit for farming purposes. That is all I ask. And to sustain my position on that point I have only to read to this House what I have read for myself. Taking up the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on last Saturday I find a report from the agent who has just gone to that agency, and I ask the House to bear with me while I read it.

Now, mind you, the first clause is that 40,000 acres of the western part of this land are to be sold. Why sell it? Why sell it now upon the eve of dividing that land among the Indians and allowing a commission to give to them that which is best for them and for those who come after them? Why not, I appeal to members, allot first and sell afterward, if sell you must?

Gentlemen say it is in the interest of Indians. I apprehend it will appear here from the facts in this case it is in the interest of the white people of Nebraska; and my sole object—I have none other in view—is to protect the Indians, who in this particular, the disposal of their lands, have been swindled by permission of the Government almost, I blush to say, without exception from its foundation.

Much has been said by sensationalists of the treatment of the Indians by this Government—much unjustly and much that is well founded. The Government is criminally indulgent and generous in feeding and clothing and schooling these Indians year after year, without forcing them to work or their children to attend schools that they may become self sustaining. The money is wasted and no improvement in the Indian. But the special ground of complaint is in the disposal of their lands. Here they are always swindled, and by permission of Government, and we see step by step, acre by acre, they are driven, under the authority of treaties too, until they have been swept away from the Territories, even to the very shores of the Pacific. A few here and there can be found in the Territories, but they are fast disappearing and will eventually be pushed to the Pacific. Why, sir, is this? It is because these Territories have been settled up; the white man has come upon the stage; the white man is blinded by greed and avarice; the white man must have the benefit of these fertile lands. And lo, the poor Indian who has westward taken his way, must go still farther westward to find a home in a less favored clime, with less fertile lands.

What I ask is, that where they have lands, while we have the power, we shall keep them in possession of these lands until they are allotted in severalty, until each individual has his home protected by the laws of this great Government, and then you can sell what they do not require. The Government feeds and clothes them annually. The great object in view is to make them self-supporting and stop this heavy drain. How can this be done if the best lands are taken and they left to barren rocks and steep and rugged cliffs to learn a remunerative system of agriculture?

Now, let me read to the House this report. I ask the House to look at the two pictures. This is the report of the agent, who says:

This large body of land is better adapted to the raising of stock than for farming purposes, it being much broken and mountainous, especially that part of it lying on the Missouri River.

Now, the other picture:

The western part of both reservations and through which the Logan runs is more level and well adapted to farming purposes, and it is said to be equal in fertility to any land in the State of Nebraska.

That is the part they want to sell. The eastern part is broken; it is mountainous; it is unfitted to farming purposes, and that is the part we are told here by the Indian Committee in the interest of the Indian that the Indian ought to keep. But hear further what he says; and I ask the special attention of the House to this:

In traveling over the reservation the other day, especially that part lying on the Logan, I could not help being impressed with the untold wealth that lay before me; pasturage sufficient for thousands and thousands of head of stock; a fine stream of water running at my feet, and hardly a tree in sight; grass from two to four feet in height; and all this treasure in a month or two, instead of being gathered into barns, to be consumed by the annual prairie fire.

Mr. HASKELL. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?
Mr. SCALES. In a moment.

There is no end to grass anywhere except on the border of the Missouri. The reservation is one grand prairie—one great stock-raising country, where if a white man had a title—

Mr. Speaker, here I think is the milk in the cocoanut—

The reservation is one grand prairie—one great stock-raising country, where if a white man had a title to three hundred acres of land he could not help becoming wealthy in a very few years.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the land described by your own agent, that you are asked to sell in the interest of the Indian, and to reserve for them the bleak and barren mountains on the Missouri River, where this agent says no grass grows.

Mr. HASKELL. Now, let me state that letter is written by the agent with reference to the old bill of 50,000 acres east of the railroad. It does not apply to the present bill, and of that beautiful Logan Valley the gentleman refers to—I leave it to the map; I state it on my honor—from one-half to three-fourths of that beautiful Logan Valley, instead of being sold, is left in the reserve. And that was the special care of the committee to see that that beautiful piece of land, a large portion of it, all the Indians would want, was reserved to them, and it is reserved to them by this bill.

Mr. SCALES. Let us see how that is by the report of this same agent. I gather my information from him. I take it the agent knew what he was talking about. He is on the ground and has the knowledge. He says:

A large number of the Omaha tribe are thinking very strongly of disposing of 50,000 acres of this western portion of their reservation—

The part he had just described of that reservation—

though while in Washington and when asked by the honorable Secretary of the Interior whether they would sell 20,000 acres of their reservation to the Poncas, they replied that they would not, but might be induced to dispose of it to the white settlers.

Mr. VALENTINE. Exactly; that is right.

Mr. SCALES. Induced to sell to white settlers! What does that mean? Shall I tell this House? Shall I tell the country what that means? Shall I call the attention of this House to transactions occurring every day in negotiating treaties, and which ought to call the flush of shame to the brow of every man who had anything to do with it?

Not more than from four to six years ago a treaty was made with the Ute Indians in regard to their reservation, and to induce the agreement the commissioners provided a pound of striped candy for each buck Indian in order to be certain of his assent. I do not refer to the last Ute agreement or to that commission. But I believe it is done more or less in all cases. What does assent mean? Will you tell me that you do not know? You do know what it means. In these transactions assent is obtained too often by whisky, striped candy, a few dollars, and such gewgaws and trifles as catch the eye of the savage, without an equivalent, and you all from the West know it; my Kansas friend knows that is what it means.

Talk about getting their assent! No, sir; there is no assent in it, and if there was, if you did secure their assent, let me appeal to you in the name of that justice which has been so long postponed, delayed, and that good faith this Government should observe—let me ask you to stop to-day this system of getting assent. Give the Indians the best lands in their reservation and put them upon it. This agent, fortunately, says these 40,000 acres west are the very lands to be sold, and coming as it does, it settles absolutely the locality.

If you are going to do justice to these Indians, send out your commission and let that commission select lands for the Indians which are suitable for farming purposes. If they are willing to give up those lands for money, or whisky, or striped candy, or ear-rings, or gewgaws, or even for a small price in money, ought we to allow them to do it? In the name of God, I say no; in the name of justice, I say no; in the name of the down-trodden Indian, I say no.

Mr. WELLBORN. I desire to ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] a question.

Mr. SCALES. Very well.

Mr. WELLBORN. I ask the gentleman, not in the way of controversy, but simply for information in view of the reference made by the gentleman to the sale of the Ute lands for candy some four years ago, does the gentleman think that this bill does not adequately provide for the sale of this land at its real value?

Mr. SCALES. I am not objecting so much to that now, though in this respect it is not sufficiently guarded; the minimum price is too small. If my friend had listened to me he would have found that the object of my remarks was not at all as against that portion of the bill giving the lands in severalty to the Indians, but merely to that part which provided for the sale of these lands. My idea is this: if you want this allotment, appoint your commissioners and give the Indians the best land, and give it before you sell any off.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Why sell any of it? Why not allow them to have it all.

Mr. SCALES. Yes, why sell any of it?

Mr. HASKELL. I would inquire how much time there is remaining of my hour?

The SPEAKER, pro tempore, (Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan.) The gentleman has thirty-five minutes remaining.

Mr. SCALES. This is an important subject, and I hope it will not be hurried over. There are in this reservation 150,000 acres of land. There are in the Omaha tribe 1,121 individuals. If none of this land is sold it will give 160 acres per capita to the members of this tribe—not an acre too much if there should be increase and prosperity. Sell it, and you do it for the white men; sell it, and you open the door for speculation and great profits.

Now, what do I propose to do? Am I objecting to this allotment? No, sir. I think the time has come, and I am glad to know that the American House of Representatives in the last Congress recognized the fact, when these Indians must be treated under law. I am glad to see that the time has come when you must give them their lands in severalty, leaving the title in the Government, as this bill does, until they show that they can take care of it and will not be swindled out of it.

I am glad the time has come when these Indians will be forced by the Government to work, when they will be forced by the Government to attend the schools, and when all will be controlled by the law of this great country. Why, sir, fifty years ago Mr. Calhoun, standing in the old Hall of the House of Representatives, said that there could be no civilization, there could be no improvement, there could be no great moral advancement of the Indian tribes until they were under law. Yet from that day to this there has been no law extended over them except the savage law of their own savage tribes.

I am in favor of this allotment; I am in favor of law over the Indians. I believe the time has come when this question will be solved. I heartily concur with my friend from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL;] we have always been hand in hand on this subject, and I am with him to-day.

But excuse me; when the Committee on Indian Affairs goes so far, or when the Secretary of the Interior goes so far, or when the Commissioner of Indian Affairs goes so far in allotting these lands as to take from the Indians the best lands they have, according to all estimates, the only lands fitted for agricultural purposes, for that pursuit in which you have boasted that your civilization of the Indian has been most perfect heretofore—excuse me if I cannot go to that extent. I want to keep these lands for the Indians without regard to the profit they may be to the white man should he obtain possession of them.

I sympathize with those gentlemen who live in Nebraska. If I resided there, I doubt not I would desire that these Indians who seem to be a sort of wall in the path of the country's progress should be out of the way. But, Mr. Speaker, they must go somewhere; and the Government has given them this land. Do not let the Government, in the name of all that is just, take it away from them under the guise of having obtained their free consent. This is the most shameful fraud of all. No, no; do not say that. If you adopt such a measure, say frankly that you take their lands by force for the white man, and leave the question in that shape as the result of force without consent.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Twenty-five minutes.

Mr. HASKELL. I propose to yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] fifteen minutes, or so much time as he may desire.

Mr. HOLMAN. I supposed that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] was speaking in his own right, and was entitled to an hour.

Mr. SCALES. Yes, sir; I spoke in my own right.

Mr. HASKELL. I do not know when I surrendered the floor. I have been yielding to several gentlemen.

Mr. SCALES. I wish to reserve the remainder of my hour in order to reply. How much time did I occupy?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Twenty minutes.

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, I will not detain the House long; but I cannot remain silent and allow the remarks of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] to go unanswered, and, as to a portion of them, undenied. Probably he is not personally responsible for some of the assertions which he made, as he has relied upon the statements of an agent. One portion of the report which he read speaks of the mountainous regions of Nebraska and then speaks of this reservation as one grand prairie.

Mr. SCALES. That is what the officer making the report said.

Mr. VALENTINE. I know he said it; at least, that is what the gentleman read, and I presume he read it correctly.

Mr. SCALES. I spoke of the western part as a prairie. The eastern part is mountainous, as I understand.

Mr. VALENTINE. The eastern part of that reservation is just like the counties of Burke and Washington that lie south of it; and those counties are considered to be two of the best agricultural counties in Nebraska. It is true they are not quite as level as—

Mr. SCALES. How would the gentleman like to have this bill confined in its operation to the eastern part of the reservation?

Mr. VALENTINE. I would prefer it if I were going upon the land to farm.

Mr. SCALES. If any portion of the reservation is to be sold, I will give my consent to the sale of that part, if it would be satisfactory to the gentleman.

Mr. VALENTINE. I have no doubt the gentleman would consent; but it is not his consent we are asking. It is the consent of the Indians that we desire; and the Indians wish to retain the eastern part. You cannot find a single Indian of that tribe who will consent to the sale of the eastern part of the reservation. A delegation from the tribe, headed by Joe Laflèche, so stated before the committee. You cannot find one of those Indians that does not want the western portion sold, not the eastern part. A railroad has been built and is now being operated through that reservation. The Indians say they want that portion west of the railroad sold. This could be done under existing law, but if sold under the existing law it would be sold to persons who would not be required to occupy it. Therefore, the Indians say, "Do not sell the land under the present law, but pass a new law and sell it only to persons who will reside upon it and cultivate it." When it is sold upon these conditions, the white men will occupy up to the railroad on the west. They will build stations and towns; and the Indians will come up to the railroad from the east and get the benefit of these improvements.

These are not the wild untutored Indians that the gentleman from North Carolina talks about; they are bright and intelligent; they are farmers who earn their own living by what they raise upon their farms as do the white people. They have good houses. Their families are neat and clean. They are educated, and are educating their children.

I do not wish to speak further except to say that there are no mountains in Nebraska. There is no land in the eastern part of Nebraska that is not susceptible of agricultural cultivation. I send up to the desk to be read a speech of Joe Laflèche, one of these Indians, delivered before the committee. It is very short; and I want it to go alongside of the speech of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

REMARKS OF JOSEPH LAFLÈCHE.

FRIENDS: I wish to speak to you of some of our troubles. First, I will tell you of some things in the past. I was born in this country, in Nebraska, and I have always lived among the Indians. There was a time when I used to look only at the Indians and think they were the only people. The Indians must have been long in this country before the white man came here. I do not know how the Indians got their seed, but they had corn and squash and beans when I was young. In the spring they would take their seed and farm their one or two acres. There were no idlers, all worked in the spring. Those who had no hoes worked with pieces of sticks. When they got their seed in they went on the hunt. They had nothing to worry them; all they thought of was their little garden they had left behind. In the middle of the summer they came back with the skins for their tent-cloths, the meat for their food, and the skins for their clothing. They made use of all animals. When they got home they gathered their corn, dried it, buried a part of it, and taking enough to serve them, started out on the winter hunt to get furs. Then it was I used to see white men, those who were going around buying furs.

Sometimes for two or three years I would not see any white men. At that time the country was empty, only animals were to be seen. Then after a while the white men came, just as the blackbirds do, and spread over the country. Some settled down, others scattered over the land. The Indians never thought that any such thing could ever be. It matters not where one looks now, one sees white people. These things I have been speaking about are in the past, and are all gone. We Indians see you now, and want to take our steps your way. We turn ourselves toward you that you may help us. It seems as though the Government pushes us back. It makes us think that the Government regards us as unfit to be as white men. The white man looks into the future and sees what is good. That is what the Indian is doing. He looks into the future and sees his only chance is to become as the white man. When a person lives in a place a long time he loves the place. We love our lands and want titles for them.

When one has anything he likes to feel it is his own and belongs to no one else; so we want titles; then we can leave our land to our children. You know, and so do we, that some of us will not live very long; we will soon be gone into the other world. We ask for titles for our children's sakes. For some years we have been trying to get titles, but we have never heard from the Government. A little while ago I heard what the President said in his message, and it seemed as though he was giving me a cup of cold water when I was very thirsty. We are not strong enough to help ourselves in this matter, so we ask you to help us. In the past we only lived on the animals. We see that it is from the ground that you get all that you possess.

The reason you do not look upon us as men is because we have not law, because we are not citizens. We are strangers in the land where we were born. We want the law, that we may be regarded as men. When we are in trouble we want to have courts to appeal to. The law will teach wrong-doers. It will prevent trouble, as well as punish those who commit offenses. We know that in asking for titles we are asking for that which will bring responsibility. We are ready to accept it, and to strive to fulfill its requirements. It seems as though in the past the Government had not listened to the words of the Indians. We know our own needs, and now we speak to you directly.

Mr. HASKELL. I would like to move the previous question and have it ordered now, so that this bill may be pending in the morning; and then I will move to adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to move an amendment.

Mr. SCALES. Will the arrangement which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] suggests reserve my time, which I wish to use in reply?

Mr. HASKELL. I want the gentleman to yield his time, and I will yield mine, so that the debate may terminate now.

Mr. SCALES. I do not know but I may agree to that.

Mr. HASKELL. I wish to save as much of the time of the committee as I can. I do not want to consume more time in debate upon this bill. Let us vote it up or down. If the gentleman from Indiana desires to offer an amendment, I will yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. HOLMAN. While I do not waive the point of order pending before the Chair, I present the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the eighth section of the amendment the following words:

"Provided further, That no part of said land shall be sold until the allotments shall have been made to the said Indians under the fifth section of this act. And said Indians, or any part of them, may, if they shall so elect, select the land which shall be allotted to them in severalty in any part of said reservation, either east or west of said right of way mentioned in the first section of this act."

Mr. HASKELL. I now demand the previous question on the bill and amendment, and ask that the amendment may be printed in the RECORD, and then let it go over.

Mr. HOLMAN. Gentlemen are anxious on this side there shall be no haste in this matter. We reserve the point of order, and I think, subject to the point of order, it might be agreed the previous question should be regarded as pending.

Mr. HASKELL. I do not want the point of order allowed to run along to a future time. I do not care whether the bill is passed or not, but I do want to conclude action on the bill so we may get up some other business and dispose of it. That is my sole desire.

Is the point, Mr. Speaker, that the bill shall be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; that is the point of order, that, under the rules, it must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HASKELL. Why, that is set aside by the order of the House fixing this time for the consideration of Indian business. We are authorized to consider in the House any Indian business which we may choose to call up. The House will bear me witness that I have not choked off debate or amendment, but have allowed full and fair consideration of every measure.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman has been very fair.

Mr. HASKELL. I wish to save time, so we may have opportunity to call up other bills. I have promised to call up an important bill, brought to my notice by gentlemen on the other side of the House, and I wish to keep my word.

Mr. SCALES. I cannot consent to withdraw the point of order. I feel it to be my duty to insist upon it.

Mr. HASKELL. Very well; let us have a decision on the point of order.

Mr. SCALES. It is understood when the previous question is ordered I am to have my time.

Mr. HASKELL. I do not want to take up any more time. Let us have a vote on the bill, and vote it up or vote it down.

Mr. SCALES. I might want to say something.

Mr. HASKELL. If we do not debate it on this side there will be nothing to reply to.

Mr. SCALES. I insist on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Indiana indicate what provision of the bill is subject to the point of order?

Mr. HOLMAN. The ninth section provides for the payment of the expenses of this commission out of the public Treasury.

Mr. HASKELL. No; all of the expenses are to be paid out of the proceeds of the sale, out of Indian money, and not out of the public Treasury.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not so read it, but I may be mistaken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rule provides as follows:

Will the gentleman from Indiana point out what provision of the bill brings it within that rule?

Mr. HOLMAN. The ninth section of the bill. It does not provide for the payment of money out of any specific fund. It does not provide the compensation of these commissioners shall be paid out of the fund coming from the sale of these lands. In the absence of such provision that it shall be paid out of some specific fund of course it will have to come out of the public Treasury. I concede if the money is to be paid out of the Indian fund the case will be quite different.

Mr. HASKELL. In reply to the gentleman, I refer him to section 3, that the proceeds of the sale, after paying the expenses incident to and necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, &c., as the Secretary of the Interior may deem necessary, may be placed to the credit of the Indians. It provides for the payment of every expense out of the money arising from the sale. It is not an appropriation of money out of the Treasury or a tax upon the people.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. This discussion is quite immaterial, because in the line of the ruling of the Chair it is not competent to insist on the point of order. The House having made a special order of this business for to-day, the Speaker has held the point of order that a bill must first go to the Committee of the Whole House cannot be made or insisted on. He ruled that in reference to the District of Columbia business, and the gentleman from Indiana will recollect that, because we had a long discussion over it. The Chair has held that in such cases, where the House by a special order assigns a certain class of business for a specified day, that it avoids this point of order.

Mr. SCALES. A word there, Mr. Speaker, in response to the gentleman from Massachusetts. Can it be the fact that it has been decided in this House, or so held by the Speaker, that when the House determines to make a special order assigning certain business for a specified time, it has determined thereby to give up all its rights, and the rights of its individual members to make points of order upon the bills which may be presented coming within the rule?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. That, I say, was the ruling, after a long discussion, as my friend from Indiana will recollect.

Mr. SCALES. A ruling at this session of Congress?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir; the question arose with reference to some business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, and it will be remembered that the Speaker reinforced his decision by stating that it was the substance of former rulings upon the same subject. For myself I may be permitted to say that I seriously question the wisdom of such rulings.

Mr. HASKELL. This imposes no tax upon the people; it takes no money out of the Treasury. If there was even a point of order to be made against it on that ground it has already been overruled by the Speaker.

Mr. SCALES. In all frankness I do not think, on examination of the bill, that the point of order is good; and since I have examined this section of the bill to which attention has been called by the gentleman from Kansas, I withdraw it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would have been compelled to overrule the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. This third clause of the bill provides that the money is to be paid out of the Indian funds, and in that case of course the point of order would not be good.

Mr. HASKELL. I now ask the previous question upon the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. HASKELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BROWNE. I now ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table three or four pension bills which have been passed by the House, but amended by the Senate, merely formal amendments, with a view to concurring in the same; it will take but a moment.

There was no objection.

ELIZABETH B. CUSTER.

The first pension bill on the Speaker's table with House amendment was the bill (S. No. 1819) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Elizabeth B. Custer.

The amendment was read. It is as follows:

In line 3 to strike out the initial letter "C." and insert "B."

Mr. WILLITS. I move that the House recede from its amendment to the Senate bill. It was a mistake in the name simply. We changed the middle letter of the name from B. to C. It should be from C. to B.

The motion was agreed to.

DAVID T. STEPHENSON.

The next pension bill on the Speaker's table with Senate amendment was the bill (H. R. No. 3593) granting a pension to David T. Stephenson.

The Senate amendment is as follows:

Add at the end of the bill:
"And to pay him the same pension as would be allowed a private soldier for like disability."

The amendment was concurred in.

AMANDA J. M'FADDEN.

The next pension bill with Senate amendment on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 864) granting a pension to Amanda J. McFadden.

The Senate amendment is as follows:

In line 2, after "pension-roll," insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendment was concurred in.

PATRICK SULLIVAN.

The next pension bill on the Speaker's table with Senate amendments was the bill (H. R. No. 1873) for the relief of Patrick Sullivan.

The Senate amendments are as follows:

In line 3 strike out "28" and insert "24;" and in line 5 strike out all after the word "infantry" to the end of the bill.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. BROWNE moved to reconsider the several votes by which the Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RECOMMITTAL OF A BILL.

On motion of Mr. HUTCHINS, by unanimous consent, the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 191) to provide for the settlement of accounts of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, and the same was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

THOMAS WALSH & CO.

Mr. SPAULDING. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2428) for the relief of Thomas Walsh & Co., and to put the same upon its passage.

The bill was read. It is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to pay to Thomas Walsh & Co., of Detroit, Michigan, the sum of $283.25, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as a refund of penal duties paid by them erroneously assessed upon an invoice of dressed dolls imported by them at the port of Detroit, Michigan, in November, 1880.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPAULDING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN E. VENABLE.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask unanimous consent to offer for present consideration a joint resolution for the relief of John E. Venable. I desire to be allowed to make a statement in regard to it.

The joint resolution was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. WASHBURN. I object.

REVENUE-MARINE SERVICE.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I offer for present consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill of the House (H. R. No. 3983) to promote the efficiency of the revenue-marine service, now on the House Calendar with amendments thereto, reported from the Committee on Commerce, be made the special order for Wednesday, December 6, 1882, after the morning hour, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of, not to interfere with general appropriation bills.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS.

Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6841) to authorize the purchase of additional grounds for the United States court-house and post-office building at Springfield, Illinois; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. KASSON, for three days after the 27th instant.

To Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. ORTH, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 327) for the relief of John W. Humphrey;

A bill (S. No. 329) to authorize the preparation and publication of a classified, analytical, and descriptive catalogue of all Government publications from July 4, 1776 to March 4, 1881;

A bill (S. No. 314) to designate, classify, and fix the salaries of persons in the railway mail service; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 17) relating to the refunding of certain internal-revenue taxes illegally assessed against and collected from the Detroit House of Correction, in the State of Michigan.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS.

The following petitions were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. S. S. COX: The petition of Andrew Lutz, for relief—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DUGRO: The petition of August Lindner, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. A. S. HEWITT: The petition of citizens of New York, for the appointment of a select committee to consider the shipping interests of the United States—to the Committee on Commerce.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, July 27, 1882.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.
The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the 22d instant, a statement showing the receipts of money from all sources by the United States from 1789 to June 30, 1882; and a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the 22d instant, a statement showing the expenditures by the United States from 1789 to June 30, 1882, for public buildings and other public works, and for rivers and harbors, forts, arsenals, and armories; which, on motion of Mr. COCKRELL, were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

LOAN OF TENTS TO RUSSIAN HEBREW REFUGEES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. R. No. 271) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan twenty-five wall tents to the colony of Russian Hebrew refugees, at Cimarron, Foote County, Kansas.

Mr. PENDLETON. I ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BUTLER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6723) to repeal all laws which require the inspection and measurement of wood brought to the city of Washington for sale, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2592) granting a pension to Mary E. Murray. It is a pension case in which there was an adverse report. It will only take a minute or two. If it takes more time than that I will withdraw it.

Mr. HALE. I do not want to consent to the consideration of any bill that will take more than a minute or two.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator from Maine consent to the consideration of any bill that will take only a minute or two?

Mr. HALE. For a while.

Mr. INGALLS. There are several bills we should like to pass this morning that would only take a minute or two.

Mr. PLATT. There are on the Calendar ten pension cases in which there are majority and minority reports. I think they ought to be considered at some time before the close of the session. One of them is the case to which the Senator from Pennsylvania has alluded. I have no objection to its being taken up at the present time. I merely wanted to give this notice, that I think all these cases ought at some time to be considered.

Mr. ALLISON. I think there will be time enough to consider those cases in the interval when the appropriation bills will be in conference. I think if we are to adjourn soon we had better go on with the appropriation bills.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I could have made the statement I intended to make in regard to the bill I wish to have considered in the time that has been taken by Senators in discussing the order of business, and if the Senate will give me half a minute I can now state all there is in the case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is not up yet.

Mr. ALLISON. I was not saying anything in reference to the matter which the Senator has in charge. I was endeavoring to respond to the Senator from Connecticut, who wants to take up pension bills this morning.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. No, he does not; he only gave notice of his intention to call them up at an early day.

Mr. ALLISON. I merely wanted to say that we could take up those bills at intervals when the appropriation bills were not pressing.

Mr. INGALLS. The only sensible plan is to consume the time in discussing what shall be the order of business.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Is the bill before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves to take up the pension bill, which will be announced.

The ACTING SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. No. 2592) granting a pension to Mary E. Murray.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that in these cases there are adverse reports.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. There is an adverse report in this case and there is a minority report.

Mr. COCKRELL. I say that the majority report of the committee is adverse. There are a great many cases on the Calendar where there is no adverse report, where it is a unanimous report, cases which could be disposed of in a minute, and I think they are the ones which ought to be disposed of and ought to have precedence.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I trust the Senator will not object to this.

Mr. HOAR. I am interested in one pension case of a constituent, and I suggest that we have unanimous consent to take up the pending pension bills subject to the appropriation bills; that is, the understanding being that the appropriation bills shall have the right of way—they to come up when the appropriation bills go out.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator mean after the appropriation bills pass? I do not object to any arrangement, of course, that does not interfere with the appropriation bills.

Mr. HOAR. I will withdraw my suggestion.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Now I hope there will be no objection to the consideration of the bill which has been indicated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to considering the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. I call for the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is objection.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I hope the Senator from Missouri will withdraw his objection.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask either for the consideration of the Calendar under the Anthony rule or for the consideration of the naval appropriation bill?

Mr. HALE. Under these conditions, then, as the Senator from Pennsylvania will see, I shall have to move to take up the naval appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order of business is the proceeding under the Anthony rule.

Mr. PLATT. With the permission of the Senator from Maine, I will say that at the first opportunity I shall ask the Senate to take up the pension bills to which I have referred.

Mr. ALLISON. That is right.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I suggest to the Senator to ask for their consideration at this time.

Mr. PLATT. There seems to be objection to that course.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will wait until after the appropriation bills are out of the way.

Mr. PLATT. At the first opportunity I shall ask the Senate to take up these contested cases, and the Senate can go further with the pension bills if it is desired.

Mr. HALE. I am very desirous of getting the naval appropriation bill out of the way to-day so as to send it to the other House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves to postpone the regular order under the Anthony rule. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. Then he moves to take up the naval appropriation bill. Does the Chair hear any objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate.

CREEK ORPHAN FUND.

Mr. SLATER. I ask the Senator from Maine to yield to me for the purpose of taking up the Creek orphan fund bill, which came from the House yesterday.

Mr. HALE. It is only to enter a non-concurrence, I understand, and to expedite the disposition of the bill.

Mr. SLATER. That is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 126) to reimburse the Creek orphan fund. The amendment will be read.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the reading proceeds, I should like to ask what is the purpose of the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SLATER. My purpose is to move non-concurrence in the amendment of the House of Representatives, and to ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to that course.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The amendment of the House of Representatives is to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the sum of $251,055.97, with 5 per cent. interest on $176,755.97 from April 6, 1872, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of reimbursing the Creek orphan fund, which sum has been diverted from the said fund, and is due to the Creek orphans and their heirs under the treaty of March 24, 1832: Provided, That said sum shall, in the discretion of the President, be paid to the Creek orphans and their heirs under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain who are entitled under the aforesaid treaty of March 24, 1832, and the provisions of this act to receive the money hereby appropriated; and it shall be his duty to see that said moneys shall be paid to the actual beneficiaries under said law, the orphans and their heirs, to the exclusion of all claims by attorneys for fees, except such reasonable attorney's fees as shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior after the passage of this act: Provided further, That all bonds heretofore purchased with moneys belonging to this fund shall be the property of the United States: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and instructed to charge the sum of $69,956.68, used for general purposes of the Creek Nation, against the general fund of said nation, and said sum shall be retained by the Secretary of the Interior in such installments as shall not seriously embarrass the object of the annual appropriations for the support and necessities of the Creek Nation.

Mr. SLATER. I move that the Senate non-concur in the amendments of the House and ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore being authorized to appoint the committee, Mr. SLATER, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COKE were appointed the conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had receded from its amendment to the bill (S. No. 1819) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Elizabeth C. Custer.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 864) granting a pension to Amanda J. McFadden; A bill (H. R. No. 1873) for the relief of Patrick Sullivan; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3599) granting a pension to David T. Stephenson.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the resolution of the Senate to correct an error in the enrolling of the bill (S. No. 972) creating the Oregon Short-Line Railway Company a corporation in the Territories of Utah, Idaho, and Wyoming, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 2428) for the relief of Thomas Walsh & Co.; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6682) to fix the salary of the collector of customs of the district of Chicago, Illinois.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 864) granting a pension to Amanda J. McFadden;

A bill (H. R. No. 1873) for the relief of Patrick Sullivan;

A bill (H. R. No. 3599) granting a pension to David T. Stephenson;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 75) allowing the widow of General Stephen A. Hurlbut, late minister to Peru, one year's salary; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 77) allowing the widow of General Judson Kilpatrick, late minister to Chili, one year's salary.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I offer an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill, and move its reference to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the amendment be read at the Secretary's desk.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask to have it referred without printing.

The proposed amendment was read, as follows:

That the Attorney-General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to ascertain and determine what would be a just and reasonable compensation for the services rendered by Charles H. Reed in the defense of Charles J. Guiteau, under the appointment of the United States district court for the District of Columbia, and to make an allowance therefor, not exceeding the sum of $5,000; and such sum as may be allowed, not exceeding the amount aforesaid, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. PLUMB. I suggest that that ought to go to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. HALE. By all means.

Mr. PLUMB. I move its reference to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Appropriations Committee is the proper one.

Mr. ALLISON. I raise no question of reference. I only wanted to know what it was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is no question as to his being entitled to some compensation.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not desire to debate the amendment; I only wanted to see what it related to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] as modified, which will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the naval appropriation bill be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to strike out all general legislation changing existing laws and provide for the naval establishment as it now exists.

Mr. ANTHONY. The morning business seems to have been gone through with very rapidly. I had intended, with the assent of the Senator from Maine and with the gracious assistance of the Chair, to pre-empt the time between the routine business and twelve o'clock in favor of the bill for printing the tenth census reports. Every Senator must see the importance of that bill and the necessity of passing it at once. I hope the Senator from Maine will give way until twelve o'clock. I think that bill can be passed in ten minutes. I do not wish to say a word upon it, except to vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Maine consent to lay the pending bill aside?

Mr. ANTHONY. If the census bill will create no debate?

Mr. HALE. I should be very glad, but I have declined to yield in regard to other matters which are very pressing, and as the naval bill has been taken up, and we have got it before the Senate, I think it will be better now in the general disposition of business to go on with that, and I hope we may finish it to-day. It is only on that account that I decline to yield to my friend from Rhode Island.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, the rules of this body have assigned the consideration of special subjects to committees organized with especial reference to their proper consideration, and the Senate naturally depends upon the information derived through committees to enable them properly to decide upon questions. It is absolutely impossible for any member of this body to obtain even a general knowledge of every one of the multifarious and multitudinous subjects which come before it unless he has the aid and assistance of a committee specially charged with the consideration of the subject who, by their experience and special devotion to the class of subjects assigned to them are competent to instruct and to guide the rest of the Senate.

We are asked to-day to vote upon a naval appropriation bill. What are appropriation bills? Simply enactments providing money to execute existing laws. They are founded upon estimates prepared in the various Executive Departments, brought here, published to the country, and submitted to the Appropriations Committee, who sit in judgment upon the estimates of the Departments and then report to the Senate that they approve and recommend the appropriation of certain moneys for certain ascertained and well-known objects.

But this is not simply a bill appropriating money to maintain the personnel of the United States Navy, and to take care of the material of that Navy. There are many features of general legislation in this bill which go far toward a reorganization of the United States Navy, affecting very largely the status as to rank, promotion, and retirement of officers of the Navy, and affecting them most seriously.

Now, what have we to guide us on this subject? Was there in the other House a report from the Committee on Naval Affairs? Did the Navy Department in its last report suggest or give the reasons why these proposed changes should take place? Has the Naval Committee of the Senate made any report? Even the honorable Senator who has charge of this bill gave a statement of the condition of the Navy, but he gave no rationale why these changes should be made, nor did he even explain them.

What is the upshot of all this? It is that upon appropriation bills you are ingrafting general legislation. It is a bad form of legislation. Suppose upon the appropriation for the support of the judicial branch were proposed to be ingrafted such a bill as you, sir, introduced from the Judiciary Committee reforming importantly the judicial system. Suppose that had come from the Committee on Appropriations without any reference to the Judiciary Committee, and with no report, no one would say it was a proper or safe mode of legislation.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion here?

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. The Senator refers to the non-action of the Naval Committee of the House in this bill. If he will examine the debates which took place in the House, which I have here in full, he will find that the Naval Committee of the House acted in conjunction with the Committee on Appropriations, made suggestions and amendments, and that one of the most important features, and perhaps the most important feature, of this bill was incorporated upon it in the House of Representatives on the motion of the Naval Committee of the House represented by its chairman. The Naval Committee there did not antagonize the bill and seek to destroy it as the Naval Committee does here; but because it had not been able in any way to bring its own matters before the House it joined with the Committee on Appropriations cordially and helped it forward in this work. The bill as sent to us that the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate took hold of is the joint production of all the committees in the House having any jurisdiction over the matter; and I hope the Senator will read the debate bearing this out.

Mr. BAYARD. I will not say but what it is my right and perhaps my duty to inform myself of the current debates in the other House, although by our rules we are not allowed to refer to them here. But I cannot avoid knowledge of a public fact, what is called judicial knowledge, and that is that the House of Representatives as at present organized has in fact the same persons in control of the Naval Committee, the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department and the Appropriations Committee, and no wonder they are in perfect coincidence; no wonder they can agree in debate when the three committees are composed of almost the same ruling individuals. It is a triple head, the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Committee on Appropriations. It is tria juncta in unum. That is the fact, and therefore, of course, the debate will be naturally harmonious, being conducted always by the same gentlemen bringing in the bill from one committee, and authorizing it from another, and agreeing to it from a third.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion in regard to the matter in the other House?

Mr. BAYARD. Of course.

Mr. BLAIR. I have read that debate, and whoever reads the debate will observe that the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs in the House complains not of the Committee on Appropriations, but he complains of the fact that only fragmentary portions of the measure matured by the Naval Committee had been incorporated by the Committee on Appropriations of the House in the bill which comes to us. He is thankful for what he can get, and so expresses himself.

Mr. HALE. Did he not move a very important feature of this bill, and was it not put on in the House?

Mr. BLAIR. It is true that he assented to its being done, but whoever reads those speeches will see that he explicitly complains that the mature, well-defined, and well-rounded measure of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House is botched and butchered, and he is only thankful to the Appropriations Committee for the favors that the Naval Committee do get, which is the bill as it came to the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. That is they complained that $10,000,000 was not appropriated, as they wanted to have done.

Mr. BLAIR. And various measures which they thought essential to a reorganization of the Navy.

Mr. BAYARD. I only repeated what is a well-known public fact, and to account for what the honorable Senator from Maine has stated, the entire and remarkable coincidence in opinion and co-operation between the three committees in the House, because as I say they are the same gentlemen playing different parts, but with nevertheless the same actor in each. I only say that because it illustrates what I may call the vice of this species of legislation, and that is, of general legislation being incorporated upon what ought to be strictly an appropriation bill.

It seems to me that while the Appropriations Committee is expressly raised to consider the estimates of the Departments and to consider the propositions of the other committees, yet that general legislation relating to any particular branch of service ought to pass through the hands of the usual and appropriate committee—which in the present case is assuredly the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Here am I, a member of this body, endeavoring to inform myself fairly and properly as to what my vote should be upon a naval appropriation bill, and in regard to certain features of general legislation I find upon it. Where am I to look for the information? My friend from Maine says take the records of the House debate and there you will find that a member of the Appropriations Committee, who is also a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, who is also a member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, and that debate will show that he and his friends were entirely in harmony with themselves, and that the committees being thus composed have proceeded to indorse themselves and each other with entire mutuality. Such a result may be impressive to him but it is far from satisfactory to me.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is mistaken. The chairman of the committee who moved this important amendment is not a member of the Appropriations Committee and never has been.

Mr. BAYARD. No, he is a member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department and also of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HALE. He is a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, which is the distinctive committee. The Committee on Naval Expenditures is a nominal committee which never meets. He did complain, as my friend from New Hampshire says, because his plan was a bill that comprehended an expense of $10,000,000, and the Committee on Appropriations of the House did not believe that the Navy was in a condition where so much money ought to be expended, and the amendment that he moved and which is most important and is embodied in this bill was cut down in its amount at the suggestion of the Committee on Appropriations of the House. But the whole great features of the bill were put on by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, who was not a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BAYARD. I have not yet proceeded to criticize the features of this bill; I am only speaking of the rules and forms of legislation. Three years ago, in the month of May, 1879, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was vetoed by the then President of the United States, for the reason that general legislation was ingrafted upon an appropriation bill. It was the first time in the history of this Government that a bill had ever been vetoed for an alleged defect in form, but nevertheless it was the will and pleasure and within the power constitutionally of that official, to veto one of the appropriation bills of the Government on the ground, as he stated, that it contained general legislation.

It is not my province, it is certainly not my intent, as I am not a member of the House of Representatives, to have anything to say in regard to the organization of their House, excepting that when I am referred by the honorable Senator from Maine to the proceedings of that House and when I ask why can we not have a report to justify and explain and influence properly our votes here upon the subject from some committee, I am told that the debates of that body will disclose the best reason, and show that the three committees of the House were in remarkable accord, then I cannot help saying that all three committees are confessedly under the same individual influence.

Therefore it is that I am disposed to vote for this motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, not in the slightest degree from disrespect or distrust of the honorable gentlemen upon the Committee on Appropriations, not in the slightest degree a criticism upon what they have done, but because I think that this business comes before us from an unusual and I may add an improper channel; I mean by that, an irregular channel. If the Navy of the United States is to be substantially changed in structure, it is proper that the Committee on Naval Affairs should give us the reasons why; and when they bring in a bill here they should accompany it by a report justifying the changes which they propose to make in the existing laws—

Mr. HALE. The Senator is always so courteous that I wish to ask him one question. I know the Senator is seeking to do what is the right and wise thing in this matter.

Mr. BAYARD. I say this without intending the slightest personal reflection.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator's course here is such as to lead me properly to assume that he is seeking the right course. He has just said that he is inclined to vote for this proposition, which cuts off the legislative parts of the bill by referring it with instructions to lop them off. Does he not think it would be a more effectual way of arriving at a just judgment as to the provisions that are incorporated in this bill to vote down that proposition, and when the different provisions come up they will be explained in detail. They will be modified if need be; they will be stricken out seriatim if the Senate concludes that that is wise; but we shall then have the process of deliberation upon the different clauses; and does not the Senator deem that in that way we get at a more thorough investigation of the subject?

Mr. BAYARD. I must say in regard to that, that I feel inclined to respect and obey the request of the Committee on Naval Affairs. There is such a thing as proper jurisdiction in regard to measures; and I hold that if there can be appropriate jurisdiction, it is that when the organization of the American Navy is to be changed the Committee on Naval Affairs should have something to say about it.

But I want now to pass to another matter. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] yesterday, with his usual force, brought before the Senate the vast disproportion of the personnel of the Navy to the ships of the Navy, and argued that there was something necessary to deplete those numbers by retirement or in some other way, but at any rate to deplete the numbers of the officers of the Navy.

Now what are the facts? For the last ten years, perhaps for the last fifteen, we have been in an era of change and invention in naval architecture, naval artillery, and naval warfare, so that ships and guns which were useful fifteen years ago to-day are worthless. The consequence is that, not having kept pace with modern invention, not having had in the control of the Navy such minds as were competent or willing to consider these subjects and to prove themselves able to keep this country abreast of modern invention, we have not to-day in the Navy of the United States a single first-class ship of modern construction. But while we have not ships and while we have not the artillery, we have had the annual crops, so to speak, of officers graduated from our Naval Academy. The American naval schools are of the first rank. The American navy, speaking of the ships, is of the lowest. There is that disproportion, and therefore the question is because you have now no good ships will you cease having competent officers or a supply of officers for any future navy we may hereafter build?

In our Army the avowed policy which we have pursued has been since 1865 to preserve a large nucleus of official skill, of educated men, who should act as officers to extemporize the mass of the Army by the aid of that skill, and in this of course is involved a vast disproportion of officers to the rank and file of the Army. In the Navy I take it for granted much of the same thing has been made necessary from the fact that we have fallen entirely in the rear in the way of naval architecture and construction, and in the mean time our Naval Academy has been sending forth to us the usual supply of young, accomplished, and well-educated officers.

I am disposed to believe that if there is to be an adjustment in the relative proportions of these two essentials to the Navy, we had better have ships fit and worthy of the personnel of our Navy than cut down and dismiss the personnel because we do not happen just now to have the ships. I say that it is a just and severe commentary upon the manner in which the Navy has been controlled for the last ten or twelve years that we should be in the lamentable condition so far as ships and guns are concerned that we are to-day. But the causes and reasons are not difficult of ascertainment.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me right there? I think he has misapprehended what I said. He speaks of cutting down the Navy and dismissing officers from the Navy. There is no attempt to do anything of the kind; there is no attempt to dismiss anybody from the Navy. The bill only provides that when certain officers of a certain grade are retired their places shall not be filled. It does not reduce the number. We know that twenty-five commodores will be retired in seven years. Their ages shown in the register make that a patent fact, and when they are retired and on the retired list we do not put on the active list any more commodores. That is not dismissing anybody from the service.

Mr. BAYARD. Will my friend allow me to get through what I was saying?

Mr. LOGAN. One other thing. The Senator spoke of the Army. I wish to call his attention so that in his address to the Senate he may draw the parallel if he desires to do so. A commodore in the Navy is of the same rank as a brigadier-general in the Army. We have in the Army 25,000 soldiers, and twenty-five brigadiers and three major-generals on the active list. In the Navy, with not 4,000 men, you have twenty-five commodores of the rank of brigadier-general of the Army—five in the Army and twenty-five in the Navy. That is the disproportion.

Then I want to call the Senator's attention to another thing. If this Government had two hundred ships to-day manned, with forty guns each, which I presume she never will have—if she had a navy of two hundred ironclads to-day, with forty guns each, you have more officers than would be necessary to command that number of ships.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I prefer concluding what I have to say, without further interruption. For the present disproportion between the personnel of the Navy and the materiel of the Navy in the way of ships, there is an obvious cause. It is that while we have gone on graduating officers, we have wholly ceased to build ships, and the consequence is what you now see.

I do not care, for the purpose of argument, how the personnel of the Navy is to be diminished, whether you want to stop promotion or whether you want to retire, or whether you want to stop the supply by preventing the entrance of cadets into our naval school. That is a question of detail upon which I want the judgment of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I want their judgment founded upon the testimony of those officers of the Navy who are best qualified to give it; and that I mean to say we have not got in regard to this bill.

There is a fact also which we may as well look at. Under our political system, within the last fifteen or eighteen months there have been four consecutive heads of the Navy Department. Mr. Thompson of Indiana was succeeded by Mr. Goff of West Virginia; Mr. Goff of West Virginia by Mr. Hunt of Louisiana; Mr. Hunt of Louisiana by Mr. Chandler of New Hampshire, and all these within the space of eighteen months or less.

Is it not also a fact, that the prior occupation and line of studies of none of these gentlemen had qualified him for the post? It is no derogation either of the character or abilities of these gentlemen to say that they had nothing on God's earth to do with ships or shipping, or navigation prior to the time that they were inducted into the Navy Department, and whatever of natural fitness there may have been, whatever adaptability there may have been, no time was given in any case for them to acquire knowledge in the few months they were allowed to remain in office. It was impossible that any proper comprehension of the duties of the office could have been obtained, much less that knowledge which could be made the basis of any principle upon which a Navy was to be built and organized.

Before that time there was during nearly the whole of General Grant's administration but a single incumbent, and what were the facts broadly stated to the country of that administration? Appropriations running considerably over $20,000,000 per annum were voted, were spent, and year by year the Navy grew weaker and more insignificant until finally it virtually died in the hands of those who had charge of it.

Can any man here doubt that it would have been wiser and more economical in the spring of 1869 to have made a rendezvous of every naval ship of the United States at Fortress Monroe, for instance, and there have made a bonfire of them all or sunk them and then put the officers and crew on full pay, from that time to this? Would it not have been an economy compared to that which was done? Would there not have been enough money out of the two hundred and odd millions—one hundred and seventy and odd millions in cash, and fifty odd millions in material—would there not have been enough money left to have given us this day at least $75,000,000 wherewith to buy at least fifteen first-class modern ships of war such as Italy has now upon her list?

We have not even a second-class modern ship of war. A modern ship of war such as the English have employed lately to bombard Alexandria will cost in round numbers $5,000,000; that is to say, a seagoing ship, if not fully armored, armored sufficiently to deflect the missiles of powerful artillery, and more than that, having what the American people do not possess, guns adapted to modern warfare. We have not in the Navy a single first-class gun. I read in an intelligent speech in the debate to which I have been commended by my friend from Maine,—for I have tried as well as my duties in this body will permit me to keep myself informed of the debates of the House of Representatives on this subject,—that the Government not only has not a single gun worthy of the second or third rank in modern artillery, but it has not the machinery to make such guns; and one of the first expenses recommended, and I think most wisely recommended, by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House was the expenditure of $1,000,000 to buy a steam-hammer to enable us to begin to make our own guns.

Now this bill proposes to improve upon this lamentable condition of affairs. It proposes as I understand to start with the construction of a couple of fast-steaming steel cruisers, all well enough in their way—

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator at that point allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BAYARD. A question, with pleasure.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask him, then, whether he does not think it would be much more prudent to leave the question of the construction of a navy to the Naval Committee than to refer the mere question of the personnel of the Navy to that committee? I understand this measure does not contemplate a mere reference for the purpose of striking down anything in regard to the construction of the Navy, but simply in regard to the personnel.

Mr. BAYARD. I think that if I had had the attention of the Senator he would have found that I was not objecting to the want of the attention of the Naval Committee to the whole of this bill, but that I think we do need their action, advice, and examination in respect to construction as much as we do upon a change in the organization of the personnel of the Navy. I hold that the two are inseparable. If you mean to have ships you must have educated and scientific men to navigate them. If you mean to employ scientific men in your Navy you must have proper ships, and therefore for both and for each in my judgment it would require to-day as in the past the employment of the information that you ought naturally to seek from the committee specially charged with the subject.

My friend from Maine asked me in regard to the debate in the House. Now, if I am not mistaken, this bill contains an amendment compulsorily to retire Admiral Porter from his special rank and that amendment was vigorously combated by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House. Am I not right in that, I ask the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HALE. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not hear his question. What was it?

Mr. BAYARD. This bill I believe contains an amendment compulsorily to retire Admiral Porter; and as I remember, that proposition was vigorously combated by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House in the debate there.

Mr. HALE. This is the history of that matter—

Mr. BAYARD. Now is not that the fact? Did not that gentleman oppose the amendment compelling the retirement of Admiral Porter?

Mr. HALE. That was struck out on a point of order. It never reached discussion.

Mr. BAYARD. Did he not express his objection to it?

Mr. HALE. That I do not remember. If the Senator will bear with me, he will remember that I stated that the clause in relation to the Admiral of the Navy was the only matter upon this bill that was not either found in the bill as it came from the House or strictly a modification and adaptation of that. That is a matter that the Senate must deal with itself, either upon a point of order or upon the question whether it shall remain or not. That did not come to the committee from the House. I stated that frankly when I opened the debate.

Mr. BAYARD. I should not have referred to that fact now had it not been that the Senator from Maine referred to the debate in the House as being the proper source from which we should obtain information to guide our votes here, and I happened to remember that in the course of the speech which I read there was an opposition expressed which that gentleman felt to the amendment which now finds a place in this bill. But I do not propose to discuss the merits of the general legislation contained in this bill.

There were obvious reasons to my mind to account for the disproportion of numbers so dwelt upon by the Senator from Illinois yesterday, so emphasized by him, making it apparent to me that he referred to the officers of the Navy of the United States as a mass of dead-heads, men who are seeking sea service pro forma, not real sea service, overfilling the ships for the sake of getting sea-pay. It is easy to show by an obvious reference to existing facts, to the facts of history, why this must necessarily be so.

The manner in which the Navy has been administered has prevented us from having a proper number or description of ships; and there does not seem to have been the ability or the power or the disposition to originate such a Navy as I think the people of the United States ought to have and which as a commercial nation in my judgment it is essential they should have.

I have said more than I intended when I rose; I should long since have ended had I not been so constantly interrupted—for the sake of emphasizing the fact that I believe in the jurisdiction of the appropriate committee over this subject, and if they move to be allowed to consider it or to present their plans, I should hope the Senate following its rules of business would so commit the bill. It is not the slightest reflection upon the Committee on Appropriations; it is only a question of what is orderly and proper in the discharge of business, and then when the bill shall come before the Senate we shall have a chance to vote upon its various provisions.

Mr. ALLISON obtained the floor.

Mr. LOGAN. Allow me to suggest to the Senator from Delaware, as he spoke about my trying to make out that these men were dead-heads, that I did not use any such language. Let me ask him a question: Suppose a vessel, not a sea-going vessel, but a man-of-war was out here in the Potomac River properly officered and manned; suppose some of the other officers who are on shore go on that vessel and establish their quarters there by permission, make their offices there for the purpose of doing what they are doing on shore, drawing maps, &c., so as to get sea-pay; would he consider that a violation of the law or dodging the law or an honest compliance with the law?

Mr. BAYARD. I think that while they were at sea they necessarily would be gaining nautical experience and necessarily exercising those faculties which would enable them to command ships at sea. You may have too many officers for the duty; nevertheless they will be there; they will assist in its performance; and it is what I would call keeping them in training.

Mr. LOGAN. But that is not my question. The question is, where men do not go on board a vessel for sea duty, but go on board and live on a vessel that is anchored here, where they do not belong to the vessel, and make their offices on board of it to do that which would be shore duty, merely to obtain sea-pay, would the Senator consider that an honorable way of getting pay out of the Treasury?

Mr. BAYARD. If an officer is ordered to sea and does his duty on shore and it is done honorably and faithfully, no one has a right to complain of it because those who organized the law, those who have charge of the Navy should see to it that there are the proper ships for them.

Mr. LOGAN. I have nothing to say about those ordered to sea; I only say that if they order too many it is the fault of somebody, and we ought to provide against it. But where men go on board a vessel merely to draw sea-pay when they do not belong to the vessel, that is a different proposition. I do not wish to name any names, but—

Mr. MILLER, of California. When has such a thing occurred?

Mr. LOGAN. I do not want to get into a discussion with anybody on this point; but if the Senator will inquire of the proper authority he will see whether there was such a case, and he will not only see whether there was such a case but he will see that the head of the Government had to order them away from there.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I will not occupy the attention of the Senate long in the discussion of the pending question. I shall not undertake to discuss the merits of the provisions in this bill, whether they are wise or otherwise, whether they ought to be adopted or rejected. I want to address myself for a moment to the orderly conduct of business in this body.

We of the Committee on Appropriations were pretty roundly scored and scolded yesterday by gentlemen of the Naval Committee for our conduct with regard to this bill. I take no offense at these criticisms. They are perfectly proper criticisms no doubt, but I want the Senate to understand the effect of them.

Let me call the attention of the Senate first to this naval bill and the legislative provisions in it. It came to this body on the 6th day of July. On the 13th day of July, one week afterward, the Committee on Appropriations reported it back to the Senate with sundry amendments. This is the 27th day of July, or, in other words, it is three weeks since this bill came within the jurisdiction of the Senate and within the jurisdiction of its members for examination, discussion, and preparation of amendments. Although the bill was not formally referred to the Naval Committee, the Naval Committee have had an opportunity, as every Senator has had an opportunity, to examine it and to propose amendments to it, and, unless I am very much mistaken, that committee has proposed a great number of amendments to this bill.

Mr. ROLLINS. No one of which has received the favorable action of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; but that shows that the Naval Committee has had jurisdiction of this subject. They have so far as they could complied with the suggestions of the Senator from Delaware, that they ought to advise the Senate how to vote upon these legislative questions. So that the Naval Committee have done all, at least I presume they have done all they could do if this bill had been formally referred to them. They have taken it up, I suppose, day by day and night by night, as the Committee on Appropriations have. I suppose while we were sitting in our Appropriations Committee room day by day and night by night studying this bill, the Committee on Naval Affairs were in their room doing the same thing, and that they have carefully gone over this bill and suggested amendments which they think are wise amendments. They say the Committee on Appropriations did not adopt them. Very well, the contest will come between the Naval Committee and the Appropriations Committee, if there be a contest, when the bill is up for consideration, and I will say to Senators that there are a great many amendments to various bills offered by committees of this body and sent to the Committee on Appropriations that the Committee on Appropriations do not adopt. Why? Because we believe that the matters to which they relate are more clearly within the jurisdiction of these committees, and that they ought to present those amendments and debate them in open Senate. By referring them to the Committee on Appropriations under our rules they have jurisdiction in the Senate of those amendments, so that they can be offered and discussed here.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to suggest that on the bill we are about to report to-morrow morning, the sundry civil bill, I think there are from fifteen to twenty very important amendments that we have referred back to the committees submitting them, asking them to present them for themselves, because they know all about them, saying that we should make no objection to them?

Mr. ALLISON. I thank the Senator from Kentucky for so reminding me. These are amendments that more nearly and directly appertain to questions under the jurisdiction of other committees. So we say, let those committees offer those amendments in the Senate. Now, what is the proposition?

Mr. HOAR. Is it not the habit of your committee to make points of order when such amendments are offered in the Senate?

Mr. ALLISON. Not at all.

Mr. HOAR. Was it not so with the increase of the district judges' salaries, of which a large majority of the Senate was in favor?

Mr. ALLISON. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for giving me that hint. That was a change in the existing law; and that is what the Committee on Appropriations is glib for this morning, and hung up here to the derision and scorn of the Naval Committee particularly, because they have forsooth undertaken here and there to change the existing law. Now the Senator from Massachusetts finds fault with me because I or some other Senator upon the Committee on Appropriations made the point of order that the amendment suggested by the Senator was legislation.

Mr. HOAR. I found no fault; I only pointed out the fact, and I neither expressed approbation nor censure.

Mr. PLUMB. The point of order that the Senator from Massachusetts complains of was made by myself. I did not make it as a member of the Appropriations Committee, under instructions of the committee, but without any suggestion from any other member of the committee. I made it simply in my capacity as a member of this body, and for the time being totally oblivious of the fact that I was a member of the Appropriations Committee; and it had no relation to that in any way whatever.

Mr. HOAR. The point is this: I understand the Senator from Iowa is making the suggestion that, having a bill which he is now defending come from his committee with a large portion of it consisting of new legislation of a most important character, the proper way is for Senators to bring forward their amendments to the appropriation bill and let the Senate act upon them. I pointed out to him in reply that nobody but the Committee on Appropriations is permitted to exercise that privilege. No other Senator is permitted to test the sense of the Senate as to whether a majority of the Senate will insert new legislation in connection with an appropriation bill. That committee invariably makes the point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. If new legislation is proposed by the Committee on Appropriations any Senator can make the point of order on it just as well as the Committee on Appropriations can make it on any Senator's amendment. Take this very matter of the retirement of Admiral Porter. Do we not know perfectly well that any Senator here can get up and make a point of order on that amendment when it is reached? Why? Because it is new legislation suggested in violation of our rules; but that objection does not apply to a great many amendments to this bill. Why? Because the whole framework of this bill comes to us from the House of Representatives. They have there a very different rule from what we have here. Their rule is that legislation is in order on an appropriation bill when the tendency of that legislation is to reduce expenditures; and every legislative provision on this appropriation bill which comes from the House of Representatives not only in theory but in fact does reduce the expenses of the naval establishment. The intention of this bill from the beginning to the end, so far as the legislative provisions are concerned, is to reduce the personnel of the naval establishment, beginning with midshipmen and extending on through to the grade of rear-admiral.

It is intended to save to the people of this country large sums of money which hitherto have been appropriated for the maintenance and support of the Navy with reference to its personnel, and I confess with some amazement to find the other side of the Chamber standing here apparently as one solid phalanx against the Committee on Appropriations, when by the provisions of this bill there is the intention and purpose to reduce the expenses of this Government in a large degree. I had supposed that when propositions of that character came up, being in order in the House of Representatives under their rules, and not being in order if originated here under our rules, no objection would be made to the Senate Committee on Appropriations coming in with these legislative provisions with such modifications as in their judgment were wise and proper, not detracting or taking from any other committee of this body or any Senator in this body his privilege of suggesting such other and different amendments as he may desire to propose to these provisions, and every one of these provisions in this bill is subject to amendment.

Mr. FARLEY. The Senator refers to the solid phalanx on this side of the Chamber. Does not the Senator know that the opposition to the proposed amendments in that portion of the bill comes from members on that side of the Chamber and not from those on this? I only wanted to correct the Senator in that proposition.

Mr. ALLISON. I am very happy to be corrected. I withdraw that suggestion, because I do not wish to prolong this debate.

Now, I want to call the attention of Senators to another thing in connection with this bill. By recommitting it to the Committee on Appropriations to strike out this legislation you do not thereby accomplish its striking out. This legislation comes to us from the House of Representatives and we cannot get rid of it in this perfunctory sort of way by directing the Committee on Appropriations to strike it out. What is the effect of that? Let me ask Senators on both sides of the Chamber, are we prepared now on the 27th day of July to enter into a contest with the House of Representatives upon a question of the reduction of expenditures when they have with a great degree of unanimity agreed to the various provisions looking to a reduction of expenditures in this bill?

What will be the effect if the suggestion of Senators is carried out on this bill? The effect of it will be that we shall be directed to make appropriations for the naval establishment as it exists, and these legislative provisions are still in the bill with the obnoxious features that some of them have in the judgment at least of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, as also in the judgment of the Committee on Naval Affairs; these provisions are still retained in the bill, and the bill goes back to the House with our amendments. What will the House do with it? In a contest of that character, made by the Senate, avowedly and professedly, against legislation tending to reduce expenditures, tending to reform with reference to the Navy and the navy-yards of our country, do you suppose the House of Representatives or any other body of men will sit down quietly and allow us to do that thing? Will they not say "We will confer with the Senate upon these questions," and what will that mean? It will mean that every one of these legislative provisions, instead of being carefully debated in the Senate by Senators having responsibility each and every one for himself, will be referred to a conference committee. The House will disagree to our amendments, striking out this legislation and ask for a conference, and some of the men who are so dreaded by Senators on this floor with regard to this legislation will be upon that conference, and then the question will be how this legislation shall be amended. It will then probably be finally shaped by six men instead of by the body of the Senate.

So, unless Senators are ready to enter into a contest with the House of Representatives lasting two or three weeks upon this bill with relation to the legislative provisions in it, I submit to them that it is wiser and more expeditious in the treatment of these questions to debate them here in open Senate, and to express our opinions by yeas and nays votes as to whether or not we disagree to these provisions. Then we can meet the House of Representatives upon each and every one of these provisions with the opinion of the Senate, and not with a mere perfunctory striking out of all legislation, whether it is good, bad, or indifferent.

I repeat, Mr. President, that these legislative provisions are in the bill; they cannot be got out of the bill except by the agreement of the House of Representatives; and if we want to expeditiously get rid of this naval bill and have it become a law, in my judgment it is wiser and better for us to grapple with these questions of legislation and if they do not meet with our approval let us vote them down. I care very little what is done with this bill one way or the other. So far as recommitting it to the Committee on Appropriations is concerned, I will promise Senators that if it is recommitted we will regard this as an instruction to us which shall apply not only to this bill but to every bill committed to the Committee on Appropriations. There is now before us the sundry civil bill, which has on it some legislative provisions that have come from the House, some of them important, some very important in reference to the question of economy. As a matter of course, if it is unwise for us to take up matters of legislation in the Committee on Appropriations, we shall obey the will of the Senate and strike them all out.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Is that a threat?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir; that is no threat, and is not intended as a threat. I am only speaking of the difficulties there are in this question, because these legislative provisions came from the House of Representatives. If they originated in the Senate, I think Senators would have a right to say that we were usurping power that did not belong to us.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Iowa a question? There are thirteen appropriation bills, I think, or thereabouts. Of those the Senate has passed already eleven, each one of them containing, as was shown, legislation initiated in the House to which the Senate has assented. At every session of the Senate since the Senator has been a member of the Committee on Appropriations it has done the same thing. Now suppose Senators, without disclosing their reasons, choose to instruct the Committee on Appropriations that in this particular case the Senate desires the appropriations without this particular legislation, how does that justify him in threatening the Senate that the committee will strike out all general legislation in other appropriation bills hereafter?

Mr. ALLISON. What right has the Senator from Massachusetts standing in his place to accuse me of threatening the Senate? I do not threaten the Senate. I say nothing of that sort. I say that this legislation upon this bill is not legislation which originated with the Senate of the United States or its committees.

Mr. HOAR. But the Senator has said that he will regard, not the vote on all the other bills which the Senate has adopted, but the failure to permit the particular legislation which he approves to remain on this bill, as an instruction to strike out all legislative matter involved in other bills.

Mr. ALLISON. No.

Mr. HOAR. The sundry civil bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not put it in that aspect.

Mr. HOAR. Then I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. ALLISON. I certainly said nothing which would bear the construction which the Senator puts on my language.

Mr. HOAR. I think that if the Senator asks the Reporter to read what he said he will find that it was exactly put in that form.

Mr. ALLISON. It is not of sufficient importance to take up the time of the Senate to read the notes of what I said.

Mr. HOAR. Whatever his language was, as shown by the notes, I will admit, and will withdraw the word "threat" certainly if it is not justified by what the Senator said.

Mr. ALLISON. What I meant to say was this: here is a proposition to recommit this bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to strike out all legislation. There is not the slightest pretense in that resolution that wise legislation ought to be retained here. It is an instruction to the Committee on Appropriations to go through with this bill and to take everything which relates to legislation and strike it out.

Now, what are we to infer from that? We are to infer that the Committee on Appropriations hereafter are not to consider the wisdom or unwisdom of legislative provisions contained in appropriation bills from the House of Representatives, but whenever they come across a provision of legislation they are to strike it out. Why? Because that is the sense of the Senate. Does the Senator from Massachusetts disagree with me in that? Is there any pretense here that this motion is based upon the idea that this is vicious legislation or unwise legislation?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. It does not so appear in the resolution.

Mr. LOGAN. Allow me to suggest that if the proposition is that the Appropriations Committee shall not report legislation because it is an Appropriations Committee and it ought to come from another committee on this bill, does not the same rule apply to every other bill? If that be true and the Senator from Massachusetts insists that this shall go back and that it shall not apply to any other bill, then it is a mere pretense so far as this proposition is concerned, and the rule will apply only as the Senator wants it to be applied.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, Mr. President—

Mr. HOAR. Allow me—

Mr. ALLISON. I will allow the Senator if he does not prolong his remarks.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Iowa asked me a question and the Senator from Illinois rose and added to the question.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I yield.

Mr. HOAR. I will state my own opinion about this matter. I am not prepared to say that the legislation in this bill is all vicious legislation. I do not put my action upon that ground, though I expect to vote for this resolution. I was very much impressed with the argument made by the Senator from Illinois in favor of a portion of the legislation in this bill; but I do think that it is of so important and grave a character, and some of it so objectionable, that having examined it all I think it is better to strike it out of this appropriation bill that comes in here at the close of the session, when it cannot have the necessary and proper consideration which it should have, and let it be brought forward as a separate measure.

Take the matter of the sale of the navy-yards, as to which power is given to the Secretary of the Navy. I feel interested as a representative of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in that matter. There are some naval officers of great distinction who believe that the Charlestown navy-yard is of vital importance to the defense in war of the city of Boston and of the city of New York as well, for a reason which I will not detain the Senate to state. I understand that naval officers of high rank entertain that opinion. There are other authorities equally as high who think it is merely an invitation to an attack, of no value at all where it is for defensive purposes. I do not feel prepared to deal with that question now, and I do not want the power to close the navy-yards put into the hands of any single Department officer, especially a Department officer who has not been six months in his seat, though a gentleman of great ability and capacity, and as capable as anybody I know of to deal with such a question. I do not want that power to be vested in him. I want it stricken out.

Mr. ALLISON. But it is in the bill which came from the House.

Mr. HOAR. I want to strike it out.

Mr. ALLISON. Why does not the Senator move to strike it out? It is perfectly in order to move to strike it out. Any Senator can do that; and I have no doubt the Senator with his persuasive manner in argument can persuade the Senate that it ought to be stricken out; but revenons à nos moutons, I want to call him back to the point I made. He says, I believe, that he has not examined this bill.

Mr. HOAR. I said I had examined it carefully.

Mr. ALLISON. He says there are a great many good provisions in it, and there are some vicious provisions that he does not like. Now he plants himself upon the very opinion I stated, namely, that he wants to strike out every line of legislation in this bill, no matter how beneficial, no matter how good it is. If the Senate in a deliberate way, without saying whether we shall strike out vicious legislation only, says that thing, what am I to infer? Am I not to infer, is not the committee to infer that the Senate objects to legislation on appropriation bills?

I have heard the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] four or five times while appropriation bills have been under consideration, giving in his mild way and in his vigorous way a lesson to the Committee on Appropriations about legislation, and he told us that it did not use to be so. I endeavored then to explain the difficulty that this legislation came here from the House of Representatives and that we were not responsible for it, that we were confronted with it in the committee, and that we had to deal with it as best we could, because in the end these questions must be considered by a committee of conference. If Senators want to prolong this struggle with the House of Representatives, so be it.

I have no pride about this legislation. I should have been very happy if the Committee on Naval Affairs had taken jurisdiction of these reorganization questions on the 6th day of July when this bill appeared here and presented to us amendment after amendment to these measures, so that we could have had the aid of that able and industrious committee with regard to these subjects; but they seem to have taken a different course; they seem to think the wise way is to wait until the bill comes before the Senate for consideration, and then to undertake to recommit it against the whole Committee on Appropriations and hold them up to derision and scorn in this Chamber. If they prefer that sort of labor, if they prefer to spend their time in making these philippics rather than to spend their time in looking over these provisions of the naval bill, so be it; I am content; I have no fault to find. But as for myself—

Mr. ROLLINS. I want to enter my protest against this sort of discussion. The Committee on Naval Affairs certainly considered this bill and proposed various amendments to it, no one of which has received the consideration of the Committee on Appropriations favorably, no one of which has received their commendation. We have considered this bill, we have given it diligent consideration, but when we made our suggestions to the Committee on Appropriations they were scorned.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his protest and for his statement. The Committee on Naval Affairs have done all the Senator from Delaware wants done, they have taken up this bill and have investigated it with diligence and with care, and I am glad to hear it; so that when we come to the provisions and get into the questions involved in the bill, the Naval Committee will be able to give us the advantage of its research in reference to these questions, and we are going to get on faster than I supposed, because I had presumed from the methods adopted by the Naval Committee that they had been sleeping these two weeks, but it seems instead of that they were all the time vigilant and active on these very questions, and they are prepared to antagonize the Committee on Appropriations and to antagonize the House provisions with intelligence and with the ability which they all possess; and therefore I think on that ground there is no necessity of recommitting the bill to the Committee on Appropriations, but we should go on, and if these provisions are unwise in the judgment of the Senate, let us vote them out. If they are considered wise, although they are legislation coming from the House of Representatives, let us with due courtesy to that body adopt these provisions, and so hasten the passage of the bill.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I rise simply to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania who offers this resolution a question or two that may determine my vote somewhat. The naval appropriation bill has to pass some way or other before this Congress can adjourn if it desires that branch of the public service to be conducted properly. In that we all agree. A bill has come from the House of Representatives which they think is the proper bill. It has been submitted to the Committee on Appropriations and reported back by that committee. Now we are met with this proposition:

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania—

The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs—

I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the naval appropriation bill be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to strike out all matter relating to the reorganization of the Navy, and provide appropriations for the naval establishment as it now exists.

What I want to know is, suppose we do that, and bring the bill back to the Senate with all the House provisions stricken out, is there anything to prevent any member of the Senate when we do bring it back to the Senate from moving to disagree to each and every proposition which the Senate Committee on Appropriations makes striking out the provisions, and to agree to what the House has done? A majority of the Senate may agree to that motion. If it does, what have we gained by sending the bill back to the Committee on Appropriations and striking out provisions without knowledge? Why do you not accomplish precisely the same thing by taking up the bill and making the motion in the Senate that somebody else will make after the committee on your order has stricken out the legislation? I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if we are expediting anything by that?

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I do not know that I understand the Senator's question.

Mr. BECK. You order us to strike out the legislation.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. That is, the Senate does.

Mr. BECK. Now suppose we strike it out; will not the question be still as open when we strike it out and report the bill back for any Senator to move to disagree with our amendments and to agree to the House provisions as it would be now if we take the bill up without a recommittal?

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I suppose it is perfectly legitimate for any member of the Senate to favor any of the propositions in the bill, and for the Senate to act upon them all. They can either vote them on or vote them off, as the Senate shall see fit.

Mr. BECK. Therefore, does the Senator see any advantage in referring back the bill to the Committee on Appropriations when precisely the same question will arise whether the majority of the Senate will agree with the House to keep in the legislative provisions or will agree to strike them out? If there is no advantage in recommitting the bill, why not make the question directly before the Senate now on the bill that is laid before us?

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. The object of the resolution is to get an expression of the Senate as to the power of the Committee on Appropriations to legislate on naval affairs.

Mr. BECK. Now I understand that. That is one of the points I desired to draw out. The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate have not legislated in this bill. They have sought somewhat to modify and soften some of the legislation that comes from the House. All the legislation that is in the bill comes from the House of Representatives. It is too well established to be argued here that we can make no point of order against the House. We can refuse to agree with them, but we cannot strike out their provisions on a point of order, and we cannot get clear of meeting the question, and our striking the provisions out in advance by order of the Senate does not facilitate us one particle nor save a single minute of discussion, but brings it all up again.

Mr. BUTLER. It seems to me the vote by which this resolution will be passed or rejected indicates so clearly the sense of the Senate upon it that although any Senator would have a right to make a motion afterward, he would hardly do it. It seems to me that the resolution saves time. The vote on this resolution will indicate the determination of the Senate.

Mr. BECK. Then let me ask the Senator from South Carolina a question. When we strike out the legislation in the bill and it goes to the House, and they adhere to it—

Mr. BUTLER. It came from the House.

Mr. BECK. But we strike it out and they insist and ask for a committee of conference. Do you propose to enter into a conference with them?

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, yes; we can confer.

Mr. BECK. To go into a conference with them and turn over the whole power to three men from each body upon questions that the Senate never considered, but rejected in block. Is the Senate then to tell three of its members to go and battle with the House without information as to the views of the Senate in detail, instead of meeting the questions fairly and fully in debate in the Senate, striking out some clauses, agreeing to others, rejecting what is bad, adopting what is good, and letting our conferees when they meet the House conferees know what is to be done. The bill has to pass, and we cannot expect that the House is going to obey our order when it is shown that we have never considered the subject in detail.

Mr. BUTLER. It seems to me the committee of conference on the part of the Senate will be instructed by the vote of the Senate that we object to all that portion of the bill which relates to legislation.

Mr. BECK. Then the conferees on the part of the House would say very properly that they were instructed by the deliberate vote of the House to maintain it, and that the Senate conferees had no intelligent vote from the Senate upon any one of these propositions, but a general order that the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate would not even look at the questions, and they would send us back and say, "Consider them, and when your House disagrees on consideration, then we will consult with you, and until then we will not."

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator is anticipating what the House conferees are going to do. I do not know what they may do, but it seems to me the vote of the Senate on this resolution, if favorable, would be quite instruction enough to the conferees on the part of the Senate as to what the Senate think about this legislation.

Mr. BECK. The Senate conferees can tell certainly far more intelligently about it after the Senate have taken up the bill item by item and rejected what they think is bad than if they merely reject it in block, when we have to go before the conferees of a body that has deliberated, after long and intelligent discussion, placed these provisions in the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. Allow me to make a suggestion right here.

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will examine the amendments reported from the Naval Committee—

Mr. BECK. I have them all before me.

Mr. LOGAN. If he will examine the bills reported by the Naval Committee, who are making so much noise about this matter, he will find some of the very provisions in those bills in the bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations. Do they want those rejected?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. What does that prove? Does it not prove that that committee did its duty?

Mr. BECK. I have an amendment to the bill proposed by the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. McPherson.] I have sent you that in order to see what we are doing. The McPherson bill contains all sorts of provisions about the young men at Annapolis. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Rollins] offers an amendment in which I find this, that we have substantially retained in the House bill—

SEC. 2. That there shall be retained each year from the cadet-engineer graduates, at the conclusion of their course of instruction at the Naval Academy, only so many as shall equal the number of vacancies which may have occurred in the grade of assistant engineer during the preceding year; this provision to take effect on and after the 30th day of June, 1886.

SEC. 3. That the cadets to be so retained in the Navy and Marine Corps shall be taken in the order of merit, as determined by the academic board of the Naval Academy.

Again another provision, one of the most odious of the new legislation that is complained of is in section 7 of the Rollins amendment:

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a commission, composed of officers of the Navy not below the grade of lieutenant-commander, who shall, without delay, report to Congress which (if any) of the navy-yards or stations on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts it will be for the interest of the Government to abolish as navy-yards or stations, and to further report a general plan, and the estimated cost thereof, for the improvement of the navy-yards or stations it shall recommend to retain and permanently improve to meet the present and future needs of the Government in the construction and repair of naval vessels.

I find also that Mr. HARRIS, chairman, I believe, of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives, certainly a member of it, reported from that committee a provision for the purchase of six cruising vessels of war, giving the description of how they shall be built, by whom, of what material, and also a provision for a naval board of advice, involving many of the provisions of the House bill.

All these matters have been considered carefully by the committees. They are all in a shape to be amended and changed. There are provisions in this bill as reported by the Committee on Appropriations that I opposed in committee and will oppose here. There are some that I think are good, which I desire to vote for; but I want a chance to vote for them or against them on the floor of the Senate. There are several provisions that I protested against earnestly and will continue to protest against. Some of the proposed legislation I think is bad, and I am sorry the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate agreed to some of it, but I want to meet it fairly and intelligently after hearing the Senators from New Hampshire and Florida and the members of the Naval Committee in regard to it and considering what we ought to do. In other words, in order to get through with this bill in any reasonable time, we must take it up in the ordinary way and have discussion about it.

I do not think any Senator here has ever known of a proposition to take a bill out of the Senate and give a peremptory order of this kind. I have heard of bossism before, but I never have seen just quite such an instance of bossism as there is in this order.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Bossism over whom?

Mr. BECK. Bossism over the Senate, bossism over the legislation of the House, bossism over a fair consideration of a bill properly presented.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. A majority of this body has a right to control its legislation.

Mr. BECK. It has indeed.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky now does he really think, with his large experience in this body and in the other House, that the Senate has time at this late day of the session to discuss intelligently, fully, and completely the questions involved in this bill? I ask him as a legislator of industry does he not know that we have not time in the period before adjournment to consider intelligently all the questions presented by this bill?

Mr. BECK. I will answer the Senator frankly that the shortest way to have an intelligent discussion on this bill or any discussion at all is to take it up now and consider it. We lost all day yesterday by the resolution of reference, we are losing to-day, and when we have made it the order of the Senate every question that will enable us to understand it intelligently will arise again before us on the motion of any member of the Senate and will have to be discussed; and our conferees—for they are important factors in this matter—will have the benefit of the discussion of the Senate in each item of the bill when they come to meet the House conferees and show them that their legislation is bad. For instance, there is a provision here abolishing the grade of commodore and giving the Secretary of the Navy the right to appoint by selection, that I should like to be heard upon before the conferees of the Senate agree to it.

I opposed that provision in committee for reasons satisfactory to my mind. I want the conferees on the part of the Senate when they meet the conferees on the part of the House to have the reasons that I for one have for declining to give the Secretary of the Navy the right to appoint by selection over the heads of men in his Department. I want to be heard before the Senate on that proposition. I do not want to strike it out in general and then have our conferees consider it without any reason given by us why we have stricken it out, and meet the House conferees and give up our position. I do not want that done. I do not want to make our conferees our bosses. What I call bossism is anything that shuts down, closes out, and prevents a full exposition of the whole thing, as the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania seems to do.

Mr. BUTLER. I think there is very decided evidence that there was a purpose in bringing in this bill with this important legislation so late in the session to cut off intelligent discussion.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator answer me what power the Senate Committee on Appropriations has over legislation sent to it from the House of Representatives?

Mr. BUTLER. I am not charging the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate with any dereliction of duty. I made a general statement without reflecting on anybody, that it is a bill of too much consequence, too much importance to this country to be discussed in the brief time remaining of this session.

Mr. BECK. But it is a bill that has passed, and the Senate cannot force the House to recede from its action without giving intelligent reasons.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment? Suppose we go into the committee-room and strike out all this legislation, cannot any Senator on this floor insist upon a vote on it here and have it?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. Then what is gained?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that after the judgment of the Senate on this matter, while a Senator might have that right, I do not think any one would have the temerity at this late hour of the session to open a discussion.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course I defer to that wise suggestion.

Mr. BECK. That suggestion of my colleague seems to me very far-fetched. If we decline to discuss it here we have to meet the House conferees upon it, and if it is temerity to state the reasons we have for striking out any provision of theirs, our conferees—whoever they are—sent to meet those gentlemen on the part of the House will have to meet them either ignorantly or intelligently, and we had better give them intelligent reasons for adhering to our position on the bill than to send the bill back without any intelligent discussion or explanation, and with the hands of our conferees tied, to say, "We know nothing about the reasons of the Senate, except that they said that they had not time; the weather was too hot; they struck it out for want of time." The House conferees will answer, "Go and take time, for this bill has to pass; and it has passed the ordeal of the committee's action and the House's action and cannot be stricken out on a point of order." It cannot be stricken out by our committee either, if it is the order of the Senate, without having it just as fully before the Senate as if it had not been stricken out; and every moment we are discussing this resolution is simply wasting time, for when the bill is reported back every question will be up, and Senators will have the temerity to present all these questions and discuss them beyond all doubt; and they ought to do it if they want to deal properly with the bill.

Mr. VANCE. I should like to ask, sir, if the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania to recommit this bill with instructions is not first in order? That being so, it strikes me that the discussion of the merits of the various amendments to the appropriation bill is not now in order, and that we should first address ourselves to the question as to whether these provisions, acknowledged in the main to pertain to the Naval Committee, should be properly handled by the Appropriations Committee. After that question is determined I am willing to meet gentlemen in discussion to the best of my ability on the merits of the amendments as proposed; but at present I think the question before the Senate, and one that pertains to the dignity of the Senate, is the question as to the priority of the rights of the committees in this case. If the Committee on Naval Affairs is a useful and necessary institution in this body, with coequal jurisdiction and privileges with any other committee in this body, then I claim that the Senate should recognize its rights on this occasion, and not permit a subject that is absolutely and confessedly within its jurisdiction to be taken from it by any other committee of this body.

If it can be done it strikes me that there is an end of all orderly proceeding and of the whole constitution of the Senate. There is no committee in the Senate but what may be treated in a similar manner at the will of the Senate itself and be deprived of all jurisdiction concerning matters of legislation.

The excuse by the Appropriations Committee that they did not originate this outrage upon the rights of the Naval Committee, but that it came from the House of Representatives, is simply the excuse that they were not guilty of larceny of the fruit; they only received it from somebody who was guilty of the larceny. But it seems to me that it is the duty of the Committee on Appropriations and all others to maintain the orderly proceeding of this body. When a bill comes from the House with an amendment that outrages one of our institutions, another institution which happens to have control of it should assert the dignity of the Senate and the right of the other committee that is equal in all things to their own; but, instead of that, they justify the action of the House and they go on to reflect seriously upon the Committee on Naval Affairs.

It has been charged here by the Senator from Illinois that the Committee on Naval Affairs for twenty years has neglected its duty in regard to the reorganization of the Navy, and that is the excuse for holding on to amendments that have come from the House in derogation of the rights of the Naval Committee. It may be that the Naval Committee has been derelict, but it certainly has not undertaken to usurp the rights of any other committee. It has been modest, it has been just in the assertion of its own rights and in the performance of its duties, however poorly they may have been performed.

I think the first business of the Senate is to vote on the proposition of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON,] and if that is determined in the affirmative then action can be taken according to the orderly course of the Senate, and if that is determined in the negative then we shall have something to say on the merits of the amendments proposed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall detain the Senate but a few moments. So far as this appears to be a controversy between the Appropriations Committee and the Naval Committee, as a matter of course I feel very impartial between them, respecting both committees as being well selected and able to perform the duties imposed upon them.

When the naval appropriation bill was first laid upon our tables and I suggested in rather an informal way that if no one else did it I should myself move to strip the bill of its legislative provisions, I supposed that I should have to support me the hearty co-operation of the Appropriations Committee. It has always been the custom, and it seemed to me that the Appropriations Committee would endeavor to enforce the rules of the Senate to prevent legislative provisions on appropriation bills. The rules of the Senate expressly forbid them in so many words, without exception or qualification. Let me read the rule of the Senate, which the Committee on Appropriations is bound to support and enforce as much as any other committee:

29. No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

That is a rule of the Senate which the Committee on Appropriations ought to support. The House rules have only been changed recently and for a purpose, and not changed wisely. The old rule of the House was exactly like the rule of the Senate forbidding general legislation on appropriation bills; but it has been qualified by allowing amendments of a general character to be proposed when they decrease appropriations and reduce expenses. That change, I think, was made two or three Congresses ago.

But I wish to take a more practical view even of this bill than I have stated. Here is a bill forty pages long passed at the heel of the session, just about the time the House passed a resolution of adjournment. It is sent to us. I looked through it with a view to ascertain the proportion of it that related to appropriations and the proportion that related to legislation, and I will say that three-fourths of this bill either contains matter of a mere recitative character or is general legislation affecting the whole organization of the Navy from beginning to end. Indeed, I have compared the bill with the provisions of the general laws in the Revised Statutes as to the organization of the Navy, and I find in almost every line there is a change. For instance, the number of officers is changed somewhat, not very radically, but still throughout there is a change. If Senators will take this bill and strike out what is legislative and leave in what is an appropriation they will find that about three-fourths of the bill is gone by this operation.

The question with the Senate is not whether the Committee on Appropriations did right or not, because no one finds fault with them. The work that I complain of is not the work of the Committee on Appropriations. They have simply undertaken to modify, as they had a right to do, legislative provisions they found in the bill; nor would it be exactly right for the Committee on Appropriations to take the initiative in saying to the House, "We are not prepared now to consider the question of the reorganization of the Navy." I do not complain of their action at all. I do not see that there should be any feeling on the part of the Committee on Appropriations. It is for the Senate to say whether at this period of the session, at this hour of the session, when the House has only a little more than a quorum, it is prepared to enter into a debate upon and a consideration in detail of the whole organization of the Navy on this bill.

The first idea that struck me on this bill was that it was not the right time for this legislation; that there were grave questions affecting the personal interests of every officer of the Navy, of every branch of the service, and large powers conferred upon the Secretary of the Navy by this bill, and that we were not in a temper or condition to pass upon it, nor ought we to be asked to do so, especially when to do so would be to violate our rules and the rules of the House until recently when they were changed only for a particular purpose.

I say, therefore, that this motion is no reflection upon the Committee on Appropriations, but it is a wise motion, and proper in the ordinary course of business.

There was one argument made by the Senator from Kentucky, and also by the Senator from Iowa, that if we should strike out all these legislative provisions by a general vote of the Senate without detail or examination and send the bill back to the House simply as an appropriation to carry into execution existing laws, the House might take exception to that action of ours. That is not possible. No parliamentary law is clearer than that if the bill goes to a committee of conference, if either House objects not to the appropriations made in the bill, but objects to the legislation contained in the bill, it must be abandoned. It must go out if either House objects. Otherwise the House of Representatives might put on an appropriation bill and compel us to adopt the most outrageous changes of existing law in all branches of the Government, or, forsooth, they would not agree to the ordinary appropriations for the support of the Government. If this bill is stripped of everything except the appropriations for the orderly conduct of the affairs of the Navy, it will not take an hour to pass it, there will hardly be an amendment offered.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. I fail to understand what the Senators who want this bill recommitment are driving at. Do they mean that all legislation on this bill except the necessary appropriations to carry on the Navy shall be stricken out? Is that the meaning of the proposition?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is what I mean. I do not know what others mean.

Mr. LOGAN. You mean not only to strike off the legislation for the reorganization of the Navy but to strike out all legislation in reference to change of navy-yards, all legislation in reference to building and equipping ships, all legislation in reference to buying the armament for them, everything of that kind, for it is all legislation. So then there will be nothing left except merely the appropriations to carry on the Navy, which is the pay of the officers of the Navy. I suppose that is what you mean.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator cannot misunderstand my meaning. I mean that all provisions of the bill which change existing law are general legislation.

Mr. LOGAN. That means what I have said.

Mr. SHERMAN. That does not mean everything.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir; it means everything, as I understand. The Senator will find that in the bill we provide for the launching and equipping of certain vessels. That is a change of existing law.

Mr. SHERMAN. When the Senator gets through I will go on; I think he is mistaken about it.

Mr. LOGAN. We make some changes in reference to navy-yards. That is a change of existing law. We make some change in reference to civil employés. That is a change of existing law. So according to the theory of the Senator no change can be made in it, no matter whether you have a navy-yard full of men that you have no use for, because that is a change of existing law. All of that must be stricken out, and merely the appropriations made for the navy-yards and the pay of officers of the Navy to carry on the service.

Mr. SHERMAN. My friend from Illinois is astute enough to distinguish between that which changes existing law and that which provides for new ships and the mode of building them. The Revised Statutes say there shall be one Admiral, so many rear-admirals, so many commodores, &c., and this changes, not very materially but in some respects, that; it also changes many provisions of the Revised Statutes. But suppose the Senate should think it wise now to build three new ships and to appropriate $5,000,000 for that purpose, it might properly say without any new legislation that they should be built of a certain class, of a certain grade, not to exceed a certain amount, and every provision necessary or properly relating to the new ships would not be legislation contrary to existing law.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think the Secretary of the Navy can build new ships without new law?

Mr. SHERMAN. You can authorize the Secretary of the Navy to build three ships and appropriate money for that purpose, and regulate the mode, manner, and kind of those ships, without changing the existing law.

Mr. HALE. But is not that new legislation? It changes the existing law in this way: as the law stands now the Secretary has no right to build them; in order to build them he has to have new legislation—that is, additional legislation—and that changes existing legislation. Nothing can be plainer than that.

Mr. SHERMAN. On the contrary, a new item of appropriation is not necessarily new legislation; otherwise every appropriation bill is merely a legislative bill. But that is not the rule. The meaning of the rule is that legislation changing existing laws shall not be introduced on the appropriation bills.

Let me give the Senator a striking case, and I will read to him words of wisdom more than these of mine, because they are the words of those that he knows have passed away from us. This same contest did occur in this very form or in substance in this very form in 1855, when the House of Representatives sent to the Senate the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, then containing the great mass of appropriations for the support of the civil service of the Government, and attached to that a provision largely changing the rates of duties on imported goods. At that time the committees of the two Houses that had charge of appropriations also had charge of tax and revenue questions; and therefore this bill came from a committee that had charge of the subject-matter; but when it came to the Senate, the Senate at once felt that there was a threatened revolution of the form of doing business and made the question pretty much as it has been made here.

Now let me read a little that was said in regard to that, and it seems that in the Senate there was a concurrence of opinion from all sides without reference to politics, although it was a time, as the Senator knows, in March, 1855, when there was intense partisan feeling. The proposition came up, and Mr. Clayton, of Delaware, spoke as follows:

Now, sir, what must be the consequence hereafter of sustaining such a proposition as the House have put into this bill? Whenever a majority in one branch of Congress shall desire any great object which they cannot attain by a separate bill, they will move to put it on the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, and thus compel the other branch of Congress to accept the whole or none; to lose all the appropriations to support the Government for the current year, or take a proposition utterly unpalatable to them. Why, sir, let me tell the honorable Senator from Virginia, that if this precedent is adopted, the day may come when a majority in one branch of Congress may attach to a general appropriation bill a proposition to repeal the fugitive slave law or some other law which is held by himself and his friends, and by me, too, as essential to sustain the Union of these States. It is a most dangerous precedent; it is an example that has never been set to us before, and I hope will never be attempted again.

Mr. Bayard, the father of the present Senator from Delaware, said in striking language, also:

Mr. President, I can hardly express in language the objections which I entertain to the condition of things at which we are now arriving, resulting from the abandonment of all rules necessary for the preservation of order and the rights of the minority in reference to the legislation of the country. Here we find tacked to an appropriation bill a general revision of the entire impost system of the country. For this we have a substitute, offered by the honorable Senator from North Carolina, which does not go quite so far. Both, in my view, without entering into their merits, are leading us to the culminating point of coercive legislation.

My objection to them both is founded altogether on that principle. We have at times hitherto, within the last ten years, introduced a system of attaching to the appropriation bills legislation to a small amount, and on subjects either of local interest or which required no great discussion. Those were evils, but the injury which must inevitably follow the adoption of this bill, as it comes to us from the House, without striking out the general legislation in reference to the tariff, is the establishment of a precedent which will put an end to all other legislation in Congress than that which is effected by coercion through the medium of the appropriation bills. I consider the principle involved in that far more momentous than the question whether the tariff, if it is too high, should be modified at this or the next session of Congress, or even the session after that. In relative importance there is no comparison whatever.

Let us see also what Mr. Douglas and Mr. Seward said on the part of those who were probably friendly to the bill by itself. Mr. Seward said:

Let me state the question. The House of Representatives virtually say that if the Senate will agree that certain modifications of the tariff in regard to wool shall be made for the benefit of the manufacturer of that staple, and will also consent to certain modifications of the tariff in regard to iron, for the benefit of consumers of that metal, chiefly railroad companies, then the President and other executive officers of the Government, civil, judicial, and diplomatic, may receive their salaries secured to them by the Constitution and laws, and the Senators and members of Congress may also receive their legal compensation for their services during the year. But if the Senate will not consent to those modifications, then no officer of the Government however high, no servant of the people however low, shall receive any compensation whatever. Well, sir, as this poor world of ours goes, even the laborer in spiritual things claims his "hire;" much more reason is there to suppose that if patriots are denied their pay the public service must stop. If the public service is ended, then the Government itself ceases.

Further on he said:

Sir, there is great wisdom, there is Nestorian wisdom, in the counsel of the honorable Senators from Delaware. It may be that it is only now a question of relieving woolen manufacturers and railroad builders, but another House of Representatives may give us, in the same form, a question of slavery or a question of freedom, and may seek in the same way to coerce our consent to their policy in that respect. Are you prepared for that? When the precedent shall have once been established, what will protect you against the most unbounded license of assumption by the House of Representatives?

Mr. Seward was speaking here in regard to an amendment which he desired to support, but he objected to the mode in which it was being thrust on.

Mr. Douglas also, in the same debate, argued at length. He said:

In the next place, even if the bill were right in itself, if its provisions were correct, I could not consent by my vote to put it on this appropriation bill, for the reason that such a course is revolutionary in its character. You have to override all the rules, all the usages, all the safeguards which time and experience have thrown around your legislative proceedings in order to insert this provision into your civil and diplomatic appropriation bill. If you can put in a provision for the revision of the tariff, thus remodeling the whole financial and commercial policy of the country, what is there which you cannot introduce into such bills? What reason can you give, after you have retained the tariff amendment in this appropriation bill, for complaining of my friend from Missouri [Mr. Geyer] when he brings forward his river and harbor bill, and endeavors to put that also upon this civil and diplomatic appropriation bill? What complaint can you make of my friend from Iowa [Mr. Jones] when he brings forward his darling, cherished, Iowa railroad bills and endeavors to put them in this bill.—Congressional Globe, volume 30, second session Thirty-third Congress, pages 1034, 1044, 1048, 1060.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator whether, if there is anything in this proposition of his, it must not run through exhaustively? It applies to all appropriation bills, does it not?

Mr. SHERMAN. It applies to this case so much stronger than any I have seen that I think this is where an example should be set.

Mr. HALE. I am asking the Senator what is the logical result of his argument. It is that it applies to all appropriation bills, is it not?

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me say I would make it apply to every appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. I so understand it.

Mr. SHERMAN. All this may be merely a preliminary skirmish, for I say the time is coming—and we may as well understand it—when the appropriation bills must be referred to their appropriate committees, the Army appropriation bill to the Military Committee, the Naval appropriation bill to the Naval Committee, the District appropriation bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia, or else we must keep them what they ought to be—appropriation bills. I am willing to make our rule of the Senate absolute, as a court would say.

Mr. HALE. So am I.

Mr. SHERMAN. So that we shall have on these bills no legislative provisions changing existing law.

Mr. HALE. On any appropriation bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. On any appropriation bill. But perhaps the Senate would not go so far. Sometimes, as Senator Bayard then said in the speech I have read, it is a convenient mode to put on a little provision to aid the bill; it is a matter of convenience, and the Senate would do that; but it would not apply to such cases as I have mentioned. Suppose the Government should want to build new ships, and you provide for building new ships and make an appropriation for them, all legislation that relates to the building of those ships, which is necessary to direct the mode and manner and time, is included in the provision.

Mr. HALE. But let me ask the Senator how could the three ships be started without actual new legislation? Is not a great part of the fault which has been found with the Navy Department for years rallied around what was claimed to be an improper extension of authority in building new ships without law? Is it wise or advisable, does the Senator think, for any Secretary of the Navy to start in building a new ship until Congress has authorized it? And the law authorizing a new ship is just as much new legislation and a change of law as a law authorizing and creating a new judge or a new Cabinet minister.

Mr. SHERMAN. That I deny.

Mr. HALE. I do not see the difference.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no law now which says the Navy of the United States shall consist of so many ships of the line, so many frigates, &c. There is no law on the subject; but when it is proposed to build three new ships there is not the slightest objection either to the Naval Committee or to the Committee on Appropriations saying that they shall be built in a certain way; that they shall be built only after advertisement; that they shall be built as frigates, or that they shall be armed or equipped in a certain way. That relates to the intrinsic appropriation; it does not change existing law.

Mr. BUTLER. It is like building a new fort.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is like building a new fort by an item in the Army appropriation bill; there is not the slightest objection. Another thing; it is better as a general rule to leave the plans of those things to the Department, but so far as Congress desires to legislate upon new subjects of appropriation there is no trouble; it is only where you undertake to make a change in existing law.

The Senator from Illinois last night made a very strong speech in favor of the provisions of this bill; but I am not at liberty to discuss them because they are not now pending. When the Naval Committee that this body organized to look after naval affairs come here and tell us that they do not desire to have this reorganization of the Navy acted upon, it seems to me that ought to be the end of the controversy. I went to my friend from Maine and asked him whether or not the recital of the bill as to one Admiral, eighty lieutenant-commanders, and all that was according to the existing law. He said he thought there was some variation; I see there is; but how can anybody tell in reading the bill what is the old law and what is proposed as new law? The House has sent us the bill. It is all printed alike. One would suppose that these recitals were mere recitals of the number of the officers which are not necessary for the purpose of appropriation. It would be better to strike them entirely out, and to say, "for the pay of the Navy according to existing law," so many million dollars. The law itself fixes the number, and there is no need in reciting that unless you desire to change the number. If you do that you enter upon a new field of duty.

It seems to me now that the simplest way to get out of this matter, and I do not see why these gentlemen should have any feeling about it, is to relieve them from responsibility and say, "We are not prepared at this period of the session to go into a reorganization of the Navy." I say to my friend from Maine now that he will find me on questions of legislation standing firmly with him, and although all of us have from time to time no doubt sought to load appropriation bills with legislative amendments, and I probably at some times among others, I believe we could do this country no greater service than to enforce the rule strictly according to the rule itself.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President—

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio a question before he takes his seat.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator from Ohio says he does not feel authorized to discuss the question of the reorganization of the Navy.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not now on this bill.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator has been in Congress for a great many years, and he has been in the Cabinet. I should like to ask the Senator whether the Navy, so far as the officers are concerned, is not numerically as large as it was during the late war.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator were to ask me questions about the organization of the Navy, I should have to go to him or some member of the Committee on Naval Affairs to find out, or look at the law. I could tell him by looking at the Revised Statutes. There are, I understand, about 2,500 officers in the Navy, are there not?

Mr. HALE. Oh, no.

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have given probably a greater number than there really is. I cannot tell how many officers there are in the Navy.

Mr. LOGAN. In the Navy of the United States there are 1,094 line officers and 379 staff officers. I want to see how we stand on these questions. If the Senator has not examined to know whether a reorganization ought to be made, and if other persons have examined, then it is not a question as to whether it is our duty to reorganize, it is a mere question in reference to what committee reported the bill; that is all.

Mr. SHERMAN. No—

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will listen to me one moment I will state that on July 16, 1862, the Navy was organized for the war. What was its organization? Here it is: 9 rear-admirals; 18 commodores; 36 captains; 72 commanders; 144 lieutenant-commanders; 144 lieutenants; 144 masters; and 144 ensigns. This was the organization of our Navy for the war. Since that time there has been added to it an Admiral, a Vice-Admiral, and more commodores, making 25, making the organization still larger, and it stands so to-day. I should like to have the Senator state, for I should like the country to know what his opinion is, whether he believes, with the condition of things to-day, that we require the same number of officers and more than we had for the Navy during the war?

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose one reason is that many of these officers gained distinction during the war (some of them are known to us all) and they are retained probably for that reason.

Mr. LOGAN. They are retained by this bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will say this is not, it seems to me, a proper way to take that question up. It is too important a matter.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well; let that be so; but here is a bill which does not propose to put a solitary man out of the service. It does propose to organize the Navy, and when certain men retire not to fill their places, so as not to keep an establishment as large as we had when we had a million and a half men in the field. The personnel of our Navy to-day is as large as it was then, and yet Senators higgie about the bill that this proposition is on. I should like for Senators to show in what particular this bill is wrong—not that the proposition is on the wrong bill, but in what particular the bill is wrong. That is the way to discuss a proposition of this kind. It is very easy to attack a committee for reporting a bill, but the question is to attack the proposition in the bill and see whether it is right or wrong.

If the technical objection is sustained to this reorganization which was made by Senators in this Chamber, who themselves would not undertake to attack the propositions to reorganize, but made the whole attack on the propriety of its being adopted on this bill, I want the country to understand that when a bill comes from the House, not to reduce the Navy but to put it in a condition where it shall not be filled up when officers are retired, but to reduce it to the proper proportions of a peace establishment for the economy and benefit of the country, the whole attack is made on the Appropriations Committee because it is an appropriation bill and not because the proposition is wrong.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES] has the floor, unless he yields further.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. I merely intended to reply for a moment to the Senator from Ohio to ascertain whether the pique in the Senate among some gentlemen against the Committee on Appropriations had gone so far as to allow him to examine the bill itself, to see whether it was wrong or whether it was a mere pique because the Committee on Appropriations had reported the bill. That was all I desired to understand.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, it has been reiterated here time and again that an assault has been made on the Appropriations Committee by the Naval Committee. I say now that I have no knowledge of the Naval Committee authorizing anybody to make an assault upon the Appropriations Committee. If the resolution so decorously and properly submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON,] who happens to be the chairman of the Naval Committee, prompted by a spirit which is in full conformity with the orderly and regular conduct of the business of this body, be an assault, that is the only one that I know of. The Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. ROLLINS,] exercising the privilege of a member of this body, which I hope he may long continue to enjoy, took occasion to comment upon the principles of the bill, and all at once the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] get up and charge that we are assaulting the Appropriations Committee. Surely they do not mean that.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me right there, without making a long speech, for I do not propose to do that, I will try to demonstrate the proposition in ten words. The Senator from New Hampshire in his speech yesterday did not show in one solitary instance that this bill was wrong so far as its attempt to reorganize the Navy was concerned; and I ask the Senator now in his argument to demonstrate that the bill is wrong—not that the wrong committee had it but that the bill is wrong. If the Senator will demonstrate that, then he will give some information to the Senate on which they can act hereafter.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I have not the fertility of intellect possessed by my friend from Illinois, and I may not find it necessary at this time to go into that question. I do not agree with him that the objection which is made to this bill is a pure technicality, as he would seem to have it, for I can cite his own authority to the contrary. When the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] was reading the opinions of distinguished men who have recorded themselves in opposition to this species of legislation I had hoped that he would come to the opinion of my distinguished friend from Illinois.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator can read it. I admit that I have opposed doing the same thing frequently in the Senate.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The Senator from Illinois did not put it on the ground of a technicality either, and I wish the Senate to understand what position he has so bravely and ably in his place in the Senate maintained on past occasions, pointing in a spirit of prophecy to the future and warning the Senate, as few could warn it, against just such a condition of things as we have to-day. In the debate in the Senate on the 15th of April, 1879, the Senator from Illinois said:

Its import does not consist simply in tacking words which consummate or establish legislation upon a bill which of itself is not legislation in character. In one sense this may have been done, and while it is an objectionable method and should not be tolerated in the future, it does not compass the pernicious effect of the measure before us. What is that? What is that effect, sir? It lies wholly in the spirit of the method, and not so much in the method itself. When it has been done heretofore by the Republicans it was done not to force others to an act which, in the ordinary mode, they could prevent, but as conservative of time alone. If there be an instance on record by which it appears a President signed an appropriation bill containing items of extraneous legislation under protest, it was when the dominant party had a majority sufficiently great to pass it over his veto. Hence it cannot be said that the bill was duly enacted only through compulsion of one of the prescribed parties to it.

But, sir, there is no such state of case with this bill. Our Government is one of co-ordinate powers which have mutual duties, independent responsibilities, and separate checks one upon the other. If one branch of the Government takes away the freedom of action of the others, it usurps the powers, privileges, and functions of the whole. Now, sir, this constitutes coercion of the boldest, rankest kind. The measure being coercive is certainly against the spirit of the Constitution, and being so is revolutionary to the last degree. The logic of this conclusion is so inevitable as to permit no outlet for escape.

He goes on and argues the question with very great ability on principle, not as a technicality, and he tells the Senate that we must stop, because the future may bring about a condition of things which will lead to the abuse of this description of legislation. I have said this much, although for one I attach little consequence to individual consistency in great matters of state, but I thought I would read the opinion of my friend from Illinois to show that he gave this admonition to the country and to the Senate.

I agree fully with what was said a while ago by the Senator from Ohio, that this is obnoxious legislation, and if I were permitted I could show a difference between this proposed legislation and the one that was before us in 1879; but I am not called upon to do that.

I ask if from the debate of yesterday the Appropriations Committee, which seems to have considered this naval question so thoroughly, can be said to have mastered it when we find such extraordinary statements about the condition of the British navy in comparison with our own as are found in the RECORD of to-day? It has been stated in the debate to the disparagement of our public service and with the view of inducing the Senate to comply with the wishes of the Appropriations Committee that we have nearly as many officers in our Navy as the British have in theirs. The number is stated here. The Senator from Illinois said yesterday:

We have the magnificent number of twenty-eight vessels afloat armed and equipped—that is we call them armed and equipped, but some of them are out here on the Potomac where you can all see them. How many officers have we? One thousand and ninety-four!

Mr. LOGAN. Line officers.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The RECORD does not say so.

Mr. LOGAN. I will give the Senator the exact number.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I have it here in the Senator's own language:

How many officers have we? One thousand and ninety-four! We have got then within nearly eight hundred as many officers as the British navy, the British navy floating three hundred and forty-one men-of-war and we floating twenty-eight, and yet we must not touch the Navy!

Mr. LOGAN. Thirty-eight is the number. That is a misprint; or I may have said "twenty-eight." The Senator will find that I was speaking of line officers. He will find that the British navy, as I said yesterday, has 1,854 line officers and 717 staff officers. We have 1,094 line officers and 379 staff officers, making our Navy comprise 1,473, and the British navy 2,571 in all, including line and staff.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. If the Senator will turn back to that great era of reformation when General Harrison was wafted into the Presidency on the cry of reform, and when the spirit of reform pervaded the country very greatly, and if he will look at the state of the Navy then and look at it now and compare the two figures, he will find that no branch of the public service has grown so little as the Navy. In 1842 what did we have? One thousand and eighty-four line or executive officers. In 1882 we have 1,096. Is that a wonderful increase in so long a time as that, after all that has been said about the top-heaviness of the Navy?

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to state that at the time he speaks of, in 1842, we did not have a commodore, rear-admiral, Vice-Admiral, or Admiral in our Navy; the highest rank in the Navy was captain.

Mr. HALE. We had no engineers.

Mr. LOGAN. We had no engineers. That number included the ensigns, and if the Senator will examine the statute he will see that even the sailmakers were included as petty officers, as they are called in the list at that time. That is all stricken out now, and nobody but the commissioned officers are counted. That makes a difference. At that time the highest rank was captain. Now we have on the retired list forty-six rear-admirals. We have twenty-five commodores now on the active list, besides the number who are retired. We have ten admirals, one Vice-Admiral, and an Admiral at the present time. That makes a good deal of difference.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I did not intend to go into the question of rank. That was not a point in the argument. The Senator himself admitted in his argument yesterday that the grade of captain was a high grade, that there were fleet captains who exercised the powers of commodores. While their pay may not have been as large as that of admirals at the present day, nevertheless they were all executive officers on the line of active duty, and there were 1,084 of them in the miserable Navy of 1842.

Mr. LOGAN. We had a better Navy then than we have now.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I agree with the Senator, in comparison with the navies of the world.

Mr. LOGAN. There is no use talking about that; we had a better one.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. We had then forty-five sailing ships and four steamships in commission, forty-nine in all. We have now thirty-four steamships and four sailing-vessels. Of course the character of our Navy has changed, but one of our ships at the present day, as the Senator must know, would make two of our ships in 1842 in every respect. Still we have only the difference between 1,096 and 1,084 in officers now, and this is the great refrain of an overloaded and top-heavy Navy about which there is so much talk.

It is true there has been an increase in the staff much beyond the increase in the line. In 1842 we had 255 staff officers and we have now 734; but the hand of reform dictated by the great wisdom of this committee does not propose to strike in the proper direction. If there is any top-heaviness here it is on the staff and not among the active officers of the line.

Yesterday the Senator from Illinois referred to a ship, the Lancaster, which happened to be stationed on the Pacific coast during the late war, when every available officer was employed on the Atlantic side in active duty to man the ships and vessels that were engaged in actual hostilities. He selected the Lancaster, which was reduced to the lowest possible minimum of officers because she was not needed much on that coast; her service was merely coast-guard and nominal. He held up the number of officers on that ship as a fair criterion of what ought to be on board a vessel regularly employed under ordinary and normal conditions.

Mr. VANCE. If the Senator will allow me, I will also suggest to him that sixteen of the line officers which went to swell the number in the comparison of the Senator from Illinois between the Lancaster in 1864 and in 1882 were cadet-midshipmen and cadet-engineers, under-graduates of the Academy, who were there in 1882 for the purpose of instruction.

Mr. HALE. How many lieutenants?

Mr. VANCE. There were fourteen cadet-midshipmen and two cadet-engineers.

Mr. HALE. How many lieutenants does the Senator find were on the Lancaster in 1864?

Mr. VANCE. I find one lieutenant-commander and one lieutenant in 1864.

Mr. HALE. How many lieutenants in 1882?

Mr. VANCE. Two lieutenant-commanders and seven lieutenants in 1882. There is no mistake about it. I read from figures produced by the Senator from Illinois yesterday, and it is not presumable that he could have made a mistake.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The country very well understands, I think, the reason why the law was changed in 1862 with reference to the ranks and grades in the Navy. The country had embarked in a terrible war, and it was part of the system, and a wise system, to hold out to the officers who were about to engage in it the stimulus of reward by rank for heroism and devotion to their country. That was the reason of it. Numbers of them have had their reward, and I do not complain of it.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me, these ranks were created before there was much chance for reward. They were created early in 1862, not after the war was over.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Not after it was over, but in 1862.

Mr. LOGAN. On the 16th day of July, 1862, the appointment was made to those ranks.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I understand that; but the hope of promotion for gallantry was held out; and after the war was over, acting in accordance with the spirit of our legislation on that subject, time and again measures were passed through both bodies of Congress creating boards of admirals to go through the Navy to ascertain the men who had most distinguished themselves for gallantry in the Navy, in order to advance them from one grade to another in consideration of their services.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator will recollect that when the grade of rear-admiral was created it was made necessary that an officer should have received the thanks of Congress in order to be eligible to it.

Mr. LOGAN. The grade of rear-admiral was created in 1862.

Mr. ANTHONY. Very well.

Mr. LOGAN. They were appointed right then.

Mr. ANTHONY. They were not appointed except from officers who had received the thanks of Congress by name.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. There is nothing which stimulates, as we know, the exertions of military or naval heroes more than the hope of increased rank, not even the question of pay; for whatever may be said to the contrary, I believe that the matter of rank in the Navy, independent of pay, has had a greater influence upon the actions and the ambitions of its officers than anything else.

Look now at the list of commodores, and what do you propose to do? Some of your heroes have been rewarded by being admitted into this advanced grade. Others are still behind, advanced in years, still vigorous, and covered with honor, who have had held out to them from 1862 to the present that the day would come when they would be permitted to wear a commodore's star. They have paid themselves in blood for their country, they have imperiled their lives in defense of its flag, and with that law before them telling them all the while that in a certain contingency they would receive increased rank, what do you propose to do now? Those very men you stop in the line of promotion.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. How long?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It does not matter how long.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is the question, how long?

Mr. BUTLER. It may be seven years; it may be until they die.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. You say there shall be no more commodores.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That does not prevent promotion.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I know, but how do you propose that that promotion shall take place?

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me, inasmuch as he is now speaking of promotion, and the Senator from South Carolina remarks that it will give them a chance to die, I will state that in the Army twice since the war promotion has been stopped. In all the corps promotion was stopped until the corps were reduced down to a sufficient minimum, and then promotion was allowed. That is the correct way of doing it, and it is always done in that way.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Was it done on an appropriation bill?

Mr. LOGAN. On an appropriation bill; that is exactly where it was done. Not only that, if the Senator will allow me, I can show him that time and again this very same proposition has been adopted in regard to the Navy, and the only time the Navy has ever been reduced was in that way.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. When was it done?

Mr. LOGAN. I will show the Senator.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Since this increased grade?

Mr. LOGAN. No; it was never reduced since the increased grade.

Mr. BUTLER. The object of that was very clearly to put the Army on a peace footing. The Navy has been on a peace footing for the last ten years.

Mr. PLUMB. The Navy never was on anything else than a peace footing.

Mr. LOGAN. When was it reduced?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know when.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg your pardon; it never has been reduced, but has been increased. Show me where it was reduced. Here is the statute of 1862, and you have more officers of high grade to-day than you had then made by law. It has been done by special act since. There has been no such thing adopted since the increased grade.

I want to call the attention of the Senator from Florida to another thing, as he has been talking about the state of the Navy in 1842, so that in his argument he can comment on it. In 1842 there was no retired list; the officers of the Navy were not permitted to be retired. There are now on the retired list of the Navy forty-six rear-admirals, fourteen captains and commodores, and two hundred and thirty officers of lower grade, making two hundred and ninety officers now on the retired list, when in 1842 no such thing was permitted, and never was until the retired list was made during the war.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That may be all true.

Mr. LOGAN. It is true. It not only may be true, but it is a fact.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Still I am not here to quarrel with the retired list, because we find that that power which to-day yields naval supremacy in the world has a retired list much more objectionable in many of its features than ours; for when it comes to the organization of armies and navies, whatever may be the difference in the countries with respect to their modes of civil government, the same rules and reasons must control and operate to a great extent in the organization and maintenance of armies and navies in a republic as in a monarchy.

As to selection instead of promotion by seniority in the English service, the right is exercised only in the lower grades; that is, below the rank of captain.

Section 231, page 55, Queen's Regulations and Admiralty Instructions, and the preceding sections to 226, provide that promotions in these higher grades shall be regulated by seniority, and, although the right to select is reserved as to captains, is a right never or very rarely exercised as against the established rule.

The English navy is composed of three departments or bodies: first, the active list; second, the retired list; third, the naval reserve. The active list consists of 1,854 officers of the line, and 1,847 officers of the staff.

The retired list, which it will be seen constitutes a very important part of the British navy, is composed of 1,639 officers of the line and 1,012 officers of the staff. These officers bear rank as follows:

|----------------------------|-------|
| Admirals | 114 |
| Vice-admirals | 80 |
| Rear-admirals | 67 |
| Captains | 413 |
| Commanders | 483 |
| Lieutenants | 227 |
| Sub-lieutenants | 64 |
| Staff-commanders | 95 |
| Navigating-lieutenants | 87 |
| Navigating sub-lieutenants | 9 |
| Total | 1,639 |

Mr. HAWLEY. And England has had no great war lately, either. Mr. JONES, of Florida. None. The number of retired officers of the lower ranks is accounted for by the peculiar system of the English retiring law, which is manifestly designed to produce two results, namely—first, to keep the active list of the navy composed of young men in the vigor of life; and, secondly, to have a retired list also composed of men who have seen sufficient service to become accomplished officers, and who are still able to perform any duties that may be required in the navy, and who although upon a retired list may be called to duty at any time.

These retiring laws, besides leaving it discretionary with officers under certain circumstances to go upon the retired list, make retirement compulsory as follows:

|--------------------------|----|
| Admiral of the fleet at | 70 |
| Admiral and vice-admiral | 65 |
| Rear-admiral | 60 |
| Captain | 55 |
| Commander | 50 |
| Lieutenant | 45 |

It will be seen by this abstract, and by the table given above, that no man in the English service can remain a lieutenant after he is forty-five years of age, nor a commander after he is fifty, nor a captain after he is fifty-five.

English statesmen justly appreciate that the duties belonging to these ranks can best be performed by men within the ages designated.

By the bill now before the Senate we would in a few years have a list of lieutenants none of whom would be under the age, or much under the age at which by the English law a lieutenant is forbidden to continue in that rank, and by a fair calculation of probabilities the average age of the masters, the rank immediately below lieutenant, would be forty-two years before promotion to lieutenant.

The royal naval reserve, of which the Prince of Wales is the honorary captain under appointment of March, 1877, is composed of four hundred and ninety-seven officers, as follows:

|--------------------------|-----|
| Lieutenants | 79 |
| Sub-lieutenants | 77 |
| Honorary lieutenants | 69 |
| Honorary sub-lieutenants | 126 |
| Midshipmen | 126 |
| | 497 |

This royal reserve is also liable to be placed on active duty, and the entire list of midshipmen is in active service now on the training-ships of Great Britain, or was in 1881. (See page 282 English Navy List, October, 1881.)

As something may be said in reference to the comparative pay given by England and the United States to the officers in the lower grades, it may be well to suggest a reply.

The pay given by the United States to officers in the lower grades of the Army and the Navy is greater than that given by Great Britain to officers of corresponding grades in both branches of the public service.

The reason is that England desires to keep the places of authority in both the army and the navy for her aristocracy and her gentry, and no young man of the people can under ordinary circumstances get a commission in either.

To prevent this class from getting in she makes the pay so small that nobody can live on it, and therefore no youth or young man can take a commission as an officer in either the army or navy who has not an independent income or wealthy friends willing to support him. And it is understood that if he has no such income, but is fortunate enough to have such friends, they are expected or required to give bond or security that the youth will be adequately provided.

It is useless to suggest how widely different is the policy of our country. It may be further suggested that in England when a man gets up to a fleet officer his pay, table money, command money, servants' commutation, and other perquisites amount to about $20,000 and over.

It is an absurd and cruel folly to undertake at the end of the session and in an appropriation bill to reorganize the Navy of the United States.

Any man who knows anything about it knows that it is a subject that requires serious and deliberate thought and most careful examination. It needs reorganization, and our statutes that relate to it are an incongruous mass that should be systematized into a harmonious code, but this can not be done in a day.

There should be appointed from the two Naval Committees of the House and the Senate a sub-committee to act in conjunction with the Secretary of the Navy and some prominent and cultivated officers in the preparation of a plan and system to be reported some time during the next session.

There is grave objection even to the merits of this proposition, to say nothing about the form in which it is presented to us.

When I was speaking a while ago the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] referred to the method of promotion. As I understand it, the rule of seniority has prevailed ever since our naval system has been in existence, and it has worked well. Why has it worked well? Certainty in matters of this kind is of more importance than anything else. Any system which will do away with complaints and jealousies on the part of brother officers commends itself far more than a system which must lead to them.

It would be impossible to have a system of promotion by designation residing in any man without having confusion in the whole system. It prevails to a limited extent in the British navy, but only among the inferior grades. The rule of seniority is allowed to prevail in that service in all the upper grades, and it is only in the case of inferior officers of little consequence to the service that the rule of promotion by designation prevails. Here that rule is reversed. It is proposed in this bill to begin at the very top, and to give to the Secretary of the Navy the power of promotion from the list of commodores and captains to admirals and vice-admirals, a power hitherto unheard of in the naval service.

Mr. HALE. The Senator must know that all these appointments are made by the President. The Secretary of the Navy has no power.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I mention the Secretary of the Navy because the President usually speaks through that officer; it is the executive government. I do not know whether those promotions are to be made by the advice and consent of the Senate. There is nothing in the bill about it. The action of the Senate is excluded from the bill.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will not seriously, in casting about trying to find some trouble with this bill, make that point.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I do not insist upon that.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will not first make the point that the Secretary of the Navy is to appoint by selection and then that the Senate is excluded from the consideration of the nominations, because the Senator must be very hard pushed if he is driven to that.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The bill is very imperfectly drawn, and it ought to specify it.

Mr. HALE. It is drawn as any other provision in reference to the appointment of officers. It is so recognized, not only by the law but by the organic law, that the Senate passes upon all such nominations, that it is never repeated in any law in relation to these officers, and never will be.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. There is another provision in the bill about which we shall not differ that it gives a most extraordinary power to the board of examination, something entirely novel and new.

Mr. HALE. There is no board of examination provided.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. In cases of promotion?

Mr. HALE. No.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I suggest to the Senator that when we come to that clause in the consideration of the bill it will then be the proper time to consider it.

Mr. HALE. This only shows how much better it would be for us to go to the consideration of the bill, and then consider its provisions. A large part of the argument has been either upon provisions not in the bill or upon provisions which have been amended by the committee.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Well, let us see. The bill provides that—

Hereafter all promotions to the grade of rear-admiral on the active list shall be made by selection from the grades of commodore and captain, and no more promotions to the grade of commodore shall be made: Provided, however, That no commodore now in the service shall be reduced in rank or deprived of his commission by reason of this act: And provided further, That no officer shall be promoted under the provisions of this act unless his mental, moral, and professional fitness shall have been established according to the provisions of sections 1496 and 1497 of the Revised Statutes: And provided further, That whenever on an inquiry had pursuant to law, concerning the fitness of an officer of the Navy for promotion, it shall appear that such officer is unfit to perform at sea the duties of the place to which it is proposed to promote him, by reason of drunkenness, or from any cause arising from his own misconduct, he shall not be placed on the retired list of the Navy, and he shall be discharged with not more than one year's pay.

That is the provision to which I referred.

Mr. HALE. But that is not the provision of a board controlling the selection.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It is the action of a board which examines for promotion.

Mr. HALE. No; the board which was provided in the bill as it passed the House to regulate the selection was struck out, and is not in this bill. The board the Senator is referring to is the board which has always existed and which settles certain ordinary questions, not of selection, but where promotion comes in time by seniority.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I understand that, but this provision superadds to it a power that never before existed, the power of dismissing any man from the Navy, for it is the very highest and gravest penalty that can be rendered against him. That is the work of a court-martial.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks a man who from drunkenness or his own misconduct has incapacitated himself to perform the duties of an officer of the Navy ought to remain in the Navy?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I am lawyer enough never to prejudice any man's case. The Senator well knows it is not the province of a lawyer to do so. It is wise to argue a case. I will not assume that any man is a drunkard; I will not assume that he has done anything to merit this grave punishment, to be tried by a board of this description, which in a number of instances has sat ex parte.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator, so that he may be relieved somewhat as to the harshness of that provision which he thinks is very hard, that it is copied from a provision in regard to the Army, where the same power exists; and I cannot see that an officer who demeans himself so that he is entirely unfitted for service is any better in the Navy than in the Army.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I do not care from whence it came, I think a man either in the Navy or the Army, when charged with any offense which may lead to his dismissal from the public service, is entitled to a trial according to the rules and articles of war, and this does not give him that. It would be easy to trump up a charge against any man under this board and put him out of the service for any cause. It is not confined to drunkenness, but extends to any cause which this autocratic board might say was sufficient. A man who had devoted his life to the public service is to lose his commission without any of the safeguards which usually preserve the simplest right of person or of property.

This is the kind of premature legislation that is forced upon the Senate in an appropriation bill. This is evidence of the deliberation, and the knowledge, and wisdom, which those gentlemen boast so much about in dealing with this grave and interesting question.

The committee of which I happen to be a member, instead of attacking anybody, has been attacked without cause. It has been stated here that we have been recreant; that we have not performed our duty; that we have not reformed the naval service when reformation was shown to be necessary by the Appropriations Committee. That brings to my mind a celebrated sentence in one of the grandest opinions of Chief-Justice Marshall, in the celebrated case of Gibbons vs. Ogden, when the question involved was as to the power of Congress to regulate commerce between the States. It was argued by the counsel against the proposition that inasmuch as some of the States had been permitted to regulate this subject in the absence of legislation on the part of the Federal Government, that was an acquiescence on the part of this Government in the necessity of such regulation. What did that profound jurist say? His simple answer was, the fact that the General Government did not interfere at all was evidence that no regulation was necessary.

We have gone as far in the work of reform as we thought proper to go. We have considered the subject, but we did not think it wise or proper to go to the extent which the Appropriations Committee in their wisdom think it proper and necessary to go.

Then the practical question arises, when there is a difference of opinion between the committee which is intrusted with the consideration and reporting of all laws relating to the organization of our Navy and a committee which has nothing to do with it, which shall prevail? What right has the Appropriations Committee to set up its judgment here against the judgment of the Naval Committee, which has been intrusted, according to the organization of the body, with this great subject? It has reported a bill and it has put that bill on the Calendar and it has asked for its passage. We think if that bill is passed it will bring to the naval service all reasonable relief which may be necessary on this subject. But we are not willing to go to the extent that the Appropriations Committee have recommended, and we have decided to resist it, and we think it to be our duty to resist it, and there comes in the question as to the proper management and conduct of the public business of this body.

The Appropriations Committee of the Senate, composed of able men, as my friend from Illinois stated yesterday, and I have no quarrel to make with them, have an immense power. They have the power of appropriating public money for every department and branch of this Government, a power which others believe they ought not to have, because it is too great and extended for any one committee, and if a wise rule were adopted the power would be subdivided, the Naval Committee would be consulted in regard to the appropriations necessary to maintain the naval establishment, the Military Committee would be consulted in respect to the money necessary to maintain the military establishment, and so on through the whole field of governmental operations. But as matters stand now they wield this whole power, and they are not satisfied with that. They want to come in and engage in the business of general legislation, to reform the Navy, it may be the Judiciary, the Army, every branch of the Government on an appropriation bill. Where will such confusion as this end? In all orderly bodies like this we must conform to our rules or abandon the legitimate processes of legislation.

It has been stated here that when a bill comes from the House with a provision on it which happens to be in accordance with the rules of that body and happens to be in conflict with ours, we must obey the House. It has been announced here as a principle to-day that because this legislation is in the direction of retrenchment, and is not open to any objection under the rules of the House, although it is admitted to be in the very teeth of the rules of the Senate, out of comity and courtesy we must acquiesce in a violation of our own rules, created for our own Government, in order to please the other body. Is that to be the rule of the Senate in the future?

Sir, I say that the House of Representatives has no right to send a bill here that violates the rules of the Senate, even though it may not violate any of its own rules. I say that it is a breach of that courtesy and that legislative comity which ought to exist between two great bodies for the House to send a bill here with legislation upon it that stands in the very teeth of our most obvious self-imposed rules, enacted for the orderly conduct of business in this body. If they have the hardihood to do it, then it is the duty of this body to send the bill back and tell them that they must not ask us, in adhering to their wishes, to violate the established law of our own organization; and I do not think they would undertake to do it.

My friend from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] not now in his seat, made a great noise a while ago about the possibility of a tie on a conference committee over this question. The House of Representatives cannot go to the country on the issue, (no leading man there will lend his name to it,) that they will resist the right of the Senate as an independent co-ordinate department of the Legislature under the Constitution to prescribe the rules for its own government and to live up to them. If the House makes that issue, I for one am prepared to meet it.

The Constitution provides that each House shall have the right to prescribe the rules and regulations for its own government. We have prescribed a rule, which has been read by the Senator from Ohio, which no man can fail to understand, and it tells the members of this body, it tells the other House, it tells the country that no legislation of a general character can consistently with those rules be incorporated into an appropriation bill. That is the whole of it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from Florida said he was confident that the House would not contend upon a matter of legislation on an appropriation bill. I would say that we have now a question pending, and it has been pending for two or three weeks, and several conference committees have been appointed on it, on that very matter, the House contending for their right to legislate as they think best, and that the Senate has no right to say aught about it. It will be recollected by my friend from Florida that there have been three or four conferences on the legislative appropriation bill, and the only point of difference is as to the sixth section in that bill, and that is new legislation.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. What is that?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I supposed my friend knew all about the sixth section of the legislative bill, for there have been three or four conferences about it.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I ask for information.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will say that the House says that such records as belong to the Surgeon-General's Office relative to pensions should be transferred to the Adjutant-General's Office. The Senate thought that it ought not to be so. Another point in the legislation—and that is the serious question—is what portion of the new State, War, and Navy building shall be occupied by each of these different Departments. That is the only difference, and the House says it has a right to insist on it, though it is new legislation. The Senate has appointed three or four conference committees on that, and they are now standing apart.

My friend from Florida asked me to explain what the difference was, and then deliberately walked off and got into conversation with another Senator.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I am listening.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am not doing the Senator injustice when I say that he has paid about as little attention to what is now the question as to the difference in regard to the matter he asked me about.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I heard the Senator.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I want to occupy not more than five minutes.

What is the question here and what is to be gained if this bill is sent back to the Committee on Appropriations? The House has sent us one of the regular appropriation bills. Under their rules they have incorporated certain new legislation together with that making appropriations for the entire Navy. Under the rules of the House anything that tends to economy they can insert as legislation on appropriation bills. I think it is a step in the right direction.

The fact that it is economy is the only reason and the only cause of this new legislation upon this appropriation bill. That being so, this bill tends to economy, this bill tends to save money to the people of this country; and is it possible that the Committee on Naval Affairs, on a question that does not come from their committee, are contending that a bill that saves $1,000,000 per annum, or perhaps more, certainly $1,000,000, to the people of this country, does not lessen the expenses? They say that the bill ought to go back to the Committee on Appropriations. For what? To increase the pay and other items in the bill nearly $1,000,000 over what they are now. The result is that if this vote is taken and this bill is sent back to the Appropriations Committee with directions to bring in the bill as it was last year, you have to place just a million more dollars of appropriation in this bill. That is a step in the wrong direction.

I do not see how this side of the Chamber or the other side can say that they are for economy and intend retrenchment and that there is too much money expended, and then say "go back and increase this bill and we will take it up and pass it if you will do that, and if you do not we will not pass it." That is the result of the proposition.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to ask the Senator what is the difference between the appropriations in this bill and the appropriations last year reported from the Committee on Appropriations for the support of the naval establishment?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will tell the Senator. I hope my friend from Florida [Mr. JONES] will listen, and I wish the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] was in his seat, for I have heard him lecture the committee more than once for its extravagance, and there are other Senators whom I have heard lecture the Committee on Appropriations for its extravagance. The Senator from Florida says he never did. He is doing it now; he has done it to-day. Now, let me tell my friend from South Carolina what the difference is. In the miscellaneous pay of the Navy this bill saves over that of last year $186,525.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, I will ask the Senator how that is done? The Senator from Illinois says the officers of the Navy are not reduced.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is a fact.

Mr. BUTLER. Then how is that reduction made? I will vote for any proper reduction in the appropriations for the naval establishment.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator wants to vote in gross, by wholesale, to send this bill back to the committee without an opportunity on the part of the Committee on Appropriations to explain where this saving comes in. He says, "Go it blind, and send the bill back;" and now he asks me where the saving is.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator is mistaken. I object to the bill, not because of the expenditure.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. What is the objection?

Mr. BUTLER. My objection is that I think the system for the reorganization of the Navy is vicious and faulty in the extreme. If the Senator desires, I will say that I think you strike at the wrong place, the personnel instead of the administration. That is my objection.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Suppose we examine that. I take it the Senator has examined it.

Mr. BUTLER. I have.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then he certainly can tell me where the difference of $176,000 in the pay comes in.

Mr. BUTLER. I cannot, because I am not familiar with the appropriation bill of last year.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. When the Appropriations Committee asked that this bill be taken up and considered as all other appropriation bills have been, the Senator with others said, "No, we will not take it up and consider it item by item, but we will send it back to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions." I believe such a thing has never been done.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator does not state my position fairly. I do not object to anything in the appropriation proper. I might vote for every reduction the committee recommend, but I object to the bill, as I said, because it has general legislation in it, which I think is not to the interest of the Government or the Navy.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. When we come to that general legislation is it not best for the country and for the Senate to take it up and strike it out if there is not a majority of the Senate in favor of it? Why send back a bill that ought to be passed and delay the passage of an appropriation bill, which, by being sent back, will be delayed a month or more? The House has as much right to amend an appropriation bill as we have. The House under their rules—and I believe it would be better if our rules were the same—made certain legislation in the naval appropriation bill, all of which I do not agree to, and perhaps I shall help the Senator to strike out some of it. I do not know that I shall, but perhaps I shall, and most probably I shall. But why send the bill back to the Committee on Appropriations simply because there may be some one or two clauses in it that some Senators disapprove of? Why not take them up and discuss them and dispose of them as intelligent men ought to do as we come to them? We have been nearly two days at this bill now, and if we had taken up each section probably we should have been nearly to the end of the bill by this time.

My friend has asked me what else we save. If he will look to the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting he will find there is $125,000 saved there over last year. If he will go to the Bureau of Yards and Docks there is $230,000 saved by this bill over last year's bill, and yet you tell us to take it back and bring in a bill that will expend so much more money for the country. What else?

Mr. BUTLER. I will ask the Senator at that point if it is in the interest of economy and a reduction of expenditures to order the repair of two monitors, or whatever other number of monitors are provided for; and if it is in the interest of economy and a reduction of expenditures to provide for building two cruisers which require over $1,000,000?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. This bill as a whole appropriates probably about half a million dollars more than the bill of last year, and half a million dollars less than the bill of 1881.

The Senator asks me if it is economy to build these vessels. That is a question that he and I can debate when we come to it. There is a million dollars say for that purpose. The Senator from Delaware, who spoke a short time ago against this bill, said it was economy, and that the reason he voted against it and one of his objections was that there was not more in it, and the Naval Committee I understand have recommended five times this amount. Certainly the Naval Committee of the House did, and now the Senator asks is it economy to build vessels.

Mr. BUTLER. That is not the question at all. It is quite likely that I shall be willing to vote $5,000,000 on proper advice, but the ground on which the Senator put his support of the bill and justified the legislation in it was that it was in the interest of economy and a reduction of expenditures, when the bill provides for the building of two cruisers and the repairing of two monitors, which must certainly require the expenditure of more money than would be required in an ordinary appropriation bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. For the purpose of which the Senator speaks the bill is less by about a half a million than it was in 1881. They could take that money for this specific purpose and for launching vessels now on the docks, which my friend from Delaware said this morning ought to be done, and I say ought to be done now.

Mr. BUTLER. Very likely.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Even after adding that much to the bill this bill is less than the bill of 1881 by nearly half a million dollars. My friend tells us it is all wrong.

Mr. BUTLER. Let me ask another question. Take out these items for building cruisers and repairing monitors and is not the bill reduced just that much more?

Mr. DAVIS, of Virginia. Certainly. And perhaps he and I may vote together when we come to that; but why does he say take it back to the Appropriations Committee, make it as it was last year, when by doing so we add a million dollars to the expenditures of this bill without touching the cruisers or the monitors?

Mr. BUTLER. For the naval establishment as we did last year is what I say.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Suppose that is done, suppose your estimate is carried out. I have in my hand the Navy Register, that shows the great number of men now being paid by the Government for doing nothing, and that is one thing among others which the Appropriations Committee think ought to be corrected.

I have a table here in which the very first name is that of Sands—J. R. Sands, now a rear-admiral. He was retired as a captain twenty years ago. I believe his pay then was $1,738. What is it now? He has done nothing since. So far as I know he has not done one stroke at anything, has not been employed a day for the Government; yet his promotion and his pay have gone on increasing from captain to rear-admiral, until to-day he gets $4,500.

Mr. ROLLINS. Let me say one word right there.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. These things are unpleasant, I know.

Mr. ROLLINS. There is one thing he did. He got an amendment upon an appropriation bill increasing his salary from $3,000 a year to $4,500. That is what he did, and when he accomplished that he accomplished an increase of pay for five or six other officers in the same way on an appropriation bill. That is what he did.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. To show that the Senator is wrong about its being done on an appropriation bill, while that may have been done in some particular case—

Mr. ROLLINS. It was done in this identical case.

Mr. ALLISON. On the motion of the Naval Committee.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I know these facts are very unpleasant to my friends of the Naval Committee.

Mr. ROLLINS. Not at all.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand why they should jump up and try to break the force of them. I can see it. Here is no less than four of them about me, and in the five minutes I have been talking, contending that we ought to go on with the bill, they have been jumping up and trying to break the force of my facts.

Mr. FRYE. Allow me to ask the Senator whether the bill reported from the Appropriations Committee affords a remedy for that?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes, sir. That is the very thing I am coming to.

Mr. FRYE. And yet the two parties in the Senate who have been proclaiming their adhesion to economy propose to prevent any legislation which shall cure that terrible wrong simply because one committee rather than another reports it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Simply because the bill is sent to us by the House, and by the aid of the Committee on Naval Affairs sent to the Committee on Appropriations to be considered and brought back here.

In addition to what my friend from Maine has said, the simple facts are that this legislation came here from the House and the House had a right to put it upon the bill under their rules. Why? Because it was in the direction of economy, and my friends of the Naval Committee jump up here as a whole and say that is wrong, "we want you to continue paying these outrageous salaries; we want you to continue allowing men who have not done anything for the Government for twenty years to go on with their promotion and go on with their pay." It is all wrong; nothing of that kind should be preserved; and because it is an appropriation bill, although this bill appropriates the money to pay these very men, our friends complain and say you ought not to remedy it because this is an appropriation bill; and they say take this bill back and take out all the legislation in it. I hope it will not be sent back, because I want Congress to adjourn some time this year, and we have had fights enough with the House this year.

What is the result? I have just said to my friend from South Carolina that there is a saving in this bill over that of last year; but if this vote prevails the Appropriations Committee, if it obeys the Senate, will have to bring in the items exactly as they were last year, and we appropriated $947,000 for last year's service more than the present bill appropriates for the current year.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. This bill does not affect the status of a single man in the Navy.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I say that too. This bill does not in any form or manner reduce the grade or pay of any person whatever now in the service.

Mr. BUTLER. I understood the Senator to say just now that it reduced the pay of Admiral Sands.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. No; I did not. I said it prevented such things in the future.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not understand that.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It prevents things of that character in the future. I said that for the future we guarded against it, and I believe it will annually save $1,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator has referred to me as a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs. I am not. I know it is a great piece of audacity on the part of any other Senator to criticize any committee whatever on the floor. I am not on the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I thought the Senator was, from the part he was taking.

Mr. BUTLER. No, sir; I do not belong to that committee.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from West Virginia allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. ROLLINS] seems to have all the knowledge and information upon this subject. I know he has from the accurate knowledge he exhibited yesterday relative to the law of March 3, 1873, in regard to which he said the Committee on Appropriations had usurped so much, although there was no legislation proposed in that bill by either the House or the Senate Committee on Appropriations, and it all came from the Naval Committee. I want to ask the Senator from West Virginia whether he thinks a proper amendment to the resolution would not be what I am about to suggest. The resolution reads:

Resolved, That the naval appropriation bill be committed to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to strike out all matter relating to the reorganization of the Navy, and provide appropriations for the naval establishments as it now exists.

I propose to add by way of amendment:

And for the further information of the Senate, that the Senator from New Hampshire be respectfully requested to appear before that committee and instruct them what will be satisfactory.

I think we had better add that in the motion.

Mr. ROLLINS. I did not understand the last words of the Senator from Kentucky. I should like to have the Senator repeat them.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, this bill regulates the pay of the Navy. No one will question the right of the Committee on Appropriations to regulate that, as the bill appropriates money for the pay. What else do I find? I find that the sea pay of captains is $4,500, and their shore-duty pay $3,500, and their pay on leave $2,800. The committee found that a very large portion of the naval captains had, from some cause or other, or in some manner, instead of being on leave with $2,800 a year pay, been put on shore duty, which gave them $3,500 pay instead of $2,800.

So it is all through the Navy in the same way. In appropriating the money to pay these very gentlemen the Appropriations Committee has thought it wise to say that hereafter when the Secretary assigns an officer to shore duty he shall specify how long it is to be and what service the officer is to perform, believing that would be a large reform and perhaps save $50,000 a year or more in that single respect.

Another reason why we should not recommit this bill, in my judgment, is that it will certainly require some time in the committee if we are to reconsider it; and after it comes back to the Senate, no matter in what form it comes, we shall have to go over the same questions. The entire matter that the House has sent here must come back to the Senate in the bill, and the whole field will have to be gone over again. Had we not better now take the bill up as a whole and go on with it, taking it section by section, and if there is anything in it that ought not to be in it, let the Senate strike it out. If there is an amendment or a modification required, make it; let the Senate act upon it.

If you by one general vote eject the good as well as the bad, how will it be possible when the conferees come together on this bill for the Senate conferees to say that the Senate will not accept this, that, or the other? They will have taken it as a whole. There comes up a question between the two Houses. The House of Representatives say "We have a right to amend the bill as well as you have, and our action is in the interest of economy." If the Senate choose to disregard economy and say they will not adopt the present bill because it saves a million dollars, what is to be the result? I repeat that this bill as reported to us in the regular way is $947,000 less than the bill must be if you send it back, striking out the legislation. So you will be spending money uselessly and unnecessarily. Gentlemen who want a more extravagant bill than we now have ought to vote to send it back.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, this has formally assumed the phase of a controversy between two committees of this body; but I do not think myself that it is really entitled to be considered as such. It is wholly a controversy as it stands now between the Naval Committee of this body and those who adhere to them and the House of Representatives. So far as I am concerned as a member of the Appropriations Committee, I am as colorless in regard to this matter as any one can possibly be. It is a matter of not the slightest consequence to me whichever way this goes, so far as my membership of that committee is concerned or any appreciation or regard I have for it.

The rules of the House permit this legislation on this bill. Each House has a right to prescribe the rules governing its own legislation. We have a right to say that we will incorporate or that we will not incorporate legislation on appropriation bills; the House has an equal right to do the same thing. Each House is supreme in that particular. Neither House has a right to dictate to the other in regard to legislation. The rules of the House permit any legislation on appropriation bills which in the judgment of the House reduces expenditures; and whether it does or not, we have a right to presume and are bound to presume that everything which is sent to us from the House, constituted as it is, is in accordance with the rules of that body or it would not have come here because being subject to a point of order. Where there are two hundred and ninety-three members there is certainly some one who would find some way of objecting to it and raising the point of order and making that point effective.

This, then, amounts to a suggestion or a hint or a requirement on the part of this body that legislation which comes here from a co-ordinate branch of this Government shall be excised upon the ground, not that the legislation is not proper in itself, not that it does not tend to reduce expenditures, not that it does not tend to responsibility in administration, not that it is not wise considered in the broadest possible light, but simply that the Senate looking at the thing through its own spectacles, with reference to its own rules and regulations, made by itself for its own purposes, says it is not proper to be considered at all upon the merits. That is all there is about it. It is not a controversy between the Naval Committee and the Appropriations Committee as it stands to-day; it is a controversy between the Naval Committee insisting upon its prerogative against the prerogative of the House of Representatives. That is all there is about it.

Mr. BECK. I wish to ask the Senator from Kansas a question as to the effect of our amendment inserting these words:

And section 1461 of the Revised Statutes allowing promotions of officers on the retired list, and the act entitled "An act relating to the promotion of commodores on the retired list of the Navy," approved August 15, 1876, are hereby repealed.

If you reject that amendment of the Committee on Appropriations and leave the old bummers—for that is what some of them are—to draw their pay and their increase of pay, would it be satisfactory to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Kentucky is so much more competent to judge of that question than I am that I will leave that to him. But I was about to speak of the fact that the resolution originally offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania did not touch potential matters of legislation in this bill; did not touch the creation of the Navy at all. That resolution only touched the personnel of the Navy; it only referred to so much of the bill as limited promotions in the Navy. I do not care to go generally into that question on its merits, but I want to call attention to the fact that the Navy has been entirely a sealed book that could not be touched, and it has hardly been touched. Senators talk about the injustice that is done to the Navy as though Congress, which has appropriated the money, which has established the grades of promotion, had no right to enter upon this sacred ground at all. How much more sacred is the Navy than the Army? Yet no one was ever heard to say here that Congress could not put its hand upon the Army.

In 1870 Congress on an appropriation bill reorganized the Army, and it did not touch it with as light a hand as the Navy is touched by this bill. It did not say that no man should go out of the Army except he went out by casualty; it provided that the President should put certain supernumerary officers upon a list to be called the supernumerary list, and that as fast as vacancies should occur in the regular line of the regiments remaining he should draw them into that for certain duty, and those that remained after that should be mustered out whether or not. After providing in various ways that men might go out of their own option on a year's pay, and so on, it went on to provide further:

That the President is hereby authorized to transfer officers from the regiments of cavalry, artillery, and infantry to the list of supernumeraries; and all vacancies now existing, or which may occur prior to the 1st day of January next, in the cavalry, artillery, or infantry, by reason of such transfer, or from other causes, shall be filled in due proportion by the supernumerary officers, having reference to rank, seniority, and fitness, as provided in existing law regulating promotions in the Army. And if any supernumerary officers shall remain after the 1st day of January next, they shall be honorably mustered out of the service with one year's pay and allowances.

Under that act more than eighty officers were mustered out of the Army on the 1st day of January, 1871. There was no question about their right to stay in the Army by the fact that they had once been there, no question about their right to promotion. The Army has often been treated in that way, and Congress has a perfect right legally and equitably to treat the Navy in the same way, but it is not proposed to do it in this bill. This bill proposes to leave every officer in the rank he holds, and only provides how vacancies shall be filled and limited, thereby reducing the line and the staff of the Navy.

My objection to this bill, if I were going to discuss its merits, would be that it does not go far enough, that it preserves the higher grades in the Navy, and cuts off the lower ones. I think it vicious in that respect. I should like to discuss it, if I had time, before the Senate on a proposition to change the order so that there might be more men excised, taken out of the Navy from the higher grades, and more left in the lower grades.

This has been spoken of by the Senator from Ohio and others as an extraordinary proposition of legislation. Bearing in mind that it came from the House, that it is a proposition that was not originated in the Senate, that the Appropriations Committee got it by reference from the Senate, that no member belonging to the Naval Committee or any other committee of this body suggested that any portion of it should go to the Naval Committee; bearing in mind that the Appropriations Committee got full and ample jurisdiction by a vote of this body to consider all the matters in the bill, it is now proposed, notwithstanding the fact that the Naval Committee did not then make this motion, notwithstanding the fact that everything that is in it came substantially from the House, to send it back to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to strike out the House provisions. And it is stated by the Senator from Ohio and others that this ought to be done because it is an extraordinary invasion of the province of the other committee, embracing legislation of a character which ought not to go upon an appropriation bill.

As I said before, the proposition of the bill is objectionable to the Naval Committee; the proposition to complete ships now is not objectionable to them, but only that relating to the personnel of the Navy. When we come to make appropriations for the different branches of the Government in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, if ten or fifteen or twenty more clerks are needed in the Land Office or in the Pension Office they are inserted, and the Pension Committee or the Public Lands Committee do not come in here and object that the question as to whether those clerks are needed should be referred to it. When more clerks are needed in any of the bureaus, they are inserted on that appropriation bill, and no committee rises here to say, and never has, and never will, that that ought to have been considered by it in reference to the needs of that little department, and when clerks are to be stricken off they are simply not appropriated for, and that settles it.

It is so in every department of the Government; and when the late Secretary of the Treasury wanted more clerks he came to the Committee on Appropriations to give them to him. He did not go to the Finance Committee for that purpose; and yet he ought to have done so in order to maintain his consistency. When the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of the General Land Office wants more clerks he comes to the Committee on Appropriations to get them. He does not come to the Public Lands Committee. When we want some of these clerks stricken off, or it is ascertained that they are not needed, as sometimes is the case—not as often as it ought to be, I admit—the Appropriations Committee simply fails to make the appropriation, and the thing drops.

The question of how many persons we shall appropriate for in the Navy is germane to the appropriation bill in a certain sense. I do not mean to say that it might not be considered in a larger sense; I do not mean to say that it might not be considered by the Naval Committee very properly; and yet by the action of this body, as it is and always will be, certain measures which do not get through, which have received the consent of a committee of this body, will be sent to the Appropriations Committee, because at the last moment of time in the session, everything being brought together, that furnishes the opportunity which men seek to get their bills through.

Mr. VANCE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly.

Mr. VANCE. Suppose on the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, when it came over to us, the House had incorporated a provision striking off three judges of the Supreme Court, and providing only for six, does the Senator think it would have been proper that that should go to the Appropriations Committee within a few days of the end of the session, and that it would have been an invasion of the rights of nobody in this Government or in this Senate?

Mr. PLUMB. If the House had sent that provision here, I should say in the first place, coming from the branch of the Government having the power under the Constitution to originate revenue bills, being nearer to the people than this body is, that it was entitled to be treated with respect at all events, that is to say, to decent consideration. I might say further that the Judiciary Committee being informed in advance by the debate, by the printed bill, by its being reported here and referred, that such a provision was on a bill, it would have been the duty of that committee to take notice of it, and either submit propositions to the Appropriations Committee to reform what they conceived to be an injustice, or to ask the Senate to refer that particular portion of the bill to them for consideration, and if they had not done so they ought at least after that time hold their peace.

Mr. VANCE. Has not that been done in this case?

Mr. PLUMB. I do not think it has.

Mr. VANCE. Did not the Naval Committee ask that that portion of the bill should be referred to them?

Mr. PLUMB. I think not; I have not heard it.

Mr. VANCE. I understand the proposition of the Senator from Pennsylvania to be to refer it to the committee with instructions to strike out that portion of it which pertains to the reorganization of the Navy and present an appropriation bill proper.

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, sir; but that does not meet the question at all, because there is no proposition to refer to the Naval Committee, and because the motion is made after the bill is reported to the Senate after due consideration by the Appropriations Committee. If the Naval Committee have got rights, I ask any lawyer if they have not slept on them in such a way that no court would regard them?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Naval Committee has acquiesced in sending the bill to the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. PLUMB. The Naval Committee up to the last moment of time recognized the jurisdiction of the Appropriations Committee over these questions. As I said, I do not care anything about this matter so far as the privileges of any committee are concerned; but we have got to this point that this means that unless this bill is considered by the Senate there is to be no reduction of the personnel of the Navy. That might as well be understood.

The Naval Committee has not considered the question heretofore, to the extent at least of being willing to report anything on the subject, or at all events it has not been able to get the ear of the Senate, and it is known now that there will not only be nothing passed at this session of Congress but that it will not probably be passed at the next session of Congress. Therefore we have come face to face with this proposition: either this bill, or the abuses which everybody admits to exist in the Navy cannot be rectified. That might just as well be understood and just as well understood by those who will vote for the motion to refer as by anybody else.

If the Senator from Ohio, the Senator from Florida, and the Senator from Pennsylvania were willing to trust to their persuasive arguments upon this measure on its merits before the Senate, they would not make this motion and support it. They would be willing to come here before the Senate, they would be willing to trust themselves on the merits of the debate and trust to the judgment and good sense of the Senate to adopt their proposition and not ours. It is because they are not willing to do that, and, as I said, that might just as well be understood first as last. That means exclusively and only and wholly that nothing shall be done to reform these abuses in the Navy at this session of Congress; and next session being the short session, with a holiday half way between, nothing can be done then.

If the propositions which have been embodied in this bill are so repulsive to that sense of justice which characterizes my friend from Florida, more particularly perhaps than anybody else, and if he thinks these war-worn and scarred veterans are entitled to the sympathies and good-will of the American people, he ought to lift up his voice in their behalf in this Senate Chamber, and demonstrate that to his fellow-Senators and appeal to their votes to settle the question. But he is not willing to do that. As I said, it simply means that those persons who are fighting now apparently for prerogative and for principle are fighting simply for the maintenance of a class and for the prevention of any reform and for the prevention of the introduction of any measure of economy into the organization of the Navy.

Mr. VANCE. The Senator will allow me, I hope, to say that I deny for one any such conclusion as that.

Mr. PLUMB. Well, Mr. President, I will accept any disclaimer that the Senator from North Carolina or anybody else may make; but I might apply to the Senator from North Carolina what Mr. Lincoln once applied to Mr. Douglas. He said that if James framed a certain stick of wood, and John framed another, and Joe framed another, though all in different counties, yet when they were brought together they accidentally happened to fit the opening, the human presumption would be that they were intended to fit and were made for the purpose of fitting. So, I presume that every one here intends the legal and logical and necessary result which is to follow from the action he takes, which is that there shall be no reform in the Navy. That is the question we have got to meet.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I say, for one member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, that we have been anxious to reform, have made an effort to reform, and are willing to reform now. We may differ with the Senator from Kansas as to how this end shall be best accomplished, but I do not think the Appropriations Committee in their omnipotence can assume that they are right and everybody else is wrong.

Mr. PLUMB. I said in the beginning that I did not care more about the Appropriations Committee than any other in the body. I take things as they are. The fact that I am a member of the Appropriations Committee cuts no figure in this case.

If the House had not sent this legislation here I should not have suggested it; but out of decent respect for a co-ordinate branch of this Government having the power to originate legislation and the only power to originate such legislation as this and fix its terms and limits, and under the rules of which this legislation was put upon this bill, and it having been sent by a unanimous vote without dissent to the Committee on Appropriations, what could that committee do?

Would it not have been regarded as presumption for the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate to have raised a little sort of howl and say that the House had exceeded its power and was violating the rules of the Senate. Why, Mr. President, I think the time is a long way off before the House will consider the Senate rules as governing its action or determining what it shall do upon appropriation bills or any other bills. The Constitution, as they construe it, vests in them the power to originate appropriation bills. They say that they are cognate to the raising of revenue. They have maintained that prerogative; they always will do it, I have no doubt; and the Senate has recognized it by waiting here for months for these bills to come here, and has taken them as it found them and amended them as it got them, as it ought to do, until it has met the question and settled it that we have the power which heretofore they have denied to us.

Suppose the Appropriations Committee of the Senate when it approached this appropriation bill had said, "Why, we do not think that under the rules of the Senate we ought to consider general legislation the House has sent us," and brought it back here, what would the Senate have done? I think the Senate then would have said that in justice and fairness to the other branch of the legislative authority of Congress the Appropriations Committee was treading upon ground it ought to have kept off from, and would have said in fact that it should take up whatever the Senate sent to it, and not bother itself about whether the Senate had properly exercised its discretion or not. Consequently there is no need of referring it back to the Committee on Appropriations. It has done what the Senate ordered it to do.

The Appropriations Committee, I have no doubt, in detail and in gross, is, as I am, ready to do whatever the Senate tells it to do. I assure my friend from Florida that if the Senate shall say this bill shall go back with instructions to strike out anything, it will be duly stricken out and no bones about it.

Mr. President, there is one thing that might as well be understood about this kind of legislation. I take the thing as I find it. I find here a bill which the Senate had jurisdiction of; I find a bill of which the Committee on Appropriations had jurisdiction and of which the Senate has resumed jurisdiction, and now I find here another committee of this body and those who agree with them insisting upon a technical ground, not that the House had not the right to put the legislation there, but because the rule of the Senate is that the Senate itself cannot do it, therefore they will not consider it; and what does it come to? It comes back to that point which we all of us observe in regard to our legislation.

There has not been a bill passed since I have been here, I think, which has destroyed the privilege of any man or of any class of men; not one. There have been a thousand bills passed which have added to the emoluments of individual men and to the emoluments of classes of men. You will never pass a bill reorganizing the Navy as long as the influences which dominate the committee-rooms which will be found formulated in the shape of champagne and things of that kind are patent in this body. You will never pass a bill to take any office away from anybody; you will pass thousands of bills to give offices to everybody; you will increase and multiply the chances all the while and in every direction and constantly which make classes of men.

I maintain in regard to this Government and in regard to this kind of legislation that the example of Great Britain is of no consequence to us, the example of France is of no consequence to us, the example of any other government is of no consequence to us, except as it may be supported by reason. Great Britain is a government of a class, by a class, and for a class, and the appropriations that are made not only for the British navy but for all the other people who receive the immense revenues of that great empire are based upon that theory, and we are coming to it gradually. Great Britain does so and we must do so, oblivious of the fact that this is or was intended to be, and ought to be, a Government by the people and for the people and of the people, and that there ought to be no class upon which the legislative power cannot put its hands and say, "As we created you so you must go out."

There is no question of private right in it. There may be a question of decency, there may be a question of the orderly conduct of business, there may be a question perhaps of propriety; but that Congress should ever withhold its hand on the ground that any man in the Army or Navy or in any branch of its service has a right to continue in the emoluments of a particular position for one single moment of time, is one of those things that ought to be disputed here and always and everywhere. The compensations of republican government are such that no man who values his manhood as a citizen of the Republic ever ought to assert that he has a right to one single dollar out of the Treasury that is not appropriated from time to time; and he has no mortgage on it in the future.

Mr. VANCE. If the Senator will allow me, I wish to ask him if he thinks it fair, just, or legal for the Government of the United States to educate an officer and place him in the line of promotion until that period of his life when he is past fitting himself and adapting himself for any other business in society, then to kick him out whenever it is the pleasure of the Senate to do so?

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator will omit some of his adjectives—

Mr. VANCE. Put him out, then, without using the word "kick."

Mr. PLUMB. I will say that I think it is entirely proper, abstractly stated, for the Government to abolish any rank or any grade in the Army or Navy at any time and irrespective of the effect it may have. When the Senator talks to me about the equity of it, I maintain that in individual cases, as to the matter of justice, that is a question to be settled by the law-making power at all times.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas which party is under obligation to the other. Is the Government under obligation to the man because it has taken him and educated him and kept him, or is the man under obligation to the Government for the favors the Government has done him?

Mr. PLUMB. I was coming to that in a moment. The proposition of the Senator from North Carolina is entirely untenable, for the reason that he cannot draw any line as to time. The obligation, if it exists at all, exists from the moment you take a man from the academy, and it continues from that on, according to his theory, until the man dies. No such obligation exists. If it did, it would, as I have said, make this Government what monarchical governments are, governments of class. But, Mr. President, it is not so; it never has been regarded as being so, as is shown by the legislation in regard to the Army and Navy, and more particularly the Army.

I confess I touch the Navy with a little horror. I feel like holding my hands off what I do not know a great deal about. I therefore prefer to generalize and not particularize. But the Navy to-day has rank, the Navy to-day has pay, the Navy to-day has emoluments in every way that the Army never did have and never sought to have. When in 1870 we proposed to and did cut down the official staff of the Army, no Army officer set himself up to say that the Government had not the right to do that thing. More than eighty officers were mustered out of the Army on the 1st of January, 1871, under the act of 1870 without any question as to whether they consented or not. Congress simply said you shall be mustered out.

The Senator from Illinois says one hundred and fifty, but for the principle of the case it does not make any difference whether it was a hundred or a thousand. In every way the Army, while aristocratic more than it ought to be, while seeking more than it ought to have, while getting more than it ought to have, while larger than it ought to be, while needing excision nearly as much as the Navy, never has been as gormandizing, never has been as exacting, never has been as exclusive, never has put itself so upon its privilege as the Navy.

So I say that whether you consider this question on the right of the two Houses, or whether you consider it upon its merits as a subject which ought to be touched with the unholy, impious hands of the Senate, everything demands that we should proceed to consider this question as one that is alive, as one that is for to-day, and as one that is pressing upon us and that needs and demands our consideration, for the lack of which our people would have a right to call us to account.

Mr. President, I do not believe in keeping up a very large Navy, so far as the official part of it is concerned, with reference to contingencies which may happen hereafter. As was well said by the Senator from Kentucky when he was discussing a proposition to retire officers of the Army, no peace establishment ever was made until we had a war. That must inevitably be so in a government like ours. If there is a war to be carried on, that war must be carried on by those who are improvised for the occasion. The history of both the Army and the Navy during the late war shows that conclusively.

It is not the old people, it is not the perfunctory people, it is not the people who have been sleeping themselves away at way-side stations who make war. We need nothing more, either in the Army or the Navy, in a time of profound peace, than simply men who can instruct the volunteers that we shall always get in a war in regard to the minutiae and the machinery of the business they have got to do. The office of the Army is to instruct men in all the branches of the service, so that when a war breaks out we shall have a camp of instruction where there will be men to instruct volunteer officers in their duties as commanders of companies, regiments, and brigades, and instruct them in the minutiae of the Quartermaster's and Commissary Departments, and that is all they are there for. They are to be instructors of the camps, they ought to be many-sided men, they ought to be informed in regard to the minutiae of army drill and management. So of the Navy. We shall always have to depend upon the volunteers, upon the men of patriotism, upon the men of zeal and energy who have borne the conflicts of life, and not men born of idleness. Give me a man whose intellect has been sharpened by self-interest; give me the man who has associated with men, who has been broadened and widened and deepened by that contact, and I will give you a man who can command armies and can command navies.

Give me a man who has sat under the idle floating of the flag at an Army station or anywhere else bothering himself about the spider-webs of his profession, about social obligations, or things of that kind, and I will show you a man who will not make war and who will do nothing else than meet disaster and expend money.

We want just enough men and no more to put our ships as we make them into commission. The Senator from Florida says we ought to have more ships and that we ought to keep up our present personnel of the Navy in order to have men to man more ships. That is simply like a proposition to build a barrel to a bung-hole.

We want a navy first. You will find officers enough, and you will always find seamen. We do not want to build up a great personnel and then say because we have officers we must have something for them to do, and therefore we must build ships in order to give these men occupation. We want more ships; and I am in favor of increasing the appropriation for building ships. But when we come to consider this question in this aspect we must not touch the personnel of the Navy; and for a larger and a better reason we ought not to touch the question of constructing the Navy.

If any part of that question is to go back, it ought all to go back. We ought to sit down simply and say not only will we have no diminution in the official staff of the Navy, not only will we have no reform in the Navy, but we will not have any more ships until the torpid body of this Naval Committee is informed and sympathizes in such a way that it can bring forward a measure to create it, which it can put before the Senate and in debate convincing and persuading, can convince the Senate and the other House of Congress to adopt. That it never has done.

There never has been, as I believe, one single measure of naval reform initiated in that way, and unless the future shall have something in it that the past has not had we never shall have. It is under the impulse and under the pressure of the closing hours of the session and of the necessity of passing appropriation bills that measures of this kind get through.

It may be said we do not belong to the Naval Committee; but we circulate around among the people who belong to the Naval Committee, and therefore get a sort of salt-water atmosphere about us, and we get an idea of the length and breadth and size of ships. Some of us may get probably the technical terms of the Navy. Measures are introduced and discussed, and at the close of the session, just at the time both Houses of Congress are informed of what it becomes necessary to do, something that could not be done before, everybody makes a rush pell-mell for the appropriation bills and the Appropriations Committee, and it does not make any difference whether it is a bill to pay John Jones a little stipend for services on this floor or the floor of the other House of Congress, or to enlarge the Navy, or to carry out a treaty, or whether it is a proposition to increase the salaries of the judges of the United States, coming from that august Committee on the Judiciary, or whatever else it may be—it is likely to be impersonal almost always—whatever it is, everything is emptied on the Appropriations Committee; not because people want to do that, but because in the exigencies of legislation that is the only thing left to do.

What, then, is the Appropriations Committee to do? Do they want to assume all responsibility? I think those members who have been upon it longest, who have been the most careful and painstaking, like my friend from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] do not want this great responsibility. They like their ease as anybody else. They would be glad to be relieved from this responsibility; they would be glad to take an appropriation bill cut and dried, only giving the salaries provided for in the Revised Statutes, and report it back and say, "Gentlemen, this is according to the estimates and according to the law; nothing is left to be done except to pass it." There is no responsibility about that at all.

Instead of that, as I said, committees that do not get their bills through, persons who have ends of their own to look after, friends of their own to provide for, specific measures that they want to get through, pile them in on the Appropriations Committee, and then when the Appropriations Committee, yielding to the demands of the hour, acting under the instructions of the Senate, simply report back here a proposition that comes from the House of Representatives properly under its rules, legitimate in every way as a matter of legislation, and because forsooth that touches the vital element of the Navy, the sacred bulls of Burmah, the Appropriations Committee are held up to execration for having invaded the domain of the Naval Committee, trespassed upon the privileges of the Senate, violated the rules, and subjected its members to punishment as for high crimes and misdemeanors.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I disagree with the Senator from Kansas in many things he has said; yet I think I am just as sincerely desirous of doing right; nor will my vote against this legislation on the naval bill indicate that I am unwilling to reform the Navy in any respect. He is assured of his motives, and I rest assured of mine. I propose to discuss this matter not at great length but dispassionately, and in a somewhat broken and irregular manner, merely stating my points.

There are some good things in this bill in the way of general legislation, some things that I could very cheerfully agree to. The naval advisory board is wisely provided for, and the sale of old hulks and useless material is well provided for; but I need not dwell upon that.

I desire, however, to give my independent judgment on certain matters reorganizing the Navy. I am not permitted to do so by this bill. I claim the right by logic and reason and the practice of wise legislators all over the world to give my independent judgment upon these matters, but I have been told here time and again this afternoon "You have got to take this bill; the House will not listen to anything else; you cannot vote the money to carry on the Navy unless you will consent to some reorganization of the Navy." That is what we have been virtually told, and I hardly change even the words used in saying it.

I cannot; I will not. I say that there are in the nature of general legislation upon this bill some things that my judgment condemns; I will vote to put them out; and if they are serious enough, as I think they are, I shall then, if they are kept in, vote against the bill on the general ground that legislation upon appropriation bills is wrong.

It is quite useless to deal in criminations and recriminations here as to the relative responsibility of various persons for this business. I have not a word of censure for the Appropriations Committee. The bill came here with vicious elements in it from the House, and they tried to do the best with it. They did improve it; they smoothed the idol down; they have removed some of his most horrid features, and endeavored to be reasonable, but nevertheless the whole thing is ill-considered, and it is not the place for it.

Now, sir, this is not a new point. It is but three years since we spent three months and more fighting desperately this very wrong practice in legislation, and the Republican Appropriations Committee of the Senate struck out of a legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill coming from the House some offensive legislation concerning the regulation of the Army on the ground that that kind of political and general legislation was out of place on an appropriation bill, and after a long fight they substantially won upon that ground.

In this country, among the bodies which are entitled to respect for careful consideration and sound principles, are the various constitutional conventions. There comes into them less of partisan unfairness than into any other bodies; they are much better, of course, than political conventions, and better, I say, than this body for the laying down of general principles; less of partisanship governs them. Twenty-five State constitutions provide that every bill shall contain but one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title, and the most of those constitutions have been made within twenty-five years. But they are not all modern; some of the States had these provisions as soon as they had constitutions at all; Maryland from the very beginning, notably, and some two or three others. That is a judgment running over one hundred years which is of weight. They either do that or they give their governors the right to veto any single item or section or paragraph in an appropriation bill. Five States forbid attaching general legislation to revenue bills distinctly.

When the able body of men that revised this Constitution for adaptation to the Confederate States came together they did unquestionably make some improvements in this Constitution. They made some changes that were not so—I need not discuss them—and very far from being improvements; but they made some that were clearly improvements, and one of them was to forbid the very practice that is causing this agitation here this afternoon. They imperatively forbade it in the confederate constitution. Not one of the gentlemen here who were in the confederate congress could adopt this practice there.

I said the Republicans were decided in this matter three years ago. It needs but the bare reference to it, for every man recalls that exciting discussion.

Now, sir, I propose to assert my independent judgment in this matter. This kind of legislation leaves no choice to the man who feels bound to vote the supplies for the Government. He must yield, he must vote for something bad, something that his judgment condemns, something wrong. He has to balance a right and a wrong and choose what he thinks to be the right at the confessed sacrifice of something else in his judgment.

The President ought to have the right to veto items and paragraphs and sections. But this practice opens the door to ill-considered and imperfect and hasty legislation. Such legislation is probably never complete and thorough. It makes partial corrections, and it very frequently does great injustice.

What are these matters of general legislation on this bill? I speak courteously and fairly and try to do so; but they are substantially the result of about a week's consideration of three gentlemen of the Appropriations Committee. They had other matters besides this to attend to, though there is comparatively little else, one would think, on the bill. Three gentlemen of the Appropriations Committee, acting as a sub-committee. Of course it comes here as the judgment of the whole committee; and I am bound to say it is, but that is virtually the extent of the consideration.

Now, I say legislation making such radical changes as to the Navy is a thing so important that it should come from the committee charged with that duty, and if it is likely to be unwilling or negligent it should be instructed by this body to prepare a bill within certain lines, and I say we cannot wisely legislate in a matter of that description without long and kind and frank and full consideration with the men who know most about what the Navy is and ought to be.

We have a right to expect good judgment and good advice from them, and we should get it. There are veteran officers of the Navy who have studied this subject these twenty, thirty, forty, fifty years. They have passed beyond the reach of personal consideration; they love their country; they have given all the evidence that men can give that they love their country. They certainly love the Navy. They are willing that reduction should be made. I know some of them have said so, and they expect it. I should like to have a board constituted of seven or five gentlemen, of whom a portion should be veteran naval officers and the rest, if you choose, legislators, and who should report to us, say next December, a scale, a plan upon which the personnel of the Navy may properly be reduced to six hundred or six hundred and fifty.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me right there, I should like to make a suggestion to him. He spoke about the consideration the bill should have.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think that was a mistake of fact that needs correction; it was merely a general proposition about the consideration the bill ought to have. I wish the Senator would allow me to run through with my remarks.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have watched here with a good deal of dissatisfaction the course taken that turns an attempt at a few remarks by a gentleman into a long wrangle with half a dozen. I say to the Senator with all kindness that I wish he would let me run through.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. I prefer to do it, and afterward if there should be a conversational debate I have no objection.

This practice throws upon one committee the work of universal legislation, and we have assented to this too long. There is probably not a single Senator who cannot be convicted of participation in the evil in some way or other. The result is to give the Appropriations Committee the entire control of the Navy, the entire control of the Army, and every other subject. Anything can get into some one of the appropriation bills, and not a single statute on the statute-book is safe. That is a wrong to the other committees; it is wrong to those of us whose judgments are compelled by being called on to vote for mixed subjects in one bill. It is confessedly, by the judgment of all students of legislation, a wrong to the general cause of fair popular government.

One of the gentlemen in favor of this bill as it stands said: Better take this, or harsher and more sweeping action will come, and the Navy may be laid low. Those were his words—the Navy may be laid low. Therefore, must we yield our better judgment, must we yield our honest opinion that the organization ought to be conducted in a different shape, lest the Navy may be crushed? By whom? It cannot be done except by these two legislative bodies, and our concurrence will be needed. No great wrong can be done to the Navy without our concurrence. This is a species of thumb-screwing, of compulsion to frighten us into doing something we do not like, lest something worse may be done.

It is a discourtesy to the House, some say. Not at all, sir. A discourtesy to differ with it! There is no discourtesy intended. It is not a discourtesy to vote out one clause from this legislation, nor two, nor three, nor four. They would agree to that. How, then, is it a discourtesy to say that this matter of a recast of the personnel of the Navy ought to be submitted to some more deliberate consideration? It is the high and wise purpose of this Government to say that all things shall be submitted to these two bodies. Why? That one may compel the other? No, sir; but with the expectation that there will be differences of opinion, and the hope that out of the differences there will come an avoidance of error. It is the expectation and the hope of our theory of government that there shall be differences between us, because these disclose and prevent errors.

Are we ready to enter upon a long contest with the House, asks one. Oh, no, sir. I feel the oppression of this weather, the length of this session, as much as anybody. Nevertheless I will vote just exactly as I think right upon this legislation on an appropriation bill.

Some remarks have been made about the number of officers on the Lancaster in 1862 and the number of officers now on that ship. In 1861, when the war broke out, we had, I think, 67 captains, 80 or 90 commanders, 327 lieutenants, and a few passed midshipmen. So hard pushed were we by our rapid organization of a navy, that we were obliged to take cadets from Annapolis half way or three-quarters through and put them in responsible positions on our ships, and call on the civilians of the country who had some knowledge of ships and of the sea to come in and make volunteer officers, and we were obliged to send ships to sea with just as few officers as could possibly handle them, and send them into battle imperfectly manned so far as the officers were concerned. We called in during the war about 5,000 to 6,000—I have not the exact figures—volunteers into the Navy, and all the earlier part of the war the ships were like the regiments, they were under instruction, and the trained naval officers who were in command of them never took off their clothes to sleep at night. They were anxious; they could hardly trust their ships to this imperfect force and to these new men. Gradually they were trained, cultivated to it, until, along in the latter end of the war, as it was with our cavalry and other branches of the service, we had a Navy of which we had every reason in the world to be proud.

That is one reason why the Lancaster, and not that more than many other ships, had less officers than she ought to have had at the beginning of the war, and many of those were comparatively untrained men, good sailors in the merchant marine, but not trained to warfare.

Mr. LOGAN. I hope the Senator, inasmuch as he refers to what I said, will allow me to correct his statement. The statement I made of the Lancaster was in 1864. It was not in the beginning of the war at all.

Mr. HAWLEY. The same reason would in some measure apply.

Mr. LOGAN. I made the comparison in 1864 and 1882, after we had our Navy full and complete. If the Senator will look at the record he will find that to be the case.

Mr. HAWLEY. The same reasoning will apply to it to some extent even in 1864. But that is not all. It is the business of the Navy to educate men, and we do put upon our ships rather more than the force absolutely necessary to work them. That is what the ships are for, and that is what the men are for—to be trained, to be exercised, to be tried. It was the old theory before the war, the old policy the idea that there should be three times as many officers as were necessary to run the ships; that one-third of them should be at sea and one-third of them should be on shore duty and one-third of them should be on waiting orders. That was the general idea and composition of the Navy, and that they should continually rotate in that manner—three years on sea duty, three years on shore duty, and three years off. Then, if war should suddenly break out, most of these men on shore duty and all these men waiting orders could be put instantly on the sea to work; and as to such civilian or shore duties as they were performing in charge of the navy-yards, the great part of that work could profitably be put upon civilians or upon retired officers letting the whole active force go to sea.

Some of these arguments very singularly go on as if it were a lamentable thing that these officers are not engaged in killing somebody. Why, sir, we are at peace. They are not earning their salaries by fighting battles; nobody expects that; and yet because they do not appear to be killing somebody they are thought to be unnecessary, and therefore we are to reduce the number, continue to crowd them out, to discourage them by blocking their way to promotion, &c. I am glad they are not at war; but if we are going to have anything like a competent body for war we must train them in time of peace.

In the olden times before the war we had no fixed number of officers. Unless I am greatly misinformed and my recollection fails me entirely we had no fixed number of officers in the Navy, but as ships increased from time to time the President nominated more officers to the Navy.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator does not want to state that as a fact.

Mr. HAWLEY. No; I do not. I am subject to correction in that matter; but my impression is that there was a considerable time when the exact number of officers was not limited.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator is very much mistaken. I can show him the law.

Mr. HAWLEY. There are not so many officers in excess as some gentlemen seem to think by any manner of means, nor are they idle.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not want to take the Senator's time, and I will merely state that if he will examine from 1794 to 1842 he will find that every statute in reference to the Navy prescribed the number of officers of every rank. I have the statute here of 1794, and following that up the Senator will find that the law always prescribed the number of officers.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will examine that and make the correction. I had an impression such as I have stated, and it was confirmed by a veteran officer of the Navy, seventy years old, who has been from childhood in the Navy. He said there was no practical limit by law in those early years. He may be mistaken, and so may I, but that is not material.

Mr. LOGAN. Here is the law that I can show the Senator.

Mr. HAWLEY. Seventy-four officers of the Navy are now engaged upon surveys which are exceedingly valuable to the country and to science in general; nor has our Navy done any more than its share of that international work. Double the number might be employed. Forty-one are instructors at the Naval Academy, or at tached to the practice-ships. That is their duty, their profitable use in time of peace. Seventeen are employed upon light-house duty. That is beneficent work. They can all be taken from that, however, in time of war; and so they can be taken from these surveys. Sixty-one are engaged in training men for the naval service. Six hundred are at sea. Perhaps upon that fact is based the limitation of six hundred in this bill—exactly six hundred at sea; and that is all we need, including the sixty-one employed on board training-ships. Forty are employed at the various naval stations on special duty, and eighty are sick or unemployed. Some are in the Coast Survey, some at the Naval Observatory, and some in other branches that do not occur to me at this moment, scattered about in scientific and valuable work.

I have some figures that differ from some others presented here in regard to the number in 1842 and in 1882. In 1842 there were 68 captains, 96 commanders, 328 lieutenants, 31 masters, 123 passed midshipmen, and 409 midshipmen at sea, a total of 1,055. Both these statements are without reference to the staff; and I say in passing that I think the staff might very profitably be reduced without injustice to the officers, because the surgeons can go into civil life easily, and so can paymasters. In 1882 there were rear-admirals 11, commodores 25, captains 50, commanders 90, lieutenant-commanders 80, lieutenants 280, masters 100, ensigns 100, midshipmen at sea 67, cadet-midshipmen at sea 129, cadet-midshipmen at Naval Academy 161. This takes in all the grades, and makes 1,093 as against 1,055 in 1842. I do not assert that this is literally correct, but I think it is substantially so.

The heavy retired list is referred to. I am happy to say that for one I do not feel that retired list as a burden, and I do not think the country does. It is much larger than the number of officers in the Navy is entitled to; much larger than a thousand officer should furnish; but it is because our whole Navy was very large a few years ago, and we were obliged to retire many men wounded, aged, and disabled in various ways. After the Navy shall have run on for five, ten, or fifteen years longer, with only 900 or 1,000 line officers, the retired list will be rapidly diminished.

There have been some mistaken statements made also about the pay of these gentlemen on the retired list. Those salaries have been adjusted irregularly by special legislation from time to time; but while some of them have gone up grades upon the retired list, as a rule they have not, and they do not now; and have not lately received any additional pay by reason of their promotion on that list.

Why not amend this bill in detail? some gentleman says. That is precisely the trouble; there he has touched the very difficulty. I am greatly dissatisfied with some of the clauses, am sure that they are wrong; but I am not qualified here ex tempore upon this floor to propose half a page, or a page, or two or three pages, reorganizing the Navy.

If we should read along through the bill I could pick here and pick there, and move to strike out this, that, or the other, and change it, and I shall be obliged to try that method of improving it. But that is not the way to do it. Take the best you can get from the two Houses of Congress and from the Navy, and let them report to us in December, under as imperative instructions as you please, and then we shall have a report, a careful consideration, with reasons from somebody for the reduction. That we have not now.

I have various ideas that occur to me. I would take out masters entirely from the Navy. It is a useless grade. I would take out ensigns; it is an ancient relic. I would make first, second, and third lieutenants, and then midshipmen, and then I would give every cadet after his four years a warrant as a midshipman and let him file into his place as a third lieutenant. These are names, but names have a great deal to do with the satisfaction and the honorable feeling of these men. I would change many of the names. I would regrade as to numbers. I am not opposed to a reform; I am not opposed, if necessary, to a reduction in numbers, though this extraordinary, I may say, fury for a reduction of the personnel of the Navy is a surprise to me; it has come upon the country anew within about three weeks, making an apparent reduction in the annual cost of the Navy that we may complete some old monitors whose construction to me is doubtful anyhow.

Mr. LOGAN. What reduction is made in the Navy?

Mr. HAWLEY. By this bill?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is a matter of figures. It is intended to strike off one hundred and twenty-five officers at any rate in time, though it will take considerable time. It is largely a prospective reduction.

Mr. LOGAN. Does it reduce a man?

Mr. HAWLEY. No, it does not turn an officer out, but it stops all promotion. I will not discuss those details. It has been argued here this afternoon, while the gentleman was out, by one of his colleagues on the committee, that it was a reduction of a million or two, and partly owing to the reduction of officers. Obviously it is intended to cut down one hundred and twenty-five officers.

Mr. LOGAN. It will in time.

Mr. HAWLEY. What we want is not another example of vicious legislation upon a general appropriation bill, but what we want is a navy. The whole country has been criticising us, censuring us, and calling for one, two, three, four, five years past for a navy, and we are not making a navy.

Mr. PLUMB. Not for officers of the Navy, but for a navy.

Mr. HAWLEY. They have been calling for a navy, and they have not been agitating for a reduction of officers. Whether if they were studying those matters they would not say perhaps you might cut a few officers off, I do not say; but that has not been the thing that has attracted their attention. The newspapers and general writers, the essayists, the magazine writers of the country have not troubled themselves as to whether you had forty lieutenants more than you ought to have or whether you would not save a few dollars by obstructing the promotion of these young gentlemen, but they have reproached us again and again and again with having nothing but thirty or forty old hulks and not one single first-rate fighting ship. We are at the mercy of some of the relatively weakest governments in the whole world, who are yet comparatively strong in their navies. We dare not resent an insult from Chili to-day.

Mr. LOGAN. Now, I should like to ask, inasmuch as the Senator is making himself the defender of the Naval Committee in its attack upon the Appropriations Committee, if he will tell the Senate and the country at what time the Naval Committee has ever reported a bill to increase the Navy.

Mr. HAWLEY. Hold yourself with patience.

Mr. LOGAN. What kind of a bill was it, and when was it introduced?

Mr. HAWLEY. I have the bill right here, sir; the bill was introduced in the House by the Naval Committee of the House in answer to public sentiment.

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, no; the Senate committee, not the House committee. We are not attacked to-day by the House committee, but by the majority of the committee of the Senate who are so excited by this. I remember the only thing they have done. Let the Senator produce what they have done to increase the Navy.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think the Senator has had a great many opportunities in life to learn that he would have done better if he had been patient a few moments. I do not know anybody who has had more opportunities to learn that than the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LOGAN. I have not learned very fast, that is true.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is quite true. The public sentiment of the country demanded a navy, and in answer to that a very able commission was created last year to study that subject and to report what classes of new vessels and how many of them it would be wise for us to build. The Naval Committee of the House acted on that report. The committee of the Senate did wait upon them more than I wished them to do; they were not as energetic as I wished they had been upon that matter; and they would have stood better in this debate if they had done it. I will say that if it is a comfort to the Senator—

Mr. LOGAN. No comfort at all.

Mr. HAWLEY. But the committee of the House was industrious, energetic, and enthusiastic. It studied this question day after day and week after week and prepared a very good bill, and I was strongly in hopes that something would come up from the House giving us at least the beginning of a reasonable scheme for the creation of new vessels, that we might have something to put our men upon. But we are precisely reversed in our action. Instead of having the agreeable duty of considering that matter here, we are called upon to curtail so much as we do have, we are called upon to reduce, to discourage the personnel of the Navy.

Our ships are feeble, out of order, behind the time. There is one possible excuse for it. The governments of the Old World have been spending money by the million, the five, the twenty, and the one hundred millions, in making magnificent experiments in the creation of a navy. We have the benefit of all that money. Some of those ships, costing two, three, four, five million dollars, we never should imitate.

The money has been spent for our benefit, and fortunately no war has compelled us to make a navy in the mean time. But now we can go to work. Instead of that scheme which quite wisely has been brought in, which is wisely set forth by a naval commission, we are asked by this bill to reduce the personnel. That is all that we have that is good. There are some good things in the Navy, some good for harbor defense, some very passable sea-vessels, but you cannot challenge any government in the world that has got twenty ships to fight on the sea to-day; you could challenge it to a harbor fight. We have fourteen passable monitors, but there is not one of those which would not be knocked to pieces by any one of the ten or fifteen first-class ships of the French, Italian, or English navy. There is no one of those monitors that could stand a 1,700-pound shot.

The personnel of the Navy is good, as good as any country has. There is no better school, no school so good, I think, as Annapolis among all the special schools of the kind in the world. The men who come out of that are gentlemen, they behave as gentlemen, with as few exceptions as you will find anywhere; nor is the enterprise so desperate, I might say so foolhardy, that you cannot find the men to come forward by the score ready for it.

Mr. BUTLER. They are accomplished officers, too.

Mr. HAWLEY. Accomplished officers in every technical detail of their profession; learned in it. So other governments testify; so their record shows; so their writings show. Call them near to the mouth of the very infernal regions at a day's notice, and you can have as brave a set of men as ever went into battle. But instead of giving them a navy, we say here: "You young gentlemen of twenty-two or twenty-three, right out of the academy, with six years of the best education given to any man in the world, cannot have the petty satisfaction of a warrant as midshipmen for several years; you cannot be made an ensign under a number of years, and as for being a master, a relic of the old time, a master, to say nothing of a mere lieutenant, you may wait until you are thirty or thirty-five, forty or forty-five years of age, but you cannot have it," and under bills like this we shall have gray-headed midshipmen.

What sort of promotion is offered? Two men shall go out of grade at the top before one shall come in from grade B, and then there must be four out of A before one can come in from C; there must be eight out of A before one can come in from D. In the mean time the young men at the bottom of the list are checked in their progress upward, their ambition taken away, and you are trying to wear out the Navy at the head, and wait until the old men shall die before you let the procession move at the rear, like a long queue going to the post-office. You have so blocked it up that the man in the rear cannot move for ten, fifteen, or twenty years.

Do you expect them to die? If I had a boy of twenty-five in the Navy with any ambition or power in him I would drag him out of it and tell him to wait until there was a war and then go in. Is he going to wait until he is forty or forty-five before he can call himself a lieutenant? Then he had better go into civil life. That is not the way.

There is more needed for fighting than guns and ships. There is needed the temper, the patient, still temper of men trained, respected, honored, taught to respect themselves and their profession, ready to meet the world, ready with alacrity, grace, and desperation to throw away their lives for the old flag. We have got to build men of that kind as well as build vessels. They are to be trained to it. You cannot keep them stupid and discouraged for twenty years in peace and expect to develop them into high-spirited, gallant, dauntless men the moment the drum sounds for war.

I am ready for a commission. I am ready to promise these gentlemen that I will give my careful consideration, my respectful consideration, and probably my support to a bill reported by a commission of naval officers and Congressmen reducing the Navy in numbers somewhat and regrading it, striking out two grades. I am willing to do that, but I would then very much rather see a bill come here to begin to give us something of a navy. Modern science has told us we can have beautiful, swift, powerful, marvelous triumphs of human invention and genius. Yes, there is a little laid aside for two swift steel cruisers. In time of war they might be allowed under plea of distress to go into some harbor and stay twenty-four hours to get coal. That is all we could do; we have no coaling port of our own; but they cannot stop to fight any one of the armor-clad ships. They are good to run. That has not been the character of the American Navy in what few wars we have had. They are good to run. It is not chasing alone. They could chase poor merchant ships and might fight some of their own class; but from all the heavier swift ships of foreign nations they would be obliged to run, and run under sail after a few days, for we have no coaling stations around the world.

One of our first duties is to create powerful vessels for harbor and shore defense, and these swift policemen of the seas are well in their place, and they are needed; but that is only a fraction of the sort of navy we should build.

Sir, it is a navy I want, and a reformed navy—a reformed navy, not a rotten one.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I think it more than probable that the Senate is ready to come to a vote on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, and so I will not take much time. I am very glad that the issue of late has been fairly presented. This is not a question of conflict or squabble between two committees of the Senate. I insist that it shall not be so considered or so determined. It is something more than that. There is at the bottom of this bill an honest purpose to reduce the expenditures of Government money and to legitimately reform the American Navy; and it is not an essential thing whether that proposition, good as it is, is brought before Congress and before the country by the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Had the Committee on Naval Affairs any time within the past seven months of this session introduced a bill here covering these propositions, or anything kindred to them, or laying the keel for a new Navy, such as would please the Senator from Connecticut, or trimming down the superfluous ranks and adjusting promotion in such way as would seem good to them, every member of the Committee on Appropriations would have bidden their bill God speed, and there would have been no question of jealousy about that committee.

It is not a question between the two committees, and I am very glad that the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Connecticut have put the issue squarely as objecting to legislation upon an appropriation bill, and I am glad that the Senator from Ohio, and the Senator from Florida especially, went into that question with some profundity, and pictured to us the abuses derivable from legislation upon appropriation bills. So that hereafter the Committee on Appropriations with what is left to it may know that the way to report an appropriation bill is to stick to the written law and to give to the Senate a bill that when any clause is questioned it can lay its forefinger upon the statute and give the law that rests at the bottom.

But granting all that, this bill is legitimately before the Senate. I do not need to go over the ground that has been traversed by so many Senators. It comes here from the House of Representatives under their rules, and the things that were reported to the House of Representatives by the Committee on Appropriations of that House that were without their rules were shorn from the bill when points of order were made by members rising in their seats; and when it came to us everything in it had been submitted to the scrutiny of the rules of the House, and we took, under the order of the Senate referring to us this bill, a bill that had been sent here by the House and in which everything there was in order and is in order.

Now, I want to give some of the reasons, and only in brief, in addition to this bill being in order and being fitting as a matter of order for us to report to the Senate, why it was that its provisions intrinsically commended themselves to us. I will not go over many things, because I will not take time.

So many tables have been used here and so many tables have been cited and been questioned that I have taken the pains in some things to go back to the authorities. I hold in my hand the Official Navy Register for the year 1865, and here I have the Official Navy Register for the year 1882. I have no tables made by any disinterested or interested man, but I read from the records of the two. I turn to the force of the Navy in 1865, the year when the war had finished, when it had been swelled in every direction, when danger had summoned men to the front and they had been promoted and made officers in high rank, when, if at any time, the Navy would be full, and more than full, and ready for depletion, then would be the time. I looked to the organization of the Navy in 1865, the year that the war rolled up its curtain and was ended.

I find upon that 5 rear-admirals; I find on the register of 1882 10 rear-admirals; I find in 1865 15 commodores; I find in 1882 25 commodores; I find in 1865 35 captains; I find in 1882 50 captains; I find in 1865 67 commanders; I find in 1882 90; I find in lieutenant-commanders alone an excess that year of 169, and in 1882 80 only, and when I come to lieutenants I find, in 1865, 113, and in 1882 280.

Now, sir, without going into lower ranks, the Committee on Appropriations believe that that disproportion is undue; that it is a thing that, being in order under a bill sent from the House of Representatives, we ought to help correct, and we have tried to correct it in the bill before the Senate. But the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania says, "Not one step shall you take in that direction at this time to regulate that disproportion; consider it no further."

I turn to the matter of the pay of officers and men. I find in 1881-'82 appropriated "for officers on sea duty, shore and other duty, $4,044,500, for the officers alone; for officers on the retired list, $697,925;" in the aggregate, $4,742,425; while for the seamen of the Navy, the men who man the ships and who must be called upon to do the fighting, I find an appropriation of $2,490,000 against nearly $5,000,000 for the officers. The Committee on Appropriations believe that as this bill is in order under the rules of the House, that is a disproportion that the Senate of the United States ought to try to begin to correct. But the Senator from Pennsylvania comes in and says, "No, the Senate of the United States shall not consider that, but shall strike it from the appropriation bill."

I find only 4,000 men in all the Navy, appropriated for to the extent of $2,490,000, and 2,200 officers appropriated for to the tune of the people's money spent of $4,044,500, and you will not allow us to move an inch in the direction of correcting that. I find that this bill proceeds in the direction of saving after it is passed; that under the provisions limiting promotions hereafter there will be saved in annual pay upon the commodores, $100,000; upon passed assistant surgeons, $16,000; upon paymasters, $52,000; upon passed assistant paymasters, $20,000; upon assistant paymasters, $7,750; upon engineers, $26,000; upon passed assistant engineers, $100,000; upon assistant engineers, $82,000, and upon the lower grades, $98,160; making an annual saving of $502,410 of the people's money without the establishment being affected an iota, and the Senator from Pennsylvania says that the attempt of the Committee on Appropriations to regulate and restrict and save this money is not a thing to be considered, but shall be struck ruthlessly from this bill.

I find to-day a list of officers stationed in Washington, as follows: 1 Admiral, 1 Vice-Admiral, 4 rear-admirals, 12 commodores, 12 captains, 11 commanders, 12 lieutenant-commanders, 28 lieutenants, 14 masters, 6 ensigns, 2 midshipmen, 6 medical directors, 4 medical inspectors, 3 surgeons, 7 passed assistant surgeons, 3 pay inspectors, 3 paymasters, 3 passed assistant paymasters, 5 assistant paymasters, 11 chief engineers, 14 passed assistant engineers, 5 professors of mathematics, 2 naval constructors, 2 civil engineers, 2 secretaries to Admiral and Vice-Admiral, marine officers, colonels, 2; majors, (general staff,) 3; majors, (line,) 1; captains, (special duty,) 2; first lieutenants, 1; second lieutenants, 3; warrant officers, and so on.

The Committee on Appropriations believe that it is time to look into an establishment that is so run, where such an enormous force as that is maintained here, when no man can put his hand on actual duty that they can do, and when to-day if they are not found lobbying against this bill in the lobbies of the Senate and importuning Senators to vote against it and strike down the provisions of reform, you cannot tell what they are doing. And the Senator from Pennsylvania says it is not fitting for the Senate of the United States to consider these subjects, but that you must strike them out of the bill.

He goes further. Last night he amended his resolution, which at first only struck at the organization of the Navy, and has made it so broad that it seeks to embrace everything else that the House attempted to do and that the Committee on Appropriations has ventured in its jurisdiction to assent to the House of Representatives doing, and that is the navy-yards. On page 16 of this bill there is a provision recognizing the enormous abuses of the navy-yards, abuses that Senators on the other side have thundered in our ears volumes to be found in the RECORD, and now we are seeking to cure some of those alleged abuses as we do on page 16, and there it is provided that the Secretary of the Navy, if he believes it is not in the due economy of the Government to maintain all these yards, shall suspend work at those where the purposes of the Government do not need actual and present work, with a limitation that he shall at least keep two navy-yards on the Atlantic, one north and another south, and one upon the Pacific coast. One reason why it was believed that this was a fitting thing to do is found in some of the figures that I will give here.

What does the Senate suppose it is costing now to maintain these navy-yards, where in the aggregate the amount of Government work to-day or for a year past has not been more than two or three million dollars? Let me give some of the figures:

Annual cost of civil employés of the several navy-yards:
Washington..... $99,168.50

Not including the laborers, not including the men who are at work doing the Government work, but the mere civil force, the clerks and writers and assistant clerks and watchmen.

We have been spending $99,168.50 a year on this navy-yard, Senators. We have spent in Boston, $76,588.40; in Portsmouth, New Hampshire, $34,322.95; at Mare Island, $41,823.15; at League Island, $30,415.25; at Pensacola, $13,795.50; at Norfolk, Virginia, $34,016.35; at New York, $47,885.75; total pay of civil force to keep running and open these navy-yards, $378,015.85 every year; and in addition to that there are kept at these yards naval officers costing, at Portsmouth, $70,500 a year; at Boston, $102,970, and in the receiving-ship there, $27,400; at the naval station at New London, where there is no more of a navy-yard than there is here in the Botanic Garden, $24,300 for officers sent there; navy-yard in New York, $148,450 a year, and on the receiving-ship there, $32,624; navy-yard at League Island, $100,940 for naval officers every year, receiving-ship, $22,400; navy-yard at Washington, $92,760, and the receiving-ship, $11,800; navy-yard at Norfolk, $82,450, receiving-ship, $26,000; navy-yard at Pensacola, $27,820; navy-yard at Mare Island, $77,580; receiving-ship at Mare Island, $22,100; total every year, $870,094 of expenditures for salaries of naval officers at these navy-yards; and the grand and disgraceful total is that in spending $11,957,803.65 of the Government money at these different yards during the last five years it has cost the Government to spend that money $10,566,171.79.

And when the Committee on Appropriations comes in with a bill that the House has sent us, trying to reform these disgraceful things, the Senator from Pennsylvania rises and says, "We shall not consider that, but shall strike it from the bill, and every navy-yard Senator, the Senator from Connecticut representing New London, the Senator from Florida representing Pensacola, the Senator from Pennsylvania representing League Island, and the Senator from California representing Mare Island, every statesman in the United States Senate representing a navy-yard rises to the front and is at once seized with a spasm of interest in the American Navy and preaches to us the glories of the past and the gallant deeds that the men have done in the naval force.

I tell you, sir, and Senators, that our American Navy needs to be delivered from its friends who seek to perpetuate these abuses. Some of us have gone through long years of apprenticeship in an interest in the American Navy and have shown our interest in its legitimate welfare, and to-day, because we attempt to strike at abuses that are throttling that glorious establishment, because we seek to extirpate the ideas that have grown up and are beginning to make it obnoxious to the American people, we are assailed as if we had no interest in the glory of the Navy of the past.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. HALE. Oh, yes.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I will ask the Senator how long have the navy-yards on the Atlantic been maintained?

Mr. HALE. Just as long a time as the Naval Committee of the Senate has sat in its torpid condition and refused to report any bill to cure these things. That is the measure of the time they have endured, and they would have endured longer but for the action of the House of Representatives. There is no credit that the Committee on Appropriations claims for this bill; we would not have ventured to put these provisions on, but the House of Representatives, the popular body, charged with the administration of raising the revenues and with the initiating of appropriation bills, have dealt with this great grievance and have sent us their bill; and so the Committee on Appropriations has reported it after it had been sent unanimously to the committee by the Senate, and now at once there is lobbying and there is hurrying to and fro and every appliance brought to bear and every arrow is aimed against the Committee on Appropriations because it has reported this bill.

I do not care a fig about the Committee on Appropriations; it would be better for us personally if the Senate would strike all this out and leave the committee hereafter to report legitimate bills and not spend hours every day in the Committee on Appropriations examining these questions. It is not because the Committee on Appropriations wants to do this thing that the bill is before the Senate, but we represent the sovereign majesty of the popular branch of the American Congress that has seen these things that a wayfaring man cannot fail to see and that has sent the bill here, and the American Senate ought to see to it that it is not strangled in the ruthless way that the Senator from Pennsylvania proposes to strangle it; not by moving, as has been done with scores of appropriation bills that have had legislation upon them, to strike out where you will or amend where you must or provide other things where you need, but ruthlessly to strike them all out and throw this defiance at the House of Representatives.

Now, sir, who is against these things that have led the Committee on Appropriations to deal thus with the Senate, to send these bills in here? The House is for the measure, the committees of the House are for it, the Committee on Appropriations have sanctioned it and sent it in here. Is the Naval Committee against it? The head of the Navy Department is in entire sympathy with this bill. Sitting down in his place and striving to do that which is right and proper, he believes in reforming the Navy, and reducing it to such proportions that while not impairing its efficiency yet shall make it a better organization. He is in favor of this bill.

Now, I want Senators before they vote to strangle these provisions to know that upon the test vote they are declaring that the House of Representatives are wrong in the bent that they have given to this bill; that the House of Representatives have no right, or if they have a right that it shall be met by antagonism of the Senate against everything in the way of reform.

Senators have had no opportunity on any appropriation bill yet to vote for or against a reform measure. It has been incorporated upon this bill; it stands here alone of the appropriation bills with these features upon it. Now the Senate can do as it pleases, it can strike them all down; it can declare to the American people that nothing shall be done and that will be the end of it, and no committee will be more relieved personally in its labors than the Committee on Appropriations; but the man is bat-blind who does not see that this subject goes deeper and lower than these petty squabbles and jealousies of committees.

Senators cannot dispose of this thing in this way, nor on the question of putting legislation upon an appropriation bill. It is in order. The House of Representatives has made it in order, and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate have not added a thing to it making it out of order, except perhaps the provision in relation to the retirement of the Admiral, and that can be struck out on a point of order here. The whole matter has, not the Committee on Appropriations under it, but the sovereign majesty of the popular branch of the Government, the House of Representatives. Now vote them down if Senators think that is best.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not wish to make a speech on this subject, and I shall have but little to say. I think, however, that no proposition has ever been presented in a legislative body so entirely indefensible in any point of view, so destitute of even a plausible reason, as the action of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. President, what is the first objection to this action of the committee in reason and in argument, and not in declamation and not discoursing upon subjects not connected with the proposition? The Appropriations Committee bring in a bill here which deals with subjects that are connected only in a cognate and remote manner with the question of the appropriations of the Government, and they say to the Senate and to all Senators not upon that committee, "We deny to you the ordinary aids of legislation; we deny to you the examination and the report of a committee charged with the special duty of collating the facts and gathering the ideas which are pertinent to this subject, and we demand of you that you shall allow us to speak ex cathedra in regard to the facts and the law that govern and control this subject," notwithstanding the rules of the Senate absolutely require that that committee shall be charged with the sole duty of saying what are the requisite appropriations according to the law as it stands and germane to the existing condition of facts, not with regard to what may be better in the judicial, legislative, or executive departments of the Government. For if the argument of gentlemen is worth anything that because a subject may be improved by changing the existing law a reference to the Committee on Appropriations carries a power to change the existing law to that extent, then why have you committees upon other subjects, why upon the judiciary, why upon the Army, why upon the Navy?

The very commission which was given to this committee, and must have been when this bill was referred to them, was that they should consider what appropriations are necessary under the existing law of the country, and not what may be done by changing the entire system of law.

Then it is said, "Why, this bill came from the House." Gentlemen might as well have said in argument that it came from the north or the south pole, because when here, by the Constitution it is to be considered subject to and according to the rules of procedure which this body has established, and the Committee on Appropriations are charged with the duty of considering that bill according to the course of proceeding which the Senate has determined, and not which the House has determined. That unquestionably is their plain and apparent duty.

Therefore, Mr. President, the objection to this is that when Senators make eloquent speeches here, citing the opinions of Secretaries as to deficiencies in the Navy, the necessities for reform, and the action of the House, they say to us, "We deny to you the opportunity of examination as to whether our statements and opinions are true; whether the conclusions we have arrived at are correct, and we demand that you accept our thoughts for your thoughts, our judgment for yours, and our opinion for that which the Constitution and your duty require you to make after an intelligent investigation of the facts for yourself." That is the reason why this legislation is entirely indefensible.

Gentlemen refer to the fact that in great emergencies appropriation bills have, according to the history of legislation, contained legislation upon subjects properly belonging to other committees; but they fail to remember that it was the emergency, the public necessity alone, that justified that action, and that until you supply the emergency, the necessity for immediate, sudden action, they have no predicate upon which to justify taking away from those other committees and, more important, from Senators at large, the aid of the examination of a committee and its report. They have no ground in reason to stand upon.

Therefore, Mr. President, I say for one that, whatever may be the condition of the Navy, no such necessity for sudden, immediate action has been demonstrated here as will justify depriving Senators of the opportunity of forming an intelligent and a just judgment upon the propositions which they have made. For that reason I shall vote for the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WINDOM. I shall take but about one minute, Mr. President. I have no prejudices against or for either committee; I take no part in the contest between the Naval Committee and the Committee on Appropriations, but I stand to-day where I stood three years ago. The Senate will remember very distinctly that an extra session of Congress was called, and that we remained in session over three months on this very proposition. I then opposed general legislation on appropriation bills. I was at that time a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and its chairman.

I then fought this proposition, and I am opposed to it to-day. I do not go into the merits of the amendments at all. I believe that there is more danger from vicious legislation by incorporating general provisions of law on an appropriation bill than there is benefit to be attained by these amendments. Therefore I stand precisely where I did at that time.

Now, the question has been asked, "Why not meet these general provisions as they arise?" If the Senator from West Virginia and others who have spoken are correct, the striking out of these general provisions of law requires considerable modification of the appropriations, and, therefore, I think the shortest way out for those of us who are opposed to general legislation on appropriation bills is to recommit the bill to the committee in order that they may adjust it to the needed amendments.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions:

- A bill (S. No. 790) for the relief of Joseph Hertford;
- A bill (S. No. 838) to grant the right of way for railroad purposes through the lands of the United States powder depot near Dover, New Jersey;
- A bill (S. No. 1582) to amend the statutes in relation to copyright;
- A bill (S. No. 1435) for the relief of Albert Elsberg, administrator of Gustave Elsberg, deceased;
- A joint resolution (S. R. No. 81) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the Saint Lawrence River; and
- A joint resolution (S. R. No. 83) relating to the memorial address on the life and character of the late James A. Garfield.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

- A bill (S. No. 602) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Hyacinthe Robert Agnel, deceased;
- A bill (S. No. 979) regulating fees and the practice in extradition cases; and
- A bill (S. No. 1255) to provide for the sale of a part of the reservation of the Omaha tribe of Indians in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 6242) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 271) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan twenty-five wall tents to the colony of Russian Hebrew refugees at Cimarron, Foote County, Kansas.

JAPANESE INDEMNITY FUND.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to present a conference report. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont presents a conference report.

The Acting Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 1052, in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
T. W. FERRY,
JNO. T. MORGAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
C. G. WILLIAMS,
W. W. RICE,
P. V. DEUSTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate further insist on its amendments and ask for a further conference.

Mr. CONGER. I have no information of any kind what the point of difference is between the two committees, and if it is anything important, Senators should know what they vote upon. We should have a two or three minutes' statement to enlighten us.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report was read. It is simply a disagreement.

Mr. CONGER. The report simply says the committee disagreed. The committee may possibly know on what point they disagree.

Mr. MORRILL. They disagreed upon the amendments made by the Senate. The Senate struck out all the provisions except for the payment back of the principal.

Mr. CONGER. One vote in the Senate which makes this difference between the Senate and the House would have changed it the other way.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator is mistaken. There were three or four amendments voted on, and the votes were different. One vote would not have changed it at any time.

Mr. CONGER. There was one time when the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] proposed making a return of the original sum with 5 per cent. interest on it, and it was lost by only one vote.

Mr. MORRILL. But there were several Senators opposed to it absent.

Mr. CONGER. I am talking about the record, not what the Senator thinks men might have done. It was so near as that. That is not a very distinctive declaration of the views of the Senate, and it might perhaps be well enough to test the question whether the Senate would make any other proposition, or recede from its proposition carried by one majority.

Mr. MORRILL. Make your motion.

Mr. CONGER. The Senator says "Make your motion." Not being on the committee, I do not know exactly the condition in which the matter stands now; but I do think that the differences between the House and Senate as indicated by the vote, especially on the particular amendment to which I allude, might be arranged. I regret to say that I gave a vote which would have made that one majority in the other direction, and I should be very happy if I had an opportunity to vote now in favor of giving 5 per cent. If I had voted as I should have voted, except for the fact that I was in favor of returning the whole sum, the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut would have prevailed.

Mr. MORRILL. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that the House has already agreed to the report of the conference committee, and will ask for another conference.

Mr. CONGER. I suppose there must be a free conference; but if there was a way to hint in a delicate manner that the allowance of 5 per cent. would be acceptable to the Senate, I should be very glad to make that insinuation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate further insist on its amendments to the Japanese indemnity bill and ask for a further conference?

Mr. HOAR. I suppose the House conferees can take notice that the Senate majority have changed their mind.

Mr. MORRILL. I think when we come to have another vote it will be found that the Senate has not changed its mind, but is very emphatically the other way.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore being authorized to appoint the committee, Mr. BAYARD, Mr. WINDOM, and Mr. SHERMAN were appointed the conferees on the part of the Senate.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. MAXEY asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2167) to authorize the construction of a railroad and wagon bridge over the Rio Grande River at Laredo, Texas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Finance:

- A bill (H. R. No. 2428) for the relief of Thomas Walsh & Co.; and
- A bill (H. R. No. 6682) to fix the salary of the collector of customs of the district of Chicago, Illinois.

FEES AND PRACTICE IN EXTRADITION CASES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 979) regulating fees and the practice in extradition cases; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HYACINTHE ROBERT AGNEL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] to a bill which the Chair will lay before the Senate.

The Acting Secretary read the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 602) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Hyacinthe Robert Agnel, deceased; which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to the heirs at law and legal representatives of Hyacinthe Robert Agnel, deceased, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $650, in full satisfaction of his claim upon the Government for money expended by said Agnel for repairs and improvements made upon professors' house at West Point Military Academy.

Mr. SEWELL. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment made by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENTS TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. PLUMB and Mr. SAUNDERS submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 5812) to establish post-routes; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 60) to grant a right of way for a railroad and telegraph line through the lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians to the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, and for other purposes.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON.]

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. President, I am sorry that I do not see the Senator from Pennsylvania, who offered this resolution, in his seat, because I wish to address to him a practical question in relation to the further conduct of the business of the Senate if his resolution should prevail. I am as much in favor of refusing general legislation on appropriation bills as any man in the Senate, and I will go as far to secure that rule as any man here.

I desire to see the practice adopted alluded to by my colleague, when every appropriation bill shall be purely an appropriation bill, and nothing else; and it is in reference to that that I am now addressing the Senator from Pennsylvania. Suppose his resolution is passed, and the Committee on Appropriations reports back this bill to the Senate stripped of all its general legislation, and also changed in all the items of appropriation so as to make it conform to the naval establishment as it now exists? The bill passes the Senate in that condition. It goes back to the House. The House non-concurs. The Senate insists, and asks for a committee of conference. I believe that is the regular order. The committee of conference take possession of the bill and the amendments. If the conferees of the Senate are true to the instructions now given by the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania they will say to the conferees of the House that it is useless to discuss any of these questions pertaining to general legislation; that they have their instructions from the Senate, delivered in the most forcible and solemn manner, in the form of a resolution directed to one of its standing committees. There is a disagreement. That disagreement is reported to the Senate and reported to the House. I wish to ask gentlemen now (and upon the general indication of the disposition in one direction will depend my vote) whether they are then prepared to adhere and refuse a further conference if it is demanded. What will be the result? The House must yield or the bill must fail.

Mr. LOGAN. That is it exactly.

Mr. PENDLETON. The House must yield, or the bill must fail. Now, I am prepared to go to that extent. I believe this bill ought not to pass. I am prepared to go to that extent and require a bill to be sent here which is purely an appropriation bill. But suppose gentlemen do not agree with me, and suppose the Senate is not then prepared to adhere, what is the result? The Senate insist; they appoint another committee of conference, and we have all these important measures in relation to the Navy settled in a committee of conference without the least consideration by the Senate. I am unwilling to see that alternative brought about, and I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania, and those who vote with him, whether at that particular juncture they are prepared to insist upon the action now being taken, or whether they are then going to yield and give up the reorganization of the Navy to a committee of conference. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Does the Senator ask me what the course of the House will be in this matter?

Mr. PENDLETON. I am not asking the course of the House, but the course of the Senate.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I cannot tell what the course of the Senate will be. I take it for granted that if the Senate pass this resolution they will adhere to it. I suppose any member of the Senate who votes for the resolution will not be willing to refer the matter altogether to a conference committee. We can stay here to see it out.

Mr. HALE. The Senator would be willing to stay here as long as anybody else?

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Just as long.

Mr. BECK. There is only one way that you could solve that question. Let the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from New Hampshire and some friend of theirs on this side be put upon the conference and tell them to stick.

Mr. BUTLER. It seems to me that this is the most extraordinary proposition I have ever known in the Senate in my life. The proposition is deliberately made that unless we vote for a measure which comes from the House, a threat, a direct threat, is made by the friends of the measure on this floor that we shall defeat the appropriation bill. It is the most extraordinary proposition I have heard of in my life.

Mr. LOGAN. Who has made any threat?

Mr. BUTLER. Threats have been made here since this discussion began that if we did not take the proposition now, just as the Committee on Appropriations have seen fit to bring it in—

Mr. HALE. Who has ever said that?

Mr. BUTLER. Every Senator who has spoken on behalf of the Appropriations Committee has either said it directly or implied it.

Mr. HALE. All that I said was, consider these provisions, debate them, discuss them, modify them, amend them, strike them out, if you will, so that the House will see that it is the deliberate judgment of the Senate upon discussion and amendment, and not a thing thrust directly in their face and obliging them to put it upon us, which is what you do if you adopt the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUTLER. Then, if Senators on this floor who have conscientious scruples about putting general legislation upon an appropriation bill should take it off, then you say the House will force us to abandon the appropriation bill or admit this general legislation.

Mr. HALE. The Senate by adopting the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania does not even allow the Senate the privilege of making a point of order against these provisions as they come up. The Senator from Pennsylvania shuts us off by his proposition. He shuts the Senate off from the privilege even of making points of order, one by one, when these provisions come up. He is not content with all the rights that are inherent to the Senate, but must thrust this thing forward offensively to the House.

Mr. BUTLER. As I understand, the Senator from Maine, the Senator from Illinois, and the Senator from Kentucky have all insisted that the point of order cannot be made because the matter came in the bill from the House; that it is not amenable to a point of order.

Mr. HALE. The Senator can make a point of order upon everything the Committee on Appropriations reported.

Mr. BUTLER. But one cannot make a point of order upon any proposition that comes from the House, I understand. That is all there is in it.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from South Carolina allow me to say to him that when I addressed the Senate this morning I not only said that I desired discussion, but I said there were many propositions in the bill concerning which I differ with the majority of the Committee on Appropriations, and I propose to vote against them; that all I wanted was to have a fair hearing and for the Senate to have a fair hearing, and let us discuss those provisions. We cannot make a point of order against what the House has done, but every amendment or suggestion made by the Committee on Appropriations is subject to a point of order.

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say one word before the vote is taken. I want to say that there is no more obnoxious legislation in the bill than was sent to us and urged upon us by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] in the amendment which I shall read. He sent to the Committee on Appropriations the following amendment to the bill making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes:

Insert the following:

"For establishing a coaling dock and naval storehouse at Port Royal Harbor, South Carolina, $30,000."

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator state it accurately, if he pleases?

Mr. BECK. Here is the amendment. I will send the amendment to the Reporter.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator knows perfectly well that that amendment was referred to the Committee on Appropriations by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BECK. That makes it all the worse that the Committee on Naval Affairs should now be complaining about legislation on the appropriation bill when they sent that amendment to us through the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. That is not general legislation, I submit to the Senator, any more than it is general legislation to authorize the building of a fort in this country.

Mr. HALE. The Senator does not think that a coaling station could be established without a new law?

Mr. BUTLER. Of course it could not.

Mr. HALE. You therefore reported it from the Naval Committee, and you asked the Committee on Appropriations to make that new law.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not on the Naval Committee.

Mr. HALE. They reported it to us?

Mr. BUTLER. Precisely; and the chairman of that committee very quietly refused to adopt it, as I understand, and yet that same committee, which refused that amendment, takes in one gulp every thing that comes from the House and says it is gospel, and that everybody else must say it is gospel or he is defeating the appropriation bill. That is the argument presented by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE and others addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield further?

Mr. BECK. I do not yield further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky has the floor.

Mr. BECK. Again, the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. ROLLINS,] who has been so furious against new legislation on the bill and has called us usurpers and everything else, offered an amendment. The only complaint he makes against us is that we did not heed him, did not adopt his amendment, did not pay the respect to him in committee that he thought the merits of his amendment demanded. He proposed this amendment:

At the end of line 578 add the following:

"The sum of $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for the manufacture or purchase of the necessary tools or plant for the construction of iron or steel vessels and their armament in the appropriate navy-yards."

Mr. ROLLINS. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir; a great many of them.

Mr. ROLLINS. My only regret is that the Committee on Appropriations did not adopt that amendment and prepare our yards to enter into a little competition with contractors in building ships for the Navy. I think they would have exhibited a vast amount of wisdom and showed the country that they purposed to promote the welfare of the nation and save money if they had adopted the amendment which was proposed by the Committee on Naval Affairs and had some competition between the Navy Department proper and the contractors, or those men who purpose to build ships of war for the Government of the United States. Therefore—

Mr. BECK. Come back to the question, is not that new legislation?

Mr. BUTLER. It is not general legislation.

Mr. ROLLINS. If the Senator from Kentucky will allow me in one moment I will answer that point, and I will answer it so that he will understand it.

Mr. BECK. I ask it is new legislation? Yes, or no? He cannot answer. He knows it is.

Mr. ROLLINS. If the Senator will give me a chance I will answer.

Mr. BECK. I gave the Senator about a minute, when he stood dumb as an oyster. He cannot answer.

Mr. ROLLINS. You ask me a question and then rule me out; that is what you do.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] came before us, the Senator who moves this new resolution about legislation. He came before us on behalf of the Committee on Naval Affairs, who are making all this trouble, and he proposed to insert in the naval appropriation bill the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Postmaster-General, together with three Senators and three Representatives in Congress, to be appointed by the presiding officers of the respective Houses, be, and they hereby are, constituted a commission to inquire into the practicability and expediency of securing the construction in the United States of iron or steel ocean steamers for commercial purposes, upon such models and with such strength and speed that they may be readily converted into efficient ships of war when needed for such uses, and into the advisability of encouraging the construction of such vessels, and their maintenance in regular steamship lines over the highways of ocean commerce, by paying a fair and just compensation for carrying the mails therein to and from foreign countries, upon the condition that they shall be built in the United States and owned exclusively by American citizens, under the supervision of the Government and subject to be taken by it at a reasonable price whenever needed as ships of war; said commission to report to Congress their conclusions on the matters herein submitted at as early a day as is consistent with the due investigation thereof.

I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania whether that is new legislation on an appropriation bill?

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Yes; and it is good legislation; and if the Committee on Appropriations had not taken upon themselves a duty which they had not any right to assume the proposition never would have gone to them, but the Naval Committee would have taken it upon themselves to decide such matters and report to the Senate.

Mr. BECK. I ask the question, why did not the Naval Committee, which was not interfered with by the Committee on Appropriations for five months, report it to the Senate if it was good legislation? Why send it to us and then complain? The result is that whenever the Naval Committee or any member of it sends any proposition to us that is not favorably considered they raise the cry of new legislation against the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BUTLER. Let me ask the Senator whether that amendment is general legislation in the contemplation of Rule 29?

Mr. BECK. I do not care whether it is general legislation or not; it is not providing for the carrying on of the Navy in accordance with existing law.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator says he does not care whether it is general legislation or not. That is precisely the point between us.

Mr. BECK. The point the Committee on Naval Affairs have made is that all we have a right to do is to make appropriations in accordance with existing laws to carry on the Navy of the United States, and neither the building of a coaling station in South Carolina nor the granting of a subsidy to steamship lines to carry the mails, nor the giving of $150,000 to establish a plant in a navy-yard, has anything to do with the efficiency of the Navy of the United States under existing law.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Kentucky avoids answering my question. Rule 29 provides that—

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

I ask the Senator whether the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania is general legislation or not? Let him answer that question.

Mr. BECK. I say that it is general legislation in each one of the three cases suggested. The establishment of a plant in a navy-yard is general legislation; the establishment of a commission to grant subsidies to mail lines is general legislation—

Mr. BUTLER. Is it general legislation to build a fort?

Mr. BECK. It is general legislation to build a fort.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it general legislation to build a coaling dock?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. That will not do. It is part of a system.

Mr. BECK. It may not, but it is the fact. Whether it is the fact or not, it comes within the rules that we are criticised for.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. ROLLINS] again from his committee, not as Mr. ROLLINS, the Senator from New Hampshire, but "from the Committee on Naval Affairs," with the consent of all the committee, I presume, or he would not present it in that form, proposed to "add as a new section the following:"

SEC. —. That hereafter the chiefs of the Bureaus of Construction and Repair, of Steam-Engineering, of Provisions and Clothing, and of Medicine and Surgery, in the Department of the Navy, shall be appointed by selection from the officers of the corps to which they belong whose relative rank is not below that of commander.

That, too, is new legislation. Again:

Amendment reported by Mr. ROLLINS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to the bill (H. R. No. 6616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, namely:

Insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized to pay to Isaac A. Sylvester, for the losses and damages sustained by him on account of the collision of the United States sloop of war Lancaster with the drill-platform and sloop Derry, at Gangway Rock, Portsmouth, New Hampshire, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,940."

Again:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. ROLLINS to the bill (H. R. No. 6616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, namely: Insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a commission, composed of officers of the Navy not below the grade of lieutenant-commander, who shall without delay report to Congress which (if any) of the navy-yards or stations on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts it will be for the interest of the Government to abolish as navy-yards or stations, and to further report a general plan, and the estimated cost thereof, for the improvement of the navy-yards or stations it shall recommend to retain and permanently improve to meet the present and future needs of the Government in the construction and repair of naval vessels."

Mr. ROLLINS. Now I appeal to the Senator for just one minute. Give me sixty seconds.

Mr. BECK. These are amendments that the Senator has taken it upon himself to send to us.

Mr. ROLLINS. Will you allow me sixty seconds?

Mr. BECK. I will.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I rise to a point of order. I desire to interpose a point of order in the discussion. If this persistency of Senators, which I hold is entirely out of order, is allowed to obtain in the Senate, the reputation of every member of the Senate will be ruined before his constituents. I hope, therefore, the Senator from Kentucky will not be allowed to be interrupted.

Mr. BECK. While I have other amendments here that I proposed to read, I do not want to ruin my reputation. Those I have read will appear in the RECORD.

Mr. ROLLINS. It would be a fair addition to the literature of the country if they were all printed in the RECORD; but I desire to say simply—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BECK. I believe I will surrender the floor, because the Senator from Delaware is afraid of his own reputation.

Mr. ROLLINS. I desire simply to say that I am opposed to general legislation on appropriation bills; but when the Committee on Appropriations bring in an appropriation bill full of general legislation, then I think it is highly proper that any member of the Senate or any committee of the Senate should offer an amendment.

But the Committee on Appropriations come in here with a bill full of general legislation, and then turn around and make the point of order on every member of the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. On every committee of the Senate.

Mr. ROLLINS. On every committee of the Senate, the Senator from South Carolina suggests. That is true. They bring in their bill full of general legislation and then make the point of order as against every single Senator on the floor who belongs to the Committee on Naval Affairs. Against that I enter my solemn protest. That is my position. If the Committee on Appropriations will keep off their bills general legislation, I will stand by them; but when they bring in their bills full of general legislation I claim that I have a right to offer amendments to those bills, and I claim that any committee of the Senate has a right to offer its amendments to such a bill and not be throttled here upon the floor of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote, Mr. President. Senators are more anxious for that than anything else.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON,] which will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the naval appropriation bill be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to strike out all general legislation changing existing laws, and provide appropriations for the naval establishment as it now exists.

Mr. HALE. I ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WALKER, (when Mr. GARLAND's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. GARLAND] is paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

Mr. ROLLINS, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. CAMDEN.]

Mr. SEWELL, (when his name was called.) I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. MCPHERSON.]

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 29, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—29.

| | | | |
|-----------------|----------|-------------------|-----------|
| Anthony, | George, | Jones of Florida, | Van Wyck, |
| Bayard, | Groome, | Lapham, | Vest. |
| Blair, | Grover, | Mahone, | Voorhees, |
| Butler, | Hampton, | Maxey, | Williams, |
| Call, | Hawley, | Miller of Cal., | Windom. |
| Cameron of Pa., | Hoar, | Mitchell, | |
| Farley, | Ingalls, | Sherman, | |
| Ferry, | Jonas, | Vance, | |

NAYS—34.

| | | | |
|--------------------|------------------|------------------|------------|
| Aldrich, | Davis of W. Va., | Kellogg, | Plumb, |
| Allison, | Dawes, | Logan, | Pugh, |
| Reck, | Frye, | McDill, | Saulsbury, |
| Brown, | Gorman, | McMillan, | Saunders, |
| Cameron of Wis., | Hale, | Miller of N. Y., | Sawyer, |
| Chilcott, | Harris, | Morgan, | Slater, |

| Camden, | Garland, | Lamar, | Sewell. |
| Cockrell, | Hill of Colorado, | McPherson, | |
| Edmunds, | Hill of Georgia, | Ransom, | |
| Fair, | Johnston, | Rollins, | |

So the resolution was not agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Now I hope the Chief Clerk will begin the reading of the bill. Let us proceed for a little while.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no use for the reading to commence until order is restored in the Chamber.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I hope we shall go on with the bill. We want to get through and adjourn some time. Let us go on with the bill for an hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—yeas 27, nays 24; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock and forty-three minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, July 27, 1882.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had adopted a resolution, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, authorizing the Secretary of the Senate in the enrollment of the bill (S. No. 972) creating the Oregon Short-Line Railway Company, a corporation in the Territories of Utah, Idaho, and Wyoming, and for other purposes, to correct an error in line 10 of the engrossed bill by striking out the word "with" and inserting the word "within."

OREGON SHORT-LINE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the concurrent resolution just received from the Senate in relation to the correction of an error in the engrossment of the bill (S. No. 972) creating the Oregon Short-Line Railway Company, a corporation in the Territories of Utah, Idaho, and Wyoming, and for other purposes, by striking out the word "with" and inserting the word "within."

There being no objection, the resolution of the Senate was taken from the Speaker's table and was concurred in.

SALARY OF COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for present consideration the bill (H. R. No. 6682) to fix the salary of the collector of customs of the district of Chicago, Illinois.

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve the right to object for the purpose of inducing a statement on the part of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS] that this bill in fact makes a reduction of the present salary.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman to withhold his objection till the bill and report are read.

Mr. RANDALL. I merely wish to have it go on record that this is a decrease of salary, and not an increase.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the 30th day of June, 1882, the salary of the collector of customs of the district of Chicago, Illinois, shall be $7,000 per annum, and the same shall be in place of all salary, commissions, fees, and charges now allowed by law as compensation of that officer: Provided, That all fees and emoluments now received by the said collector and applied to his compensation under the provisions of existing law shall from and after the 30th day of June, 1882, be accounted for and paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to ask a question of the gentleman from Illinois. That is, whether the perquisites now received by the collector are to go into the public Treasury, and whether he is to be paid his entire salary out of the Treasury?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. The same perquisites as he now receives?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Yes, sir; every dollar of them. And this bill reduces the emoluments of the office.

Mr. HOLMAN. Can the gentleman assure the House that fees, &c., to the same extent connected with the collection of customs will be received hereafter?

Mr. KASSON. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS] will allow me I will answer the gentleman from Indiana. Under existing law the salary of this officer is $2,000. Then he has a commission upon the amount collected, and there are various other items, which all added together make the amount of his compensation $8,000. This bill provides that all these commissions, fees, &c., shall go into the Treasury, and his salary is fixed at $7,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. But under the general law those commissions go into the Treasury.

Mr. KASSON. They will by this law.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the compensation received by the collector for the sale of blanks used by shipping and other such perquisites go into the Treasury?

Mr. KASSON. The bill has been phrased for the express purpose of turning it all into the Treasury, and it is so provided.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the bill which has just been read at the Clerk's desk, and which I ask the House to consider at this time, is a substitute reported by the Committee on Ways and Means for House bill 3580, introduced by myself some time since, which was referred to this committee by order of the House. It provides for fixing a salary as compensation to the collector of the district and port of Chicago instead of compensating him as at present by part salary and part fees.

The original bill provided that the salary be the sum of $8,000—same as at the ports of Boston and Charlestown, Massachusetts, and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, but the committee have reduced that sum to $7,000, same as at the ports of Baltimore, New Orleans, and San Francisco. The compensation received by the collector of the port of Chicago under the present law for the period of four years ending with the last incumbent's term was many hundred dollars in excess of $7,000 per annum, and is received part as salary and part on account of storage and on sale of blanks, as provided for at non-enumerated ports.

The collector has in addition to his duties as collector those also of custodian of the Government building and disbursing officer for the payment of employes and for supplies required, a responsibility and duty for which he in justice should be paid; but from the fact that we are interested in adding Chicago to the number of enumerated ports to be placed on the same footing that obtains upon the seaboard, and knowing something of the advantages to our business community of an organization of this character over the present system, we urge the passage of this bill, though it does not give full justice to Chicago and her business community; she is entitled by the magnitude of her business and commercial importance to take rank in this regard with Philadelphia and Boston.

The growth of the business at the port of Chicago has been so rapid and is increasing so marvelously that it is difficult to impress the true condition upon our members who have not given the matter attention. Few of our members will hardly credit the statement that the number of vessels entered and cleared from the port of Chicago for the year 1881 exceeded those which arrived and cleared from New York by over seven thousand, or that they exceeded for the same period those arrived and cleared from Baltimore, Boston and Charlestown, New Orleans, Philadelphia, Portland, and San Francisco combined, or that they exceeded those of New York, Philadelphia, and New Orleans; yet such is the fact, as shown from the records as reported from the several ports, as per the following statement:

Statement of vessels entered and cleared, foreign and coastwise, at certain ports in the United States for the year ending December 31, 1881.

It may be said that our vessels are in the coastwise trade and are small. This is true to some extent, but they require attention. Many of our vessels take 100,000 bushels of grain in a single cargo.

The collections of duties and tonnage tax at Chicago for the last fiscal year I have not in exact amount, but it will not vary much from three and one-half millions.

The collections for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, expense, cost of collecting $100, and average number of men employed at Baltimore, New Orleans, and Chicago were as follows:

| | Baltimore. | New Orleans. | Chicago. |
|--------------------------------------|----------------|----------------|----------------|
| Duties and tonnage tax | $3,012,121 07 | $2,608,753 30 | $2,604,845 55 |
| Expense | $308,964 65 | $242,345 85 | $91,485 09 |
| Cost to collect $100 | $10 00 | $9 06 | $3 45 |
| Average number of men employed | 218 | 172 | 68 |

The increase of business in custom-house at Chicago is shown by the following comparative statement:

|---|----------------|
| January 1, 1880, to February 18, 1881 | $1,659,851 50 |
| January 1, 1881, to February 18, 1882 | 2,173,776 36 |
| Showing an increase of 31 per cent. | |
| January 1 to February 18, 1881 | $314,131 02 |
| January 1 to February 18, 1882 | 499,504 49 |
| Showing an increase of 59 per cent. | |
| Receipts from all sources: | |
| 1880 | $2,280,395 34 |
| 1881 | 2,650,190 98 |
| Showing an increase of 17 per cent. | |
| Last half of calendar year— | |
| 1879 | $1,029,078 90 |
| 1880 | 1,343,950 27 |
| Showing an increase of 36 per cent. | |
| 1880 | $1,343,750 27 |
| 1881 | 1,674,271 87 |
| Showing an increase of 25 per cent. | |
| Calendar years— | |
| 1879 | $1,807,452 27 |
| 1880 | 2,548,406 87 |
| Showing an increase of 41 per cent. | |
| 1880 | $2,548,406 87 |
| 1881 | 2,931,008 51 |
| Showing an increase of 11 per cent. | |
| Domestic exports: | |
| 1880 | $3,438,671 00 |
| 1881 | 4,189,255 09 |
| Showing an increase of 22 per cent. | |
| Number of entries of merchandise: | |
| 1880 | 4,414 |
| 1881 | 7,644 |
| Showing an increase of 27 per cent. | |
| Expense of collection: | |
| 1880 | $85,095 95 |
| 1881 | 91,485 09 |
| Showing an increase of only 7 per cent. | |

It is seen by these exhibits that we have the volume and the rapid and reliable increase in business which warrants the demand we make to be placed upon the same footing, with the same facilities and the same organization, as cities upon the seaboard. There should be no separate and distinct organizations, one for the seaboard cities and another entirely different for the lake cities. If the organization is right, is proper, and is good for Baltimore, the same will be good for Chicago. A fixed compensation gives your collector more independence and is much to be preferred. Do not discriminate against this great and marvelous city of the West. The Government has never expended a dollar or granted increased facilities for transacting business in that city which has not been met with a larger return in increased revenue, whether it has been in the improvement of its harbor, in the improvement of its postal facilities, in public buildings, or in any other manner.

The policy of good statesmanship would seem to point in the direction of recognizing the wants and necessities of our great business centers, from which large revenues are received, and curtailing at those points where the cost of collecting the revenue exceeded the revenue itself.

The Treasury officials report many useless customs districts in the United States, twenty-two ports of entry at which not a dollar of revenue has been received during the year, and thirty-two ports where the total collections have not equaled the total expenses. These districts should be consolidated, and the number of ports of entry reduced. This can be done, it is said by our Treasury officials, "without impairing the means necessary to prevent smuggling or withdrawing proper facilities for documenting vessels."

This bill has been thoroughly considered by the Committee on Ways and Means and has received their unanimous approval, and I trust it may pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed. Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JULIA A. NUTT.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time Senate bill No. 1472, for the relief of Julia A. Nutt, widow and executrix of Haller Nutt, deceased. If the House will allow me a few moments to explain the bill, I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I reserve the right to object until the bill shall have been read.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objections. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Quartermaster-General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to examine, adjust, and settle the claims of Julia A. Nutt, widow and executrix of Haller Nutt, deceased, late of Natchez, in the State of Mississippi, growing out of the occupation and use by the United States Army during the late rebellion of the property of the said Haller Nutt during his lifetime, or of his estate after his decease, including live stock, goods, and moneys taken and used by the United States or the armies thereof; and full jurisdiction is hereby given to the Quartermaster-General to try and determine the same, and he may consider the evidence heretofore taken on said claim, so far as applicable, before the commissioner of claims and such other legal evidence as may be adduced before him in behalf of the legal representatives of Haller Nutt, deceased, or in behalf of the United States: Provided, That no part of said claims upon which said commissioners of claims have passed on the merits shall be considered by the Quartermaster-General.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill which has been read?

Mr. HISCOCK. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

PROTESTANT ORPHAN ASYLUM OF NATCHEZ.

Mr. LYNCH. I ask consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time Senate bill No. 1939, for the relief of the Protestant orphan asylum of Natchez, in the State of Mississippi. I think there will be no objection to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the accounting officers of the Treasury be authorized and required to audit, sell, and pay the claim of the Protestant orphan asylum of the city of Natchez for the use and occupation of the property of the said asylum by the United States military authorities during the late war: Provided, That the amount allowed shall not exceed the sum of $1,750, unanimously recommended to be paid on such account by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives on the 29th day of June, 1876; nor shall any allowance be made for any damage done to said property during such use or occupation, or otherwise.

Mr. HISCOCK. I object to that bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I call for the regular order.

Mr. LYNCH. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LYNCH. I desire to inquire of the Chair if after the expiration of the hour under the new rule a motion to proceed to business on the Speaker's table will be in order?

The SPEAKER. That motion will be in order after the morning hour has intervened.

Mr. LYNCH. I desire to make that motion at the proper time.

DUTY ON IMPORTED HAY.

Mr. KASSON, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 6809) to adjust the duty on imported hay; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VAN HORN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask—

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been called for.

Mr. VAN HORN. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] will not insist on the regular order.

Mr. RANDALL. He does not often change.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to ask unanimous consent to pass a bill. If I can get the ear of the House, I think there will be no objection.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for, and the hour for the consideration of business under the new rule will begin—

Mr. HASKELL. I desire to call the attention of the Speaker to the fact that when the House adjourned on Saturday the previous question had been ordered upon a pending bill and amendment.

The SPEAKER. The attention of the Chair having been called to the matter, it will state that the bill (S. No. 1255) relating to the sale of a part of the reservation of the Omaha tribe of Indians in the State of Nebraska was under consideration yesterday, and the previous question was ordered on the bill and pending amendment. That will come up the first thing this morning as unfinished business.

SALE OF OMAHA INDIAN RESERVATION.

The House accordingly resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1255) to provide for the sale of the reservation of the Omaha tribe of Indians in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes.

The pending amendment was to add to the eighth section the following:

Provided further, That no part of said land shall be sold until the allotments shall have been made to the said Indians under the fifth section of this act. And said Indians, or any part of them, may, if they shall so elect, select the land which shall be allotted to them in severalty in any part of said reservation, either east or west of said right of way mentioned in the first section of this act.

Mr. SCALES. Is it in order to offer an amendment now?

The SPEAKER. It is not; the previous question is operating.

Mr. SCALES. I ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] to allow me to offer an amendment; I will not discuss it.

Mr. HOLMAN. As the amendment was read the word "all" does not appear. It should read "until all the allotments shall have been made."

Mr. VALENTINE. I desire to state to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that there could be no objection to his amendment if he would leave out the first sentence. Under the present treaty, which this bill states shall not be affected by this act, the Indians have the right to go upon any portion of that reservation to make their selection; and if the gentleman thinks there is any ambiguity in the bill, there is no objection to placing that in specifically. But that part of his amendment which provides that "no part of the reservation shall be sold until all the allotments shall have been made" is clearly erroneous, and will defeat the very desire of the Indians themselves, because the children, the younger members of the tribe, will not be able to make their selections for a great many years. That portion of his amendment would defeat the very object of the bill and the wishes of the Indians themselves who have asked for this legislation.

Mr. HASKELL. Why not modify the amendment so that no sales shall be made until the Indians now of proper age shall have made their selections?

Mr. VALENTINE. They do not care about making selections over on that side of the road at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that this is not debatable, the previous question operating. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment which has been read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that there may be allowed some time to come to an understanding about this matter, which is of some moment to this Indian tribe.

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] proposes to omit from the amendment the provision that "no part of said lands shall be sold until all the allotments shall have been made to the said Indians under the fifth section of this act," and leave the rest of the amendment to stand. Now, I am free to say that rather than have the whole amendment rejected (for I think the last clause is of some value) I should prefer to accede to his proposition. I do not, however, understand this matter so well as my friend from North Carolina, [Mr. SCALES.]

Mr. VALENTINE. Then I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order.

Mr. VALENTINE. If the gentleman from Indiana will not accept an amendment to his amendment, I ask that his amendment be voted down entirely, because if adopted it would defeat the very object of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that by unanimous consent the gentleman from Nebraska may be permitted to offer his amendment to strike out the first clause of my amendment, and have the sense of the House taken upon it.

Mr. VALENTINE. The amendment would be a very wise one with that provision struck out.

Mr. HASKELL. Let the gentleman from Indiana modify the amendment by striking out the first sentence, because with that sentence retained these allotments would continue for twenty years, and consequently the object of the bill would be defeated. If the first clause of the amendment be struck out I will support it.

Mr. VALENTINE. So will I.

Mr. HASKELL. Otherwise I must ask the House to vote it down.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am anxious that the last clause of the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. HASKELL. Will not the gentleman modify his amendment as suggested?

Mr. SCALES. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not withdraw the first part.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that by unanimous consent the gentleman from Nebraska may be permitted to offer an amendment to strike out the first clause of my amendment.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman desires to modify his amendment the Chair will submit it.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; I desire that permission be granted to amend.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska has not made that motion.

Mr. VALENTINE. I will, if I am permitted to do so.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will withdraw the first clause of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman will be allowed to modify his amendment.

Mr. SCALES. I object.

Mr. VALENTINE. Then let us have a vote on the amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN, there were—ayes 15, noes 49.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not wish to raise the question of a quorum; but I ask my friend from North Carolina to consent that my amendment be modified. He can see that the House is inclined to vote the whole thing down if the first clause be retained.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the modification of the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana as indicated?

Mr. VALENTINE. Let the Clerk read the part proposed to be struck out.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of said land shall be sold until all the allotments shall have been made to the said Indians under the fifth section of this act; and.

Mr. HASKELL. With that modification I have no objection to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to allowing the amendment to be thus modified? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SCALES. I will not further object. As it is the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, he may modify it in his own way.

The question being put on the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN as modified, it was agreed to.

The question was then taken on agreeing to the substitute as amended, and it was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, there were—ayes 68, noes 24.

Mr. SCALES. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HASKELL and Mr. SCALES were appointed.

Mr. SCALES. I ask for the yeas and nays. That will dispense with the call for tellers.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman withdraws the point, the Chair will put the question on ordering the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were—ayes 20, noes 87; less than one-fifth voting in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. SCALES. I think I was misunderstood about this matter. I said that if I could have the unanimous consent of the House I would be willing to take the vote by yeas and nays instead of calling for tellers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did not submit that statement to the Chair.

Mr. SCALES. Then I call for tellers now.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HASKELL and Mr. SCALES were appointed.

Mr. SCALES. I understand the vote now to be taken by tellers is upon ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. HASKELL and others. No; upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What is this vote upon?

The SPEAKER. Upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's statement was, as the record will show, that he demanded tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN. On the yeas and nays.

Mr. SCALES. I expressly said so in so many words.

The SPEAKER. There is no use of having any controversy about it; the Reporter's notes will show what took place.

Mr. SCALES. Several gentlemen around me were making the suggestion to me.

Mr. MANNING. I was making the suggestion to the gentleman from North Carolina, and understood him to say that.

Mr. VALENTINE. What do the reporters say.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so understand it.

Mr. COX, of New York. The Speaker will take the intention of the member.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from North Carolina states he intended to do it, of course that will be sufficient.

Mr. SCALES. I not only intended to do it but my opinion is I did do it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not controvert the gentleman's statement, but it did not so understand him. There need be no difficulty about the matter at all. The Chair understands the notes of the Reporter do not show he called for tellers on the yeas and nays, but the Chair will submit that question to the House now if gentlemen will resume their seats.

Mr. HASKELL. Let us take a direct vote by yeas and nays on the passage of the bill, which will be the easiest way out of this difficulty.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit that question to the House on ordering the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 105, nays 65, not voting 119; as follows:

YEAS—105.

So the bill was passed.

During the roll-call the following pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. AIKEN with Mr. VAN AERNAM.

Mr. LOWE with Mr. HERNDON.

Mr. JONES, of New Jersey, with Mr. HERBERT.

Mr. HEILMAN with Mr. BLAND.

Mr. MCCOY with Mr. CLARK.

Mr. LINDSEY with Mr. LADD.

Mr. HUMPHREY with Mr. BRAGG.

Mr. HALL with Mr. WISE of Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER with Mr. WILSON.

Mr. HUBBS with Mr. SHACKELFORD.

Mr. BARR with Mr. DAVIDSON.

Mr. STONE with Mr. HEWITT of Alabama.

Mr. DUNNELL with Mr. HARDY.

Mr. YOUNG with Mr. CLARDY.

Mr. BOWMAN with Mr. SPARKS.

Mr. GROUT with Mr. TALBOTT.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, with Mr. COOK.

Mr. SCRANTON with Mr. BEACH.

Mr. CORNELL with Mr. LATHAM.

Mr. CURTIN with Mr. THOMAS.

Mr. HAMMOND, of New York, with Mr. PHISTER.

Mr. GEDDES with Mr. RITCHIE.

Mr. ORTH with Mr. COBB.

Mr. GUENTHER with Mr. DEUSTER.

Mr. McLANE with Mr. URNER.

Mr. MASON with Mr. MONEY.

Mr. FARWELL, of Illinois, with Mr. SCALES.

Mr. DWIGHT with Mr. STEPHENS.

Mr. MILES with Mr. SINGLETON of Illinois.

Mr. MCCOOK with Mr. RANDALL.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa, with Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina.

Mr. WILLITS with Mr. HAMMOND of Georgia.

Mr. RANDALL. I notice, Mr. Speaker, I am announced as paired with Mr. McCook, of New York. While I am up on my feet I will state that the RECORD of Tuesday does not show the announcement of my pair with that gentleman during Tuesday, which existed as it had been announced on Monday. There were one or two important votes on Tuesday, and I wish to make the announcement that I did not vote because I was paired. It was the understanding when either one of us returned we should vote, and that is the reason I have voted. But in order there may be no misunderstanding, and rather than have any construction made against the gentleman from New York, I will withdraw my vote and let the pair stand between him and myself.

On motion of Mr. VALENTINE, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HASKELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced the passage of joint resolution (H. R. No. 271) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan twenty-five wall tents to the colony of Russian Hebrew refugees at Cimarron, Foote County, Kansas.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolutions of the following titles:

Joint resolution (S. No. 75) allowing the widow of General Stephen A. Hurlbut, late minister to Peru, one year's salary; and Joint resolution (S. No. 77) allowing the widow of General Judson Kilpatrick, late minister to Chili, one year's pay.

Mr. WARNER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 3599) granting a pension to David T. Stephenson;

A bill (H. R. No. 1873) for the relief of Patrick Sullivan; and

A bill (H. R. No. 864) granting a pension to Amanda J. McFadden.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The order of business is the consideration of bills offered by consent under the operation of the new rule.

Mr. ROBESON. I desire to make a parliamentary suggestion in that connection, or rather to ask unanimous consent of the House that in proceeding under the "Pound" rule, to avoid the obvious difficulty which must arise in being called upon to make objections before we know what the bills are which we are called to pass upon, and inasmuch as some of us, if we had an opportunity of hearing the report read or a brief statement of the measure, might be willing to give consent to the consideration of bills to which we would otherwise feel called upon to object—I ask that the objections to the consideration of any such proposition may be reserved until the report has been read for five minutes, or until five minutes have been occupied by a statement made in behalf of the bill, in which manner the House will be informed as to the nature of the measure and can act upon it understandingly; the five minutes so occupied to be taken out of the time allowed in advocacy of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I think that would be a very good arrangement, as the House would then act understandingly.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that ought to be done.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the proposition to the House. Is their objection to the suggestion made by the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I object. If the gentleman will confine his request to having the reports read for five minutes I will withdraw my objection. We want something reliable, not a five-minute speech on every bill. We may get some idea of the bill from the committee's report more reliable than a five-minute speech from an advocate of a bill.

Mr. ROBESON. Well, it is better to have even that much of the report read than to act without any information, and I will modify the request to that extent, that five minutes be allowed in reading the report before objection is called for to the consideration of the measure.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to allowing five minutes' time to be occupied in reading the report, if required, before objection to the consideration of the bill is insisted upon?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I hope objection will be withdrawn to the suggestion that a statement of five minutes may be allowed for information. It is obvious that cases will arise where no report accompanies the measure or where a report will be of such length that little information could be obtained from reading a portion of it for five minutes.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand my colleague withdraws his objection.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I withdraw the objection, as I stated to the gentleman from New Jersey.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again state the proposition to the House, in order that there may be no mistake. The Chair understands the proposition of the gentleman from New Jersey is this: that the Pound rule shall be so modified that upon the request of a member five minutes may be allowed in explanation of the bill or five minutes' time occupied in reading the report prior to the time when objections are called.

Mr. SPRINGER. The time so occupied to be taken out of the time allowed in support of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Certainly; to be taken out of the time allowed in favor of the measure. Is there objection to the request?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATHS BY POSTMASTERS IN CERTAIN CASES.

Mr. KELLEY, from the Committee on Ways and Means, by unanimous consent, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6842) to empower postmasters to administer oaths to importers of books; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SUPPORT OF COMMON SCHOOLS.

The SPEAKER. The hour under the operation of the Pound rule begins at twenty minutes after twelve o'clock. The regular order under the rule is the unfinished business coming over from yesterday, which is the bill (H. R. No. 6158) to aid in the support of common schools, reported from the Committee on Education and Labor by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. UPDEGRAFF.] This bill has been read, but objection had not been called for when the hour expired. It is now in order. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. I ask five minutes' time to make an explanation or statement in reference to this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the title of the bill be read.

Mr. HISCOCK. I object to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The right to object under the modification of the rule this morning is reserved until after the gentleman from Ohio makes a statement for five minutes.

Mr. McMILLIN. Was not the modification only applicable to the reading of the report?

The SPEAKER. Either the reading of the report or a statement occupying five minutes. The Chair of course could not give directions as to which shall be selected.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am sure it was understood by the House that the provision with reference to the explanation was objected to, and that the time allowed for explanation related only to reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. It was not so stated to the House. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, this bill which I presented to the House on yesterday by the unanimous direction of the Committee on Education and Labor, and for which we now ask consideration, provides a fund to be divided among the States of this Union on the basis of illiteracy to aid in the education of the people. In the brief time allowed me by the "fearfully and wonderfully" constructed rules of this House it is impossible either to state fully the scope of the bill or its imperative necessity. I can only briefly give a few suggestive facts.

The last census has revealed a condition of illiteracy in a large part of this country which is both surprising and alarming. It shows that 6,239,958 persons in the United States, nearly one-eighth of our whole population over ten years of age, cannot read and write. It shows that 4,715,395 of these are in the former slave States. But it shows further that this illiteracy is not confined either to children or freedmen. It shows that in sixteen Southern or late slaveholding States nearly one-third of the voters, white and black taken together, are unable to read and write. In several of these States the illiterate voters are one-half of the voting population.

In the sixteen States referred to there are 1,354,974 voters who cannot read and write. Of these 410,550 are white voters. Kentucky has 54,956 illiterate white voters and 43,177 illiterate colored voters. Missouri has 40,655 white voters and 19,028 colored voters who cannot read and write. Tennessee has 46,948 and North Carolina 44,420 illiterate white voters.

The State of Mississippi has 111,541 voters who cannot read and write, and in 1880 the popular vote of that State was 117,078.

The State of Georgia has 145,087 illiterate voters, and in 1880 the popular vote of that State was 155,651.

The State of Louisiana has 102,932 illiterate voters, and in 1880 the popular vote was 97,201.

Georgia has 520,416 persons, or 33.75 percentage of her whole population ten years of age and over, who cannot read and write. North Carolina has 463,975 persons, or 33.15 percentage of her entire population ten years old and over, who are illiterate. Of these illiterates 192,019 are white persons ten years old and over, or 22.14 of her whole white population.

Kentucky has 348,392 persons, or 21.13 percentage of her whole population ten years old and over, who are illiterate. Of these illiterates 214,497 are whites ten years old and over, or 15.58 percentage of her white population.

Tennessee has 410,722 persons ten years old and over, or 26.63 of her whole population, who are illiterate. Of these illiterates 216,227 are whites ten years old and over, being 18.90 of her white population.

But let no self-complacent Northern man conclude illiteracy is confined to the South. Massachusetts has 92,980 persons ten years old and over, or 5.21 per cent. of her whole population, who are illiterate.

Of these, 90,658 are white, being 5.14 of her white population. Illinois has 132,426 white persons ten years old and over who are illiterate, or 4.37 of her white population.

Ohio has 115,491 white persons ten years old and over, or 3.70 of her white population, who are illiterate.

Pennsylvania has 209,981 white persons ten years old and over who are illiterate, or 5 per cent. of her whole white population.

Rhode Island has 8.72 per cent. of her white population, and 18.95 per cent. of her entire population, of illiterates.

Even Iowa, which marks a higher standard in education than any other great State in the Union, and indeed than any State except Kansas, Nebraska, and Oregon, has 44,337 white persons ten years old and over, who are illiterate, being 2.75 of her white population.

The tables from which I take these statements were furnished me by Henry R. White, of the Census Bureau, who, while claiming their general correctness, stated that they were subject to final revision. Of the appalling facts they reveal there is no possible dispute.

There should be as little controversy in applying at once the remedy. The bill now under discussion appropriates $10,000,000 annually, for ten years, to be divided among all the States, North and South, in proportion to illiteracy, to aid in common-school education. In what possible way could this Government now invest a small portion of its vast revenue that would yield results so beneficial and so far-reaching as would be the educational advancement of millions of her people now deprived of these great advantages? Truly, as was wisely said by one of our country's greatest thinkers, "Education is the cheap defense of nations."

I know a false economy is the cheap policy of cowardly statesmanship. A wise and careful expenditure of our national revenues is the duty of the legislator. But the people of this country neither admire nor demand that short-sighted and small-souled parsimony which constantly sits itself up for special virtue, but which is neither patriotism nor wisdom, and which is inadequate even to conceive the just demands of a great and rapidly advancing people such as we are. No object of equal importance with those provided for by this bill has received the aid of the Government since I have been in this House.

Only yesterday nearly twenty millions were voted by this House for the rivers and harbors of the country. Some of the objects were justly entitled to such aid, and doubtless some were not; but when money is appropriated for intelligence, for the education of the people, it is the concurrent testimony of all history and of all statesmanship that it is a wise and worthy expenditure.

It has been the policy of our Government from its earliest history. In 1785 the Continental Congress adopted the report of Jefferson, chairman of the committee on the organization of the Western territory, and set apart section 16 in every township for the maintenance of public schools. This act was incorporated into the ordinance of 1787, of which Daniel Webster said:

No single law, ancient or modern, has produced effects more distinctly marked and lasting. It impressed the soil itself while it was yet a wilderness with an incapacity to sustain any other than freedom.

In his Farewell Address, Washington says:

Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government is shaped by and gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion shall be enlightened.

Jefferson, in his sixth annual message, said:

Patriotism would certainly prefer its [tax on imports] continuance and application to the great purposes of public education, roads, rivers, and canals.

Madison, in his inaugural, March 4, 1809, pledges himself "to favor the advancement of science and the diffusion of information as the best element of liberty."

In 1848, when Oregon was organized, the quantity of land reserved for common schools was doubled, and to each new Territory organized since that time, and to each State admitted since that time, except West Virginia, the sixteenth and the thirty-sixth sections of each township, or about one-eighteenth of the whole area, have been granted for common schools.

In 1836 more than $28,000,000 surplus revenue was distributed to the States on the basis of representation in Congress, which was mostly used to create educational funds in the several States.

Such has been the wise and beneficent policy of the Government since its foundation, and yet we can hear every day small modern statesmen proclaim that the Constitution forbids such appropriations for such purposes.

The condition of the South at this time presents an exceptional demand for this aid. Impoverished by the war and its results, it is unable to educate the millions of freedmen whom this Government has made citizens and voters. This work must be aided by the national power or the present generation of freedmen, with millions of the white population, must remain in ignorance—a blind and dangerous power for evil in a free government.

More than any other means education would mold these dangerous millions into order-loving American citizens, heal the scars of war, and make impossible the disorders and perils which always belong to such conditions as now exist in large sections of our country. The most economical of all expenditure is that for education. A great statesman—a real statesman—well said, "To open the schools is to close the jails;" and one of our greatest and best leaders has said on this floor, "Liberty can be safe only when suffrage is illuminated by education."

I beg of this Congress to give to this great national question the consideration its magnitude demands, and to which the far-reaching results entitle it. In so beneficent a work partisanship should be forgotten and the diverse interests of sections and races unknown.

John Milton, in his wonderful little work Way to Establish a Free Commonwealth, has compressed so much of forceful truth into one paragraph that I will read it, and with that conclude what I may now say on this subject, which I trust Congress will at no distant day fully consider:

To make the people fittest to choose, and the chosen fittest to govern, will be to mend our corrupt and faulty education; to teach the people faith not without virtue, temperance, society, modesty, economy, justice; not to admire mere wealth or honor; to hate turbulence and disorder, to place every one, his private welfare and happiness in the public peace, liberty, and safety.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the committee reporting this bill I appeal to the House to give it prompt and cordial support. It has been considered by the Committee on Education and Labor in three or four successive Congresses; it has been discussed by the National Association of Teachers which meets annually in this city, and by similar organizations throughout the country; and everywhere and upon all occasions its objects have been commended and the manner of attaining those objects has been approved by the representative educators of the land.

What objection, then, Mr. Speaker, can be urged against the passage of this bill in its present shape? It appropriates $10,000,000 to the education of our future citizens, and makes illiteracy the basis upon which that sum is to be distributed. Can objection be urged to such distribution upon any constitutional grounds? Certainly not. It is well known to every gentleman upon this floor that not only by the act of 1862 establishing the agricultural colleges, but long prior to that time, millions of acres and millions of money had been voted away by Congress for similar purposes. The policy of the Government in this direction even antedates the Constitution itself.

It is equally well known that this policy not only has the Constitution for a basis and numerous prior acts of Congress for precedents, but it has been recommended by one President after another from Washington down, and has been passed upon in many well-known decisions of our Supreme Court. There can be no question, therefore, as to the right of Congress to undertake the legislation which this bill proposes.

But admitting the right—the constitutional authority—to pass such a law, who can deny its necessity? From the census of 1870 the aggregate number of illiterate persons among our people was 4,528,084. From the same source it appears that out of a school population of 14,418,923 only 5,003,298 were in actual daily attendance at school. In other words, nearly two-thirds of our school population were, according to that census, without education. It also appears that of the adult population of the late slave-holding States there were in 1870 45 per cent. illiterate. The census of 1880 presents even more appalling statistics. The able report of our subcommittee presents those statistics. They are an argument in themselves infinitely more eloquent and forcible than any words. I call attention to these figures. Think of it, Representatives, one-eighth of our entire population illiterate!

The last census shows that there are 6,239,958 people of this country above the age of ten years who cannot write—12.44 per cent., or about one-eighth of our entire population. The census further shows that 4,715,395, or 75.56 per cent. of them, are in the recent slave States, which contain but 36.8 per cent. of the population of the country. In six of those States one-third or more of the population above the age of ten years are illiterate, while in the Territory of New Mexico nearly one-half cannot write. Of the white population of the country only 6.96 per cent. cannot write, while 47.7 per cent. of the colored population are in that condition. More than one-fourth of the entire population of those States is illiterate.

The committee call attention to the illiteracy of the voters in the late slave-holding States. The following table has been furnished the committee by the Superintendent of the Census. It shows the total number of persons of twenty-one years of age and upward, and also the number of that age and upward who are illiterate:

| States. | Total males of 21 years of age and upward. | Number of males 21 years and upward who cannot write. | | |
|----------------|--|---|----------|-----------|
| | | White. | Colored. | Total. |
| Alabama | 259,884 | 24,450 | 96,408 | 120,858 |
| Arkansas | 182,977 | 21,349 | 34,300 | 55,649 |
| Delaware | 38,298 | 2,955 | 3,787 | 6,742 |
| Florida | 61,699 | 4,706 | 19,110 | 23,816 |
| Georgia | 321,438 | 28,571 | 116,516 | 145,087 |
| Kentucky | 376,221 | 54,956 | 43,177 | 98,133 |
| Louisiana | 216,787 | 16,377 | 86,555 | 102,932 |
| Maryland | 232,166 | 15,152 | 30,873 | 46,025 |
| Mississippi | 238,532 | 12,473 | 99,068 | 111,541 |
| Missouri | 541,207 | 40,655 | 19,028 | 59,683 |
| North Carolina | 294,740 | 44,420 | 80,282 | 124,702 |
| South Carolina | 205,789 | 13,924 | 93,010 | 106,934 |
| Tennessee | 330,305 | 46,948 | 58,601 | 105,549 |
| Texas | 380,476 | 33,085 | 59,669 | 92,754 |
| Virginia | 334,505 | 31,474 | 100,210 | 131,684 |
| West Virginia | 139,161 | 19,055 | 3,830 | 22,885 |
| Total | 4,154,125 | 410,550 | 944,424 | 1,354,974 |

Of these the greatest portion are of course those who were recently slaves. By consecutive amendments to the Constitution they were made freedmen, then citizens, and finally clothed with all the duties and responsibilities of citizenship. Thus by a single stroke of the pen 4,000,000 persons, one-tenth of the whole population at that time, without education or previous preparation, were incorporated into our body-politic. When to this large number of illiterate adults and minors who do not attend school we add the hundreds of thousands of immigrants who are pouring into our country, so many of whom have imperfect or erroneous views of our Government, the great, the indispensable necessity for the passage of this bill most strongly appears.

It is an admitted truth that virtue and intelligence are essential to our free institutions. If ignorance is at the helm, or immorality prevails, our ship of state must go down. These are familiar truths when stated. We all assent to them, and yet what have we done or what do we propose to do? The balance of power in our politics is now and has been for years on the side of ignorance and incompetency. The evil is one of immense magnitude, it is one which demands action, and that action should be vigorous and immediate. The bill which we present to-day proposes at once to divide this sum of ten millions among the different States. Need I say that the necessity for action is urgent as well as immediate.

If we wish to use this money it should be done at once. The peril to our institutions from this great mass of voters who are unable to read the very charter of their liberties is a present peril and should be removed at once. The public debt which has been under discussion upon this floor so often during the last few years is a great evil, a great burden and menace to our welfare, and should, if possible, be paid and removed at once and forever. I am opposed to any funding, to any perpetuation of that debt.

Will it be said that this bill will place education under the exclusive control of the Government and will build up another department, thus centralizing power? Sir, I appreciate the force of this argument. I know and we all know how these great departments of our Government have been established, how they have grown from small beginnings until they have aggrandized authority never originally given them. I am as much opposed as any gentleman on this floor to such a result. I do not want the Federal Government to take from the States their control in educational matters; I would deprecate such a result.

Only a few years ago a bill was introduced into this House which gave the Federal Government entire supervision and management of the public schools of the country, authorizing it to appoint under certain prescribed rules teachers for every school district in the country. That bill had its active supporters upon this floor. I would oppose such a bill. I am not in favor of surrendering the schools of the country to Federal control. I would not consent to have a board located here to dictate what text-books shall be used in our State schools. Gentlemen will find that no such results can follow if this bill becomes a law. It avoids all such contingencies. It hands over this money immediately to the State governments, who thereupon assume the responsibility of its disbursement.

Nor can any gentleman with the facts before him have a doubt as to the manner in which that responsibility will be met by the States. The greater portion of this fund is, as we know, for the benefit of the colored people of the South. I had expected when this bill came up for discussion to present some statistics upon the subject of the education of the freedmen of the South. I hope on some future occasion to have an opportunity of doing so. Every one who has not examined the subject will be astonished to find what efforts have been made in this direction.

Although the Southern States by the emancipation of their slaves lost over $2,000,000,000, in addition to an equal amount resulting from the ravages and expenses of war, yet they have applied themselves to the problem of educating their freedmen to an extent and with a zeal which reflects no less honor upon their judgments than upon their hearts. In my own State, Kentucky, every dollar of tax collected from colored men is set apart for their education. In my own city, Louisville, in addition to the State tax, we have levied a special tax for the benefit of our colored citizens, and as a result you will find their school edifices vieing in size, beauty of architecture, and other appointments with those erected for the white children. Not only that, but the salaries of white and colored teachers have been equalized, so that there is now absolutely no distinction as to advantages and opportunities. What is true of Kentucky is, I am glad to say, equally true of nearly every former slave-holding State. If you send this money to those States you will find them ready to consecrate every dollar of it to the education of the colored men, and you will soon witness the good results in their increased usefulness, patriotism, and happiness.

Under these circumstances it would be not a mistake but a legislative crime for our Government to give 4,000,000 people the right to vote and not supplement that with an education that will qualify them for the discharge of the duties of citizenship thus imposed upon them. This bill looks in that direction. It proposes to give for the education of American citizens one-half of the amount you have just now voted for your rivers and harbors.

We are not asking even a vote on the bill, but that a day be set apart for its consideration. For three successive Congresses, in one form or another, it has been reported to this House. We are now asking simply a hearing. You have adopted rules that tie our legislative hands. We now ask you to lay aside those rules and give us a day for this bill.

It has been carefully examined by the sub-committee of which the honorable gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SHERWIN] is chairman. It is believed to be the best bill of the kind that has ever been offered to the American Congress. I appeal, therefore, to gentlemen on all sides, in view of the great importance of this question, in view of the fact that this committee in five years, as I know as one of its members, has never obtained a day for the consideration of any bill pending before it; in view of these facts, I appeal to this House to grant us this request and consider this bill. If it be wrong in any of its provisions, the House has entire control of it. It can be modified; it can be entirely changed if the House sees fit. All we ask is a hearing from the American Congress, and I believe that hearing will be given to us.

The SPEAKER. The time allowed for explanation has expired.

Mr. REED. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether he was silent when it was proposed to change the rule so that his committee might have a hearing.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman from Kentucky is not discussing the rules now.

Mr. REED. He did discuss them and said the House had tied itself up by its rules.

The SPEAKER. The time allowed for explanation has expired.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I wish to understand what is the proposition before the House. I understood the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. UPDEGRAFF] to ask for the immediate consideration of the bill. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] wanted a time fixed for its consideration.

Mr. WILLIS. I find I was mistaken as to that, and that the request of the gentleman from Ohio is to have the bill put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Eleven members rose and objected.

The SPEAKER. Eleven gentlemen objecting, the bill is not before the House.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF of Ohio, Mr. BISBEE, Mr. CALKINS, and Mr. MANNING asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD remarks on the bill. [See Appendix.]

Mr. LYNCH rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Mississippi rise?

Mr. LYNCH. I understood the gentleman from Ohio desired to fix a day for the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. That was not the proposition.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. I now ask unanimous consent to fix a day for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. You cannot get that.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the bill is not before the House.

COPYRIGHT.

The Committee on the Militia was called, but presented no measure for consideration.

The Committee on Patents was called.

Mr. RITCHIE. I am instructed by the Committee on Patents to ask that the bill (S. No. 1582) to amend the statutes in relation to copyright be taken from the Speaker's table and put upon its passage.

Mr. COX, of New York. I am sure there will be no objection to that bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That manufacturers of designs for molded decorative articles, tiles, plaques, or articles of pottery or metal subject to copyright may put the copyright-mark prescribed by section 4962 of the Revised Statutes, and acts additional thereto, upon the back or bottom of such articles, or in such other place upon them as it has heretofore been usual for manufacturers of such articles to employ for the placing of manufacturer's, merchant's, and trade marks thereon.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio if this matter has been acted upon by a committee of the House?

Mr. RITCHIE. It has been acted on by the committee and is unanimously reported.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RITCHIE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. YOUNG. I call up for consideration—

The SPEAKER. Under the rule a committee can be recognized under this call but once until it is called again.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 271) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan twenty-five wall tents to the colony of Russian Hebrew refugees at Cimarron, Foote County, Kansas.

JOSEPH HERTFORD.

The Committees on Invalid Pensions and on Pensions were called, but presented no measures for consideration.

The Committee on Claims was called.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. No. 5215) for the relief of Joseph Hertford. The bill was reported by the Committee on Claims, and is now on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there not a Senate bill of the same nature?

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. There is.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can call up the Senate bill.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. I will do so.

The SPEAKER. Is it the same as the House bill?

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. It is. I call up the Senate bill (S. No. 790) for the relief of Joseph Hertford.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Joseph Hertford, of Cairo, Greene County, New York, the sum of $413.93, in full for all claims by him for compensation for services as clerk at the Sac and Fox Indian agency from April 24, 1879, till July 9, 1879, inclusive, and from October 1, 1879, till December 31, 1879, inclusive.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose there is a report accompanying the House bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us have the report read.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. It is quite a long report.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen are entitled to have it read if it does not take more than five minutes for the reading.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. I will state that the bill has been unanimously reported by both the committee of the House and the committee of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The report, which was read in part, is as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 5215) for the relief of Joseph Hertford, respectfully report that they have considered the same, and desire to recommend that the bill do pass, and to make part of this report the very exhaustive report made by Senator HOAR on this case to the Forty-seventh Congress, Senate Report No. 33, which is as follows:

"The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Joseph Hertford, praying compensation for services as clerk to the Indian office at the Sac and Fox agency in Indian Territory in the year 1879, have considered the same, and respectfully report:

"That Joseph Hertford, the claimant, was employed as a clerk at the Sac and Fox Indian agency from April 24, 1879, till December 31, 1879, (both days inclusive,) at an annual salary of $1,100; that for the periods between April 24 and July 9, and between October 1 and December 31, he has received no pay; and that there is due him for service during said period the sum of $413. The petitioner first applied for relief to the Forty-sixth Congress, and his petition was referred to the Committee on Claims. The chairman of that committee referred to the Secretary of the Interior for information in regard to the matter; and the facts in the case, together with the reasons which made it necessary to apply to Congress for relief, are fully set forth in the reply from that Department to the inquiries of Senator COCKRELL. The report is accordingly appended hereto:

To the honorable United States Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The petition of the undersigned respectfully represents to your honorable body that he was appointed clerk at the Sac and Fox agency, Indian Territory, on the 24th of October, 1878, at $1,100 per annum.

That while so acting as clerk he was granted leave of absence by the honorable Secretary of the Interior for ninety days, which leave commenced on the 14th day of January, 1879. On his return from England to New York he reported his arrival in that city, on the 28th day of March, 1879, to the office of Indian Affairs, and requested to be informed when his services would be required at the Sac and Fox agency, and received a reply that his services would be needed on the 14th of April, 1879. He proceeded as notified, arriving at the Sac and Fox agency on the 24th day of April, and reported to the agent, Levi Woodard, as instructed. Said Agent Levi Woodard refused to recognize the orders of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or receive your petitioner as clerk, alleging as a reason for such refusal that his (Woodard's) son suited him, and although only temporarily employed during the absence of your petitioner.

These facts being reported to the office of Indian Affairs, your petitioner was instructed by telegraph to remain at the agency until an inspector was sent to investigate the agent.

On the 8th day of June, 1879, Inspector McNeil visited the agency and commenced an investigation and found Agent Woodard a defaulter, whereupon the inspector suspended said agent and placed your petitioner in charge of the agency.

Agent Woodard then refused to place your petitioner's name on the pay-roll of employes, namely, from the 24th of April to the 9th day of June, 1879, inclusive.

Therefore your petitioner respectfully prays that your honorable body will take into consideration the following, namely, that your petitioner remained in the service of the Indian Department at Sac and Fox agency from the 24th of April,

1879, to the 31st day of December, 1879, and that he claims salary for that period of time, (at $1,100 per annum,) as per statement herewith, namely:

|---|----------|
| Salary, at $1,100 per annum, from April 24 to December 31, both inclusive: | |
| April, 7 days..... | $21 15 |
| May..... | 93 60 |
| June..... | 90 70 |
| July, August, and September..... | 275 00 |
| October, November, and December..... | 275 00 |
| | 755 45 |
| Credit, cash received..... | $321 57 |
| Disallowed..... | 19 50 |
| | 341 07 |
| | 414 38 |

It may be proper in this connection to state that your petitioner was sent by the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs to the Sac and Fox and other agencies as an expert to examine into the accounts, with the sanction and approval of the honorable Secretary of the Interior, and while acting in that capacity incurred the enmity of the two agents, Levi Woodard and John S. Shorb, the present agent, from whom your petitioner received the most brutal and inhuman treatment while suffering from malarial fever and pleurisy. This can be verified by General John McNeil, United States Indian inspector, he being present at the time. And in consequence of the refusal of the above-named agents to place my name on the pay-roll of employes and certify to the same, I am compelled to seek relief and redress from your honorable body.

And your petitioner will ever pray.

JOSEPH HERTFORD.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Washington, February 17, 1881.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 21st ultimo, inclosing the petition of Joseph Hertford for compensation as clerk, &c., with accompanying papers, asking for a full history of the case, all the facts known to this Department, and all action had on the claim, and whether application for his pay has been made and what action has been taken; whether his application has been reported as a deficiency or otherwise; also whether his claim is just and proper, and, if so, why it has not been or cannot be paid by this Department without special Congressional action.

In reply, your attention is respectfully invited to the inclosed report from the office of Indian Affairs, in which all the facts and circumstances in the case are on file and are of record, of the 11th instant.

The views of the Indian Office have the concurrence of the Department.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

C. SCHURZ, Secretary.

Hon. F. M. COCKRELL,

Chairman Committee on Claims, United States Senate.

Three inclosures.

Petition and statement of Mr. Hertford returned.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Washington, February 11, 1881.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by Department reference of the 24th ultimo, for report, of a communication from Hon. F. M. COCKRELL, transmitting petition of Joseph Hertford for compensation as clerk at the Sac and Fox agency, Indian Territory, during the year 1879.

In reply, I have to say that the correspondence in this case (copies of which accompany the petition of Mr. Hertford) very fully sets forth the facts in relation thereto. Briefly, these facts are as follows:

In October, 1878, Mr. Hertford was appointed clerk at the Sac and Fox agency at a salary of $1,100 per annum. In January, 1879, he was granted leave of absence for ninety days, the latter part of said leave being without pay. On the 28th of March he reported his arrival in New York, and requested to be informed when his services would be required at Sac and Fox agency. He was informed that said services would be required about the 14th of April, 1879. He proceeded to the agency, but did not arrive there until the 24th of April.

The agent, Levi Woodard, refused to place him on duty, and Mr. Hertford was directed to remain at the agency until an inspector was sent out there. On the 1st of June, 1879, Inspector McNeil suspended Mr. Woodard from duty as agent, and placed said Hertford in charge from June 9. Mr. Hertford remained in charge of the agency until August 10, 1879, when he was relieved by the present agent John S. Shorb. For this period, from June 9 to August 10, 1879, both days inclusive, he has received his pay at the rate of $1,100 per annum. The records of this office show that Mr. Hertford again became clerk, by direction of this office, on the 11th of August, 1879, and remained such until the 31st of December, 1879, although the agent refused to place him on his rolls beyond October 1, 1879, from which date until December 31, 1879, he has received no pay.

For the periods for which no payment has been made, namely, from April 24 to June 8, both days inclusive, and from October 1 to December 31, 1879, both days inclusive, the two agents, Woodard and Shorb, refuse to certify to the employment of Mr. Hertford, and in fact claim that he rendered no service. If allowed payment for these periods there would be due him the sum of $413.

Under the act of March, 3, 1875, it is provided that "Indian agents shall be required to state under oath, upon rendering their quarterly accounts, that the employes claimed for were actually and bona fide employed at such agency, and at the compensation as claimed, and that such service was necessary, and that such agent is not to receive and has not received, directly or indirectly, any part of the compensation claimed for any other employe."

In the absence of this affidavit, and in view of the refusal of both Agent Woodard and Agent Shorb to furnish the same covering the periods above mentioned, there does not appear to be any power vested in this office whereby payment can be made, and the only remedy left to Mr. Hertford would seem to be that chosen by him, namely, by a bill of relief.

As, however, Mr. Hertford was at the agency during the periods for which he claims payment, under an appointment from this office, prepared and requesting permission to enter upon the duty as clerk, I am of the opinion that his claim is just and proper, and I have the honor to recommend that the above statement of facts be transmitted to the Committee on Claims of the United States Senate, with the recommendation that the relief prayed for by said Hertford be granted. The letter of Hon. F. M. Cockrell, with its inclosures, is herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

E. M. MARBLE, Acting Commissioner.

To the honorable SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

"The committee therefore report the accompanying bill, and recommend that it be passed."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill which has been read? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. I move that the House bill be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. It will lie there.

GARFIELD MEMORIAL CARDS.

The list of committees was called until the Committee on Printing was reached.

Mr. MCCLURE. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to call up for consideration at this time the Senate joint resolution No. 83 relating to the memorial cards to accompany the memorial address on the life and character of the late James A. Garfield.

The joint resolution, which was read, appropriates $1,600 to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish the memorial cards to accompany the memorial address on the life and character of James A. Garfield, ordered to be printed by joint resolution approved June 7, 1882.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to considering at this time the joint resolution which has been read?

Mr. SKINNER. I ask that the report be read.

The SPEAKER. It is a Senate joint resolution.

There was no objection, and the joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MCCLURE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The list of committees was then called through, and the Committee on Elections, at the beginning of the list, was again called.

Mr. ATHERTON. I have here a joint resolution in regard to printing the digest of the contested-election cases of the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses, which I have been directed by the Committee on Elections to report to the House for consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman instructed by his committee to call it up in this hour?

Mr. ATHERTON. I believe it is the unanimous report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not certain from the statement of the gentleman that it comes within the rule under which the House is now acting.

Mr. ATHERTON. In order that there may be no misunderstanding about it, I will state that I was directed by the Committee on Elections to call it up whenever I could get the opportunity to do so.

The SPEAKER. It has never been reported to the House, and the rule under which the House is now acting requires that House bills and joint resolutions to be called up in this hour shall have been previously reported. The Chair does not think that this joint resolution comes within the rule.

Mr. ATHERTON. Then I withdraw it.

ALBERT ELSBERG.

Mr. ERRETT. I am authorized by the Committee on Ways and Means to call up for consideration at this time from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 1435, for the relief of Albert Elsberg, administrator of Gustave Elsberg, deceased.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to examine into the claim of Albert Elsberg, administrator of Gustave Elsberg, deceased, late of Santa Fé, New Mexico, to be paid the value, with the accrued interest on June 21, 1873, the date when they were called for redemption and when interest was stopped, of the following-described coupon bonds, which were subscribed and paid for by said Gustave Elsberg and were stolen from him on the 14th day of June, 1865, and are believed to have been destroyed, namely: United States 5-20 6 per cent. bonds numbered 22515, 22516, 22517, 22518, 22519, 22520, 22521, and 22522, issued under the act approved February 25, 1862, second series, and of the value of $500 each; and if the Secretary of the Treasury, after such examination, is satisfied that the said bonds were lost as aforesaid, and is also satisfied that they have not since been presented to and paid by the Government, he shall cause the value of the same, as aforesaid, to be paid to the said Albert Elsberg, administrator of Gustave Elsberg, deceased, late of Santa Fé, New Mexico: Provided, That the said administrator of the said Gustave Elsberg shall execute and file with the Secretary of the Treasury a bond of indemnity, with at least two good and sufficient sureties, citizens of the United States, in a penalty double the amount provided to be paid hereunder, the sufficiency of which shall be properly certified by a court or courts of competent jurisdiction, guaranteeing the United States against any future demand or liability on account of the said bonds and coupons or either of them: And provided further, That the said administrator of the estate of the said Gustave Elsberg shall also file with the Secretary of the Treasury a satisfactory affidavit that the said bonds and coupons, or any part thereof, have not, by the said Gustave Elsberg in his life-time, nor by his said administrator since, been sold, transferred, assigned, or otherwise in any way disposed of.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the question of objection is disposed of, I trust the report will be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled, under the modification of the rule, to have the report read if there be one.

Mr. ERRETT. There is a report accompanying the House bill upon the same subject.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I would inquire of the gentleman why this party cannot obtain relief under the general statute?

Mr. ERRETT. The general statute only covers cases where the parties can make absolute proof of loss.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Why should not that be required in this case?

Mr. ERRETT. Because the bonds have been stolen and are supposed to have been lost. This bill gives the Secretary of the Treasury power to pay only upon being satisfied that the bonds were lost.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

This bill is a duplicate of one presented in the Forty-sixth Congress, (H. R. No. 3711,) which was reported upon favorably by the Committee on Ways and Means, but was not acted upon by the House. That report was as follows, and is hereby admitted as a succinct statement of the facts in the case:

"On the 13th day of June, 1863, Gustave Elsberg, of Santa Fé, in the Territory of New Mexico, subscribed for and purchased, through Clark Brothers & Co., bankers in Saint Louis, Missouri, $4,000 of United States 5-20 6 per cent. bonds, second series, issued under the act of February 25, 1862, and paid in full for the same. The bonds were severally of the denomination and value of $500, numbered 22515 to 22522 inclusive, with interest coupons attached. They were left for safe-keeping with the bankers from whom they were purchased until the 11th day of June, 1865, when Elsberg took them and left Saint Louis for Santa Fé. He arrived at Leavenworth, Kansas, on the 14th, and took a room at the Planters' Hotel. The bonds, with other papers, were in a small valise. He left his room for a few moments, and on returning to it found it had been entered in his absence and his valise and contents stolen. He gave immediate notice of his loss at the office of the hotel, and telegraphed Clark Brothers & Co., requesting them to give public notice, which they did at once through circulars, describing the bonds. Notices were also given in all the Leavenworth papers and conspicuously posted about the city, and a reward of $500 offered for the recovery of the bonds. Other rooms in the hotel were also entered and robbed on the same day.

"Just before dark on the evening of that day the boatman who had charge of the ferry over the Missouri River at Leavenworth rowed a suspicious-looking man across the river, who had in his possession a valise answering the description of Elsberg's, and when the boat was in the middle of the river, which was then high and the current very rapid, threw the valise overboard, and it was never, to the knowledge of Elsberg, afterward seen.

"No coupons had been detached from the bonds at the time of their loss, and Elsberg was the bona fide owner of both bonds and coupons, and has never since disposed of his interest in them, nor made any assignment, negotiation, or contract with respect to them. The class of bonds to which they belonged was called for redemption on the 21st day of June, 1873, and neither the bonds nor any of the coupons have ever been presented at the Treasury for payment.

"The committee are of opinion that relief should be granted on the execution of satisfactory indemnity to the Government, and recommend the passage of the bill."

Your committee report herewith a substitute for the bill, giving the Secretary of the Treasury power to hear and adjudicate this claim, instead of directing him to pay it; and authorizing him to pay it if satisfied it is correct, under certain restrictions, to prevent the occurrence of any attempt at fraud; and, thus guarded, they recommend the passage of the substitute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill at this time? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ERRETT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FEES AND PRACTICE IN EXTRADITION CASES.

Mr. REED. I have been directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to ask that Senate bill No. 979, to regulate the fees and practice in extradition cases, may be taken from the Speaker's table and passed at this time.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all hearings in cases of extradition under treaty stipulation or convention shall be held on land, publicly, and in a room or office easily accessible to the public.

SEC. 2. That the following shall be the fees paid to commissioners in cases of extradition under treaty stipulation or convention between the Government of the United States and any foreign government, and no other fees or compensation shall be allowed to or received by them:

For administering an oath, ten cents.
For taking an acknowledgment, twenty-five cents.
For taking and certifying depositions to file, twenty cents for each folio.
For each copy of the same furnished to a party on request, ten cents for each folio.

For issuing any warrant or writ, and for any other service, the same compensation as is allowed clerks for like services.

For issuing any warrant under the tenth article of the treaty of August 9, 1842, between the United States and the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, against any person charged with any crime or offense as set forth in said article, $2.

For issuing any warrant under the provision of the convention for the surrender of criminals between the United States and the King of the French, concluded at Washington November 9, 1843, $2.

For hearing and deciding upon the case of any person charged with any crime or offense, and arrested under the provisions of any treaty or convention, $5 a day for the time necessarily employed.

SEC. 3. That on the hearing of any case under a claim of extradition by any foreign government, upon affidavit being filed by the person charged setting forth that there are witnesses whose evidence is material to his defense, that he cannot safely go to trial without them, what he expects to prove by each of them, and that he is not possessed of sufficient means and is actually unable to pay the fees of such witnesses, the judge or commissioner before whom such claim for extradition is heard may order that such witnesses be subpoenaed; and in such cases the costs incurred by the process, and the fees of witnesses, shall be paid in the same manner that similar fees are paid in the case of witnesses subpoenaed in behalf of the United States.

SEC. 4. That all witness fees and costs of every nature in cases of extradition, including the fees of the commissioner, shall be certified by the judge or commissioner before whom the hearing shall take place to the Secretary of State of the United States, who is hereby authorized to allow the payment thereof out of the appropriation to defray the expenses of the judiciary; and the Secretary of State shall cause the amount of said fees and costs so allowed to be reimbursed to the Government of the United States by the foreign government by whom the proceedings for extradition may have been instituted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I presume some report has been prepared by the committee.

Mr. REED. This bill, I will say to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] does not contain any important matter; it is merely a regulation of fees and practice in extradition cases. The amendment which I desire to offer contains the matter for which it is really desirable to pass this bill. I think it is nothing more than fair, under the operation of the new rule, that the amendment should be read in order that gentlemen may understand precisely what they are asked to do.

I will say in explanation that this is a matter which the State Department regards of great importance. If this bill be not passed, then under the present state of the law it will be impossible to extradite criminals who are charged with very atrocious offenses.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the amendment proposed to be offered will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding:

"That in all cases where any depositions, warrants, or other papers or copies thereof shall be offered in evidence upon the hearing of any extradition case under title 60 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, such depositions, warrants, and other papers, or the copies thereof shall be received and admitted as evidence on such hearing for all the purposes of such hearing, if they shall be properly and legally authenticated so as to entitle them to be received for similar purposes by the tribunals of the foreign country from which the accused party shall have escaped; and the certificate of the principal diplomatic or consular officer of the United States resident in such foreign country shall be proof that any deposition, warrant, or other paper or copies thereof, so offered are authenticated in the manner required by this act.

"SEC. 6. The act approved June 19, 1876, entitled 'An act to amend section 5271 of the Revised Statutes of the United States,' and so much of said section 5271 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as is inconsistent with the provision of this act, are hereby repealed."

Mr. REED. The evil which this bill is designed to remedy—

The SPEAKER. The question of objection has not been submitted. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Maine moves to amend the bill as indicated by the reading of the Clerk.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the bill as amended to be read a third time.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary in relation to the fees provided for by this bill.

Mr. REED. I am informed that there are no very great changes in the fees. If the gentleman will look at the bill he will perceive that the fees as fixed by it are not unreasonable.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I do not know as to that. It appears to me that the charge per folio is a large one, and might be excessive upon a large record. I do not know what the present fees are; but I know there is a constant tendency on the part of officers in New York to have their fees increased. I know that the office of the clerk of the district court is the best office in the United States, paying probably $40,000 to $75,000 a year. I do not know to whom these fees are to go; but unless the chairman of the Judiciary Committee can give us some good reason, I do not think we ought to change the fee bill.

Mr. REED. I think that twenty cents per folio is the fee now, although I will not undertake to assert the fact confidently. My attention has been more particularly directed to the amendment. I looked over the bill in general; and the fees seemed to be, according to my recollection, the usual fees in such matters. I think twenty cents per folio is the ordinary charge.

Mr. HUTCHINS. To whom do these fees go?

Mr. REED. To the magistrate who performs the work—to the commissioner.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. REED moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ASSAY OFFICE AT DEADWOOD, DAKOTA.

Mr. FISHER. On behalf of my colleague on the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, the gentleman from California, [Mr. ROSECRANS,] and by instruction of the committee, I ask that Senate bill 1604, to establish an assay office at Deadwood, in the Territory of Dakota, be taken from the Speaker's table and passed. A House bill of similar purport has already been reported from that committee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to establish an assay office at Deadwood, in the Territory of Dakota; the said assay office to be conducted under the provisions of title 37 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of 1878.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed a suitable building at Deadwood, in the Territory of Dakota, for the purposes of said assay office, and provide the same with the necessary fixtures and apparatus, at a cost not exceeding $50,000, which sum is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. FISHER. I ask that the report submitted upon the House bill on this subject be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1887) to establish an assay office in the city of Deadwood, in the Territory of Dakota, respectfully report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the same do pass.

It was shown that the city of Deadwood, in the Black Hills, Dakota, is the principal city of that region and in the midst of the gold mines. Although these mines have been discovered but for a short time and are now in the infancy of their development, the product of gold for the year ending June 30, 1881, was $4,500,000, and the amount will be much larger for the year ending June 30, 1882. The total product of these mines deposited in the mints and assay offices of the United States is shown to have been $10,644,000 in gold up to June 30, 1881.

There are a great number of undeveloped mines of gold and silver and very rich placer diggings, and it is the opinion of your committee that the product of the precious metals will be greatly stimulated by the establishment of an assay office at this point.

The question being taken on the consideration of the bill, six members objected.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made by six members, the bill is not before the House.

MERIDIAN TIME OF NAVAL OBSERVATORY.

Mr. WHITE. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to ask that the bill which I send to the desk be put on its passage. I have here a report accompanying the bill.

The SPEAKER. Has this bill already been reported?

Mr. WHITE. Yes, sir; some time ago. The report of the committee is unanimous.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 5009) to provide for transmitting the meridian time of the Naval Observatory at Washington to ports of entry and other cities, and for placing time-balls on custom-houses, for the protection of commerce, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $25,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to provide for the expense of transmitting daily by telegraph the meridian time of the Naval Observatory at Washington, District of Columbia, to all the principal maritime ports of the United States having a custom-house, to United States navy-yards, and to State capitals, and cities having a population of not less than 15,000 inhabitants, when requested by the authorities thereof. The Secretary of the Treasury shall erect a suitable clock and time-ball on the custom-house at each of said maritime ports, and detail a person in each to attend to them, at an additional compensation of $5 per month at each custom-house for the extra work thus imposed. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay for the same out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That no city other than a port of entry with a custom-house shall be furnished with a clock and time-ball, or keeper for the same, by the Secretary of the Treasury. The said appropriation of $25,000 to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. WHITE. The Committee on Commerce, after fully considering this subject and consulting the late Rear-Admiral Rodgers, who was at that time Superintendent of the Naval Observatory, decided by a unanimous vote to recommend the passage of this bill. I shall not ask to consume the time of the House by the reading of the report, but will say that this measure has been fully approved by the late Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Hunt, and by the Navy Department. It is considered by the committee to be demanded for the safety of the commerce of the country on the land and on the sea.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let the report be read.

Mr. WAIT. I do not object, as it is a very interesting report.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Very well; let it be read.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred a bill to provide for placing time-balls on custom-houses at ports of entry, and for other purposes, having considered the same, make the following report:

The Naval Observatory, our only national observatory, is the proper and sole reliable source under the control of the Government from which exact time can be furnished for the promotion of foreign and interstate commerce.

Foreign nations have for years taken care to signal the correct time from their observatories, whereby the master of a ship, up to the last day of his stay in port, may ascertain the corrections to his chronometers. By these he is enabled, with the help of astronomical observations, to find the correct place of the ship on the chart. Having this, he sails with more security, with more confidence, in less time, with fewer chances, consequently, of bad weather, with diminished charges for passage, freight, and insurance. These are important helps to commerce, so important that foreign governments are careful to secure them. We, if true to our interests, will not neglect them.

The railroads of the United States, embarrassed by the evils arising from their multiple schedules of service, about seventy in number, are now earnestly seeking a remedy for them. This remedy can be readily furnished by the Government through the Naval Observatory. The benefit will be appreciated by the public at large. It only needs that Congress make the necessary appropriation to do this work, which will give greater security to life and property, as well by sea as by land.

The local time and the Washington time can be furnished wherever desired by very simple and inexpensive means; while, in truth, but a single signal need be sent at Washington noon; or a local clock, regulated through the telegraph by the Washington clock, may be so arranged as to drop a ball, automatically, at any hour which the citizens or the corporations may prefer. This may be done for any number of local clocks. From the Zeitsignal Stationen it will be seen how earnestly the countries of Europe and of the colonies have taken up the subject of time-signals for securing this important and indeed indispensable aid to the commerce and convenience of nations.

It is the general and most suitable rule to use the national meridian for the prime meridian of the country; most suitable, since the national meridian must be nearer any local one than a foreign meridian can be.

The Naval Observatory already finds the time with the necessary accuracy, and to send it out only needs funds to pay for the transmission of the telegraphic signals. Having the observatory, the Government consequently possesses exact time, the important and difficult part of the work being already paid for. The small appropriation asked will secure to a very large extent the benefits contemplated by the bill.

The time is to be furnished by officers of the Naval Observatory, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, and through instruments and apparatus solely under the control of the Navy Department. It seems therefore proper that the appropriation should be expended under the sanction of that Department.

On this subject your committee have the honor to call your attention to communications from the honorable Secretary of the Navy and Rear-Admiral John Rodgers, of the Naval Observatory.

In view, therefore, of these benefits, your committee report the bill named above, with the accompanying modifications, and recommend its passage.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, January 20, 1882.

GENTLEMEN: The bill with reference to placing "time-balls on custom-houses at ports of entry and at other cities, and for other purposes," was submitted by me to Rear-Admiral John Rodgers, Superintendent of the United States Naval Observatory.

The report of that learned and distinguished officer is forwarded to your committee and commended most strongly to their approval. It entirely coincides with the views entertained on the subject by the Department. The appropriation contemplated by the bill ought properly to be made by the Committee on Commerce. The measure proposed is especially for the benefit of the commercial interests of the nation. The information is to be furnished by the Naval Observatory, by officers and through instruments and apparatus solely under control of this Department. It is, therefore, proper that the appropriation should be expended under the sanction of the Department.

It is to be hoped that a measure so generally useful will be promptly adopted by Congress.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

WILLIAM H. HUNT,

Secretary of the Navy.

To Hon. JOHN D. WHITE, WILLIAM WARD, THOS. H. HENDON,
Sub-committee on Commerce, House of Representatives.

UNITED STATES NAVAL OBSERVATORY,
Washington, February 4, 1882.

SIR: Every one has remarked that with the seasons the stars and the planets change their apparent places in the heavens, or, in other words, that time enters into their positions with respect to their places in the sky. At an observatory, consequently, accurate time must be kept. This can only be done by regulating clocks, the highest human mechanism for measuring time, by means of the movements of the heavenly bodies, which, regulated by the Divine Artificer, move with perfect accuracy.

That the Naval Observatory keeps time as accurately as humanity allows may then be assumed without any statement to this effect. It has in practical use all the means of doing this, telescopes, chronographs, clocks, and trained observers.

It sends out the time every day to New York; and besides dropping a ball at noon from the dome of the Observatory it gives daily signals to several places in the city.

The telegraph is used in the transmission of time, and as the signal travels at a rate sometimes reckoned as equal to ten times the circumference of the earth in one second of time it may for any practicable distance be considered as instantaneous.

Carefully elaborated mechanism devised here is used to give automatically the time to the electric wires. These pass it on in a flash to the end of the route; and the telegraph company has it in its power to signal to as many places as it chooses the same flash at the same moment. This flash may be used, and is used, to drop a ball, which it is needless to say falls at once.

Ships find their longitude mainly by means of chronometers—time-pieces regulated to run accurately independent of the movements of the vessel. Other means are known to navigators; but practically these other methods are little used at sea. The chronometer is used to show the time at the prime meridian of Greenwich, Paris, Madrid, Pulkova, or other places. The local time of the ship is found by astronomical observation at sea. The difference between the time shown by the chronometer and the local time is an expression, in time, for the difference of longitude between the prime meridian and the ship, at the rate of 15 degrees for each hour.

Our ships navigate by Greenwich as the prime meridian. This is in obedience to a law of Congress. Originally, the United States published no chart and no nautical almanac, and our ships were forced to use the publications of England. When in process of time private publishers copied the charts of England, the prime meridian of the mother country continued to be used. When the Nautical Almanac was calculated and published in the United States, it was then proposed to adopt for the United States Washington as the prime meridian. This so conflicted with private interests, since the adoption would necessitate throwing away all the large and valuable copper-plates of private publishers, engraved to Greenwich as the prime meridian, that Congress passed a law that the Nautical Almanac should have certain parts for the use of shipping calculated and published for the meridian of Greenwich, and certain parts for the meridian of Washington. (Revised Statutes, section 435.)

This law is now operative, and I am not prepared to say it is not a good one. The great chart-makers of the world are the English. Their surveying vessels explore every coast and every sea. Wherever our ships sail they find that the principal sources of maritime knowledge are English ones; and they use the longitude which our sailors use, namely, Greenwich.

In signaling time, however, it makes no difference what noon is shown. Since our noon is 5h. 8m. 12s. from Greenwich, the navigator has 5h. 8m. 12s., Greenwich, signaled to him when our time at noon is shown; so for other prime meridians—Russian, German, French, or Spanish.

All the countries of Europe show time-signals in their seaports from their national observatories.

As navigation is based upon knowing the latitude and longitude of the ship, astronomy, as applied to navigation, cannot be used without the time for which the Nautical Almanac are computed.

Facilities to rate chronometers are then a necessary aid to the navigator. The navigator may rate his chronometer by his own observations, but not so well as by the help of an observatory; and it is not every ship which has an artificial horizon, or has an observer accustomed to its use.

As was before said, the nautical tables predict the places of the heavenly bodies in the sky for the prime meridian of the almanac. As these places change every hour the time of the prime meridian must be known with accuracy. This time is shown by the ship's chronometers; and their rate or daily performance must be known as well as the accumulated error. It has been found impossible to make watches which neither gain nor lose in time. The world, therefore, contents itself with ascertaining the daily change, which is called rate; and the accumulated daily rate, which is called error. A single comparison establishes the error; but the rate is found by continuous comparisons with a correct standard. For example: If the face of the chronometer on January 1 be one minute faster than, say, Washington time, one minute is the error; and if it gain one second every day, its rate is one second, gaining. The rate is supposed to remain constant; but the error changes every day by the addition of one second. On January 30 the error will be one minute thirty seconds; but the rate is still one second, gaining.

This error and this rate are necessary to the navigator; he cannot else find his place on the charts, and the ship would lose her way. She would not know where she was, nor her position with regard to her port, nor to the shoals, rocks, and islands which may lie in her path. Time-signals from an observatory give the captain the means of finding the error and rate of his chronometer to the last day of his stay in port, a most important boon, one which enters as a prime factor in safety, and consequently in freights and insurance.

Most people who travel extensively by rail in the United States find the changes of time on railroads from one meridian to another a vexatious snare and delusion. His watch running on mean time cannot inform the traveler of the constant alterations in the schedules of the railroads. He finds by his time-table that the next train starts five minutes after his arrival, or even before he arrives, when, in fact, he has half an hour for his meal. This arises from the connecting trains using different prime meridians.

The people away from observatories find that their clocks and watches differ extremely, and no one knows which are right; they may all be wrong. Jewelers are considered the repositories of correct local time. The intelligent ones know that they have no means of ascertaining this correctly. The citizen knows that they all differ. He is often content to take railroad time brought from a distance. Savages, to whom time is of little importance, are content to estimate it very roughly; but the civilized man, making exact appointments, specifies the time of his various engagements, and in proportion to his activity and usefulness exact time is to him a matter of necessity. Some of the large towns of the United States have made arrangements with their State observatories whereby they have observatory time of their own selection sent to them by electric telegraph. These towns are entitled to their preferences. Congress, I presume, has no wish to interfere with them. I think it would be well to have Washington time given to shipping, for the benefit of commerce, by means of a time-ball on the custom-house, or other building, selected by the Secretary of the Treasury. All sailors who cross the ocean keep local time for the regulation of life and labor on shipboard and that of some prime meridian in order properly to use the astronomical predictions of the Nautical Almanac for finding the position of the ship.

This solution of the time problem seems the plain-sense, practical one: the national prime meridian of Washington for certain purposes requiring continuous time, and local time for the daily purposes of life.

If no objection be found in law, I should venture to propose, as a boon to travelers, that, under the power to regulate post-roads given by the Constitution to Congress, all railroads which carry the mails be required to print continuous Washington time in their tables, leaving them at liberty to run on the time they may select, and to print whatever else they please. The traveler will be protected from vexation and annoyance, and the railroads have the same freedom as now to select their standards and print their schedules regulating travel.

It appears, however, that the railroads, finding the inconveniences of the multiple standards of time, are seeking for a uniform one for their own use. (See notice from Mr. W. F. Allen, secretary, printed on the forty-third page of the Travelers' Official Railroad Guide for January, 1881.)

The only proper standard of time is, if the practice of the world be taken as a guide, that of the national prime meridian, namely, Washington time for the United States.

Finally, it is recommended from all the foregoing premises that a time-ball be dropped from this observatory at all the principal ports of entry of the United States at Washington noon, and that any city, town, or railroad desiring it may receive the same signal. It will only be necessary that at each point where the signal is received a suitable means be provided. This may be accomplished by having a clock connected with the telegraph wire over which the signal passes. The clock may be so arranged that the signal will set the clock every day to Washington noon. By having two hour and two minute hands upon the same dial the clock could be made to show the local time of the place as well as Washington time.

It seems advisable that the appropriation for time-signals be inserted in the bill for the protection of commerce rather than in the bill for the Navy proper, as the Navy would in the latter case be charged for an accommodation which belongs to commerce rather than to the Navy. To the Government it can make no great difference, as the cost will be the same in either case. An additional advantage will be that the cost stands out alone, and not covered up in other appropriations. It may be that the first cost of telegraphing time-signals to all the cities having a population of not less than 15,000 inhabitants will involve an outlay greater than Congress is willing to sanction.

The system should be allowed to grow gradually rather than be forced at once into full vigor. No town, apparently, should have time-signals unless they be asked for, and the town should be at the expense of providing a suitable clock and a suitable person to take care of it; the signal only to be sent free of cost. Few towns of 15,000 inhabitants are without a jeweler who would gladly undertake the work, either singly or by co-operation.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN RODGERS,
Rear-Admiral, Superintendent.

Hon. JOHN D. WHITE,
Chairman sub-committee of Committee on Commerce,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

UNITED STATES OBSERVATORY,
Washington, March 1, 1882.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 25th ultimo, with its inclosure.

It is difficult to ascertain the exact cost of erecting time-balls, since the plans for doing the work are many, each one having its separate features.

I would recommend a simple, light cylinder of metal, about four feet in length and of the same diameter, running on a gas tube three inches in diameter, about eleven feet long, falling into a metal tub. The cylinder falling into the tub of nearly the same size will compress the air, thus cushioning and coming to rest.

The cylinder, the tub, and tube are simple, easily made, and of common materials. They cannot be dear. The exact cost I cannot know, as I have not made them; but for this and for dropping apparatus I estimate $175.

I have an offer from Mr. P. H. Dudley of suitable clocks for $285 each, and his electrical attachment to set the clock automatically by time-signal each day for $50; wire, battery, and connections, $100; miscellaneous, packing, freight, &c., $50; in all $660 for each station in order to equip it for dropping the time-ball, and for a clock which will serve for regulating chronometers when the time-signal shall fail from storms or other causes. The bill of Hon. J. FLOYD KING (H. R. No. 894) has been so amended as to confine the time-signals, by Government, to the principal maritime ports.

In looking over a list of ports I estimate the "principal maritime ports" as numbering about twenty-three; which number, multiplied by the cost of time equipment, will amount to $15,840 for the United States. If this sum be proportioned to the value of our foreign commerce, it will be seen that it is not great.

The letter of the honorable Secretary of the Treasury is herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN RODGERS,
Rear-Admiral, Superintendent.

Hon. JOHN D. WHITE,
Chairman of the sub-committee of Committee on Commerce,
United States House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. COX, of New York. There is.

The SPEAKER. Eleven members object, and the bill is not before the House.

FORT BENTON MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to take up House bill No. 5222, to restore the Fort Benton military reservation to the public domain, and for other purposes, and to move as a substitute therefor the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to restore to the Secretary of the Interior the custody and control of the military reservation at Fort Benton, Montana. The Secretary of the Interior shall dispose of the same under the public-land laws, and such actual settlers as are now on said tract in pursuance of military authority shall be entitled to the first right of entry: Provided, That the following-described portion of said tract shall be disposed of under the provisions of section 2387 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to town-sites on public lands, to wit: Beginning at the northeast corner of lot numbered 3, in section 14, township 24 north, of range 8 east of the principal meridian; running thence due east eighty chains; thence due south to the Missouri River; thence along the northern bank of said Missouri River to the intersection of the eastern line of lot 3 in section 23 of said township; thence due north along the line of the town-site of Fort Benton to the place of beginning, as an addition to and a part of the present town site of Fort Benton: And provided further, That there is reserved from said described tract of land to Mrs. Sarah E. Eastman, widow and administratrix of Francis Henry Eastman and William S. Wetzel, the land on which the fur-trading post known as Old Fort Benton stands, and the land inclosed and occupied by them, as described on plats on file in the War Department, the same being six acres, more or less, to which they shall have the prior right of entry, and that the same be conveyed to them by the proper authorities upon their compliance with law. The county judge of the county in which said town-site is situated shall cause to be made a survey and plat of said tract of land, and the said plat thereof shall be filed in the office of the register of the proper land office within ninety days from and after the passage of this act; and thereupon it shall be lawful for the county judge, as trustee of said town-site, to make entry of said tract of land at the local land office and to dispose of the same to occupants in the same manner as if the same had been a part of the original town-site of Fort Benton.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have the report read.

The SPEAKER. The hour has expired, and the bill will go over as unfinished business.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I ask by unanimous consent that the report of the Senate committee, as well as the report of the House committee, be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection; and it is ordered accordingly.

The reports are as follows:

The bill proposes to restore the Fort Benton military reservation to the Secretary of the Interior, for disposition under the general laws and as therein provided. Its history is given in H. Ex. Doc. No. 39, Forty-seventh Congress, first session, entitled Abandoned Military Reservations, as shown in following extracts:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, September 19, 1881.

Respectfully submitted to the Secretary of War.

A military reservation for Fort Benton, Montana, was declared by the President of the United States, under date of December 1, 1869, with boundaries as announced in General Orders, No. 77, November 6, 1869, from headquarters Department of Dakota, copy inclosed, the area being 3.24 square miles—about one mile wide and three miles long.

Upon the occupation of the post by United States troops in October, 1869, the buildings, which belonged to the "Northwest Fur Company," were rented by the Government at $167 per month.

For several years past the troops have been stationed in the town of Fort Benton, adjoining the reservation on the west, and the old "fort" appears to be in ruins, (vide accompanying transcript.)

By Special Orders No. 77, paragraph 4, May 2, 1881, from headquarters Department of Dakota, the "post of Fort Benton" was discontinued, and the rented buildings directed to be turned over to the owners by May 31, 1881.

In response to an inquiry of the Adjutant-General, the district and department commanders now unite in reporting that the reservation will not in the future be required for military purposes.

As to condition of buildings on the reservation attention is invited to report of the district commander, third indorsement hereon.

The Quartermaster-General recommends that the reservation be turned over to the Interior Department for such disposition as may by that Department be legally made of it; but under the ruling of the War Department, and in view of the recent opinion of the Attorney-General in case of the Fort Fetterman hay reservation, it will require the authority of Congress to dispose of it.

Under a House resolution asking what military posts could be disposed of, the abandonment of Fort Benton (among others) was recommended by the division commander, and in letter of February 24, 1872, the Secretary of War informed the House that the reservation at this post could be disposed of without injury to the service. No final action appears to have been taken by Congress in the matter.

W. T. SHERMAN, General.

HEADQUARTERS DISTRICT OF MONTANA,
Helena, Montana, July 26, 1881.

Respectfully returned to the adjutant-general, Department of Dakota. I am of opinion that the military reservation at Fort Benton will not in the future be required for military purposes. The improvements on the reservation consist of one frame stable, 28 by 128 feet, condition good, approximate value $300; also one adobe building, (the old post of the American Fur Company,) 25 by 35 feet, present condition bad, roof and part of wall broken. This building is of little, if any, value for sale apart from the land, and of no certain value under any condition of sale. There are two small log houses and one small frame house on the reservation belonging to citizens, who, it is reported, placed such buildings on the reservation by permission of the then commanding officer.

There appears to have been no record of this matter at Fort Benton. The frame stable will be sold at public auction August 10, in accordance with directions, by indorsement of June 27, 1881, from headquarters Department of Dakota, on letter of June 11, 1881, from the Quartermaster-General to the chief quartermaster Military Division of the Missouri.

THOMAS H. RUGER,
Colonel Eighteenth Infantry, Commanding District.

Your committee find that the lands embraced in the reservation are mostly of the ordinary character and value of the surrounding public lands, and recommend that they be disposed of under the public land laws, reserving the right of first entry to actual settlers.

To this general disposition of the lands two exceptions are made: of one tract, containing about 160 acres, adjoining the village of Fort Benton, which the Secretary is authorized to dispose of under the provisions of the town-site laws of the United States and of the Territory, whereby actual settlers only are entitled to enter lots.

Another exception is made in favor of the owners of the old Fort Benton fur-trading establishment, who are given the first right of entry on six acres of ground occupied by their establishment for thirty years or more, and on which their buildings are still standing. To this their first right of entry is protected.

Your committee recommend certain amendments to said bill to make it conform to the above recommendations, and as so amended recommend the passage of the bill.

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill to restore the military reservation at Fort Benton to the public domain, and for other purposes, respectfully report:

That no fort or other military post was ever erected on this reservation. The land was withdrawn from the public domain at a time when the Government had under consideration the purchase of certain adobe buildings which belonged to an old fur-trading establishment known as Fort Benton. Afterward the military authorities changed their opinions, the buildings were not purchased, and no military post was ever constructed on the reservation.

Your committee find that the lands embraced in the reservation are mostly of the ordinary character and value of the surrounding public lands, and recommend that they be disposed of under the public-land laws, reserving the right of first entry to actual settlers.

To this general disposition of the lands two exceptions are made: of one tract, containing about one hundred and sixty acres, adjoining the village of Fort Benton, which the Secretary is authorized to dispose of under the provisions of the town-site laws of the United States and of the Territory, whereby actual settlers only are entitled to enter lots.

Another exception is made in favor of the owners of the old Fort Benton fur-trading establishment, who are given the first right of entry on six acres of ground occupied by their establishment for thirty years or more, and on which their buildings are still standing. To this their first right of entry is protected.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, January 30, 1882.

SIR: Referring to bill H. R. No. 1916, entitled "A bill to restore the Fort Benton military reservation to the public domain, and for other purposes," a copy of which was received with your letter of the 20th instant asking the views of this Department in relation thereto, I have the honor to invite attention to executive communication of the 26th instant, transmitting to Congress a letter of this Department of the 17th instant, reporting a list of reservations no longer needed for military purposes, and recommending such legislation as will provide for their disposal.

Said list, which, with its accompanying papers, was on the 26th instant referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, includes the Fort Benton reservation, mentioned above.

The bill (1916) meets the approval and recommendation of the General of the Army and of this Department.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

Hon. GEO. R. DAVIS,
Of the Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

JOHN GARDNER, DECEASED.

Mr. KASSON, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 6609) to authorize the sale of certain lands in Dallas County, Iowa, devised to the United States by the last will and testament of John Gardner, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NICK S. McCOWN.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6843) to increase the pension of Nick S. McCown; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE SAINT LAWRENCE.

Mr. PARKER. I ask by unanimous consent to call up from the Speaker's table joint resolution (S. No. 81) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the Saint Lawrence River. It has been reported favorably upon by the committee of this House. It has not only passed the Senate, but it has the indorsement also of the Secretary of War. The location and construction of the bridge are to be subject to the supervision of the Secretary of War.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That any bridge and its appurtenances which shall be constructed across the river Saint Lawrence from a point on the right or southerly bank thereof in or near the village of Waddington, in the county of Saint Lawrence, in the State of New York, to a point on the left or northerly bank thereof in the county of Dundas, Province of Ontario, in the Dominion of Canada, by the New York and Canada Bridge Company, or any other company which has been or may be incorporated by the Legislature of the State of New York for that purpose, shall be lawful structures, and shall be so held and taken; and the same are hereby authorized to be constructed and maintained under the limitations and restrictions of this joint resolution.

SEC. 2. That the bridge herein named shall be subject in its location and construction to the supervision of the Secretary of War of the United States, to whom the plans and specifications relative to its location and construction shall be submitted for approval. And all railway companies desiring to use the said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges in the passage of the same, and in the use of the machinery and fixtures thereof and of all the approaches thereto, under and upon such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the district court of the United States for the northern district of New York, upon hearing the allegations and proofs of the parties, in case they shall not agree.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter or amend this joint resolution so as to prevent or remove all material obstructions to the navigation of the said river by the construction of said bridge is hereby expressly reserved.

SEC. 4. That the company authorized by this joint resolution to construct and maintain said bridge may for that purpose unite with the Ottawa, Waddington and New York Railway and Bridge Company, a company incorporated by an act of the Parliament of the Dominion of Canada, or with any other company incorporated by the Parliament of said Dominion for such purpose, under the limitations and restrictions of sections 1 and 2 of this joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not notice whether there is any provision in regard to the charge for the transportation of the mails.

Mr. PARKER. There is no such provision in the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. It might not under the circumstances of the case be important. If the gentleman thinks it is of no consequence in this case to provide for the transportation of the mails, I will not insist.

Mr. PARKER. I do not want to send the bill back to the Senate, and an amendment would do that.

There was no objection, and the joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PARKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HYACINTHE ROBERT AGNEL.

Mr. OATES. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 602 and put it upon its passage. It will not take five minutes, I think, to dispose of it.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to examine into, ascertain, and determine the value of the construction of certain quarters at the United States Military Academy at West Point which was heretofore paid for by Hyacinthe Robert Agnel, deceased, late professor of the French language at said Military Academy; and the amount so ascertained, with legal interest thereon from the time of such payment by the said deceased, shall be paid, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to the heirs and legal representatives of the said Hyacinthe Robert Agnel, deceased: Provided, That the amount so to be paid shall not exceed the sum of $5,000.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I wish to inquire, reserving the right to object, whether this matter has been considered by any committee of this House?

Mr. OATES. It has been thoroughly considered by the Committee on Claims, and a unanimous report made.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Then I have no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the report be read.

Mr. OATES. I think if I may make a brief statement the gentleman will not make any objection to the bill. I move to amend the bill in accordance with the suggestion of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain a motion to amend the bill until the right to consider it is conceded by the House.

Mr. OATES. I will state that this was considered by the Committee on Claims, and from the evidence it was ascertained that the amount to be paid should be $650, and this upon testimony which the committee believed to be entirely sufficient to establish the justice of the claim.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be first read.

The report was read, as follows:

Hyacinthe Robert Agnel, late professor of the French language at the United States Military Academy at West Point, New York, in the year 1848, made improvements and additions to certain houses on the Government land occupied by the professors at said academy, and paid for the same out of his individual funds. He claimed to have thus expended over $700. The work was necessary, and was accepted by the Government. Lieutenant Gillmore, the quartermaster, examined the work in 1856, and reported to the War Department that it was worth $650.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of said bill with the following amendment: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following in lieu thereof, to wit: "That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to the heirs at law and legal representatives of Hyacinthe Robert Agnel, deceased, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $650, in full satisfaction of his claim upon the Government for money expended by said Agnel, for repairs and improvements made upon professors' houses at West Point Military Academy."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. OATES. I now move to amend by striking out all after the enacting clause and insert as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to the heirs and legal representatives of Hyacinthe Robert Agnel, deceased, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $650, in full satisfaction of his claim upon the Government for money expended by said Agnel for repairs and improvements made upon professors' houses at West Point Military Academy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time; and being read the third time, was passed.

Mr. OATES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PICCATINNY POWDER DEPOT, NEW JERSEY.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill S. No. 838 and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read. It is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the right of way, not exceeding one hundred feet in width, through the lands of the United States included in the Piccatinny powder depot, near Dover, in the State of New Jersey, is hereby granted to the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey for the purpose of constructing a railroad: Provided, That the said right of way, and the width and location thereof, through said lands, and the regulations for operating said railroad within the limits of the reservation so as to prevent all danger to public property, shall be submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War prior to any entry on said lands or the commencement of the construction of said works: Provided, also, That such sidings, tracks, switches, and loading stations as may at any time be required by the Secretary of War shall be promptly provided by said railroad company; and that such stoppage of trains and generally such facilities and privileges as the United States may desire for the shipment of materials of war at any time shall be provided by said railroad company: Provided, also, That whenever said right of way shall cease to be used for the purposes aforesaid the same shall revert to the United States: And provided further, That the right to repeal, alter, or amend this act is reserved to Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. ANDERSON. I would like to know something about this first. Has it been before any committee of this House?

Mr. HILL. It has been before a committee.

Mr. ANDERSON. What committee?

Mr. HILL. The Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Committee on Military Affairs reported it unanimously.

Mr. HILL. This road was promised to be built at the time the Government bought the property, provided the right of way could be secured.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The title of this bill indicates the general purpose thereof, granting the right of way through the property of the United States near Dover, New Jersey, used by the Government and known as the Piccatinny powder depot, to the Central Railroad of New Jersey. The nearest point from the depot to any railroad is three miles away, over a difficult road for hauling, which adds largely to the expense of the building operations at the depot, and it would seem therefore to be necessary that closer connection should be had.

The railroad company named are willing to extend their road, as indicated in the bill, up to and into the depot next spring, provided the right of way be granted as aforesaid.

Upon the suggestion of the Secretary of War, the committee adopt and offer the following amendment, fourteenth line, after words "said works;":

Provided, also, That such sidings, tracks, switches, and loading stations as may at any time be required by the Secretary of War shall be promptly provided by said railroad company, and that such stoppage of trains and generally such facilities and privileges as the United States may desire for the shipment of materials of war at any time shall be provided by said railroad company."

The bill, with the foregoing amendment, meets the approval of the honorable the Secretary of War, based upon a report upon the subject by Brigadier-General S. V. Benét, Chief of Ordnance. The communication of the Secretary of War and the report of the Chief of Ordnance are herewith made a part of this report, and are as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, January 28, 1882.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of the 18th instant, inclosing Senate bill 838, to grant the right of way for railroad purposes through the United States lands at the Piccatinny powder depot, near Dover, New Jersey, and in reply have the honor to invite your attention to the inclosed report of the Chief of Ordnance on the subject, and to state that the bill, with the amendment suggested by the Chief of Ordnance, meets the approval of this Department.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

Hon. W. J. SEWELL,
Of Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate.

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 26, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to return the bill (S. 838) "to grant the right of way for railroad purposes through the lands of the United States powder depot near Dover, New Jersey, with the following report:

I recommend that, on line 14, after the word "works," the following proviso be added, namely:

Provided, also, That such sidings, tracks, switches, and loading stations as may at any time be required by the Secretary of War shall be promptly provided by said railroad company, and that such stoppage of trains and generally such facilities and privileges as the United States may desire for the shipment of materials of war at any time shall be provided by said railroad company."

The passage of this bill and the construction of a railroad through these lands will connect the powder depot with the railroad system of the country. This connection was contemplated when the site was selected and the land purchased as being an economical necessity in the cheap transportation of material during the construction of the magazines and other buildings, and for the prompt and safe distribution of gunpowder after the depot is in operation.

The distance of boundary line from the nearest railroad is over three miles, through a rather difficult country for hauling, at a cost of over $1.15 per ton, which increases the expense of the building operations at the depot. The Central Railroad Company of New Jersey are willing to extend their road up to and into the depot this spring, for the convenience of the United States, provided the right of way be granted through the lands as provided for in this bill, and of which it can avail itself to make railroad connections beyond the reservation, thus bringing the depot in direct connection with all parts of the country.

I consider this a fair and liberal proposition on the part of the railroad. The line of the railroad will be located on the side-hills bordering the track, at a very safe distance from all buildings, and effecting no damage whatever to the value of the Government property.

I respectfully recommend the passage of this bill as herewith amended.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. V. BENÉT,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

The honorable the Secretary of War.

The consideration by which the Central Railroad Company is willing to perform this work for the convenience of the United States, and by which the required grant is made on the part of the Government to the said company, is one of mutual benefit—the United States being able to carry on its business more rapidly and at less expense at the depot, and the railroad company having thereby the means of making its connections beyond the boundaries of the depot.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, still reserving the right to object I wish to ask if this is a House or Senate bill?

Mr. HILL. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, as to the amendment suggested by the Secretary of War, has that been incorporated into the bill?

Mr. HILL. It has been.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I hope the gentleman will consent also to add to that amendment suggested by the Secretary of War the words "at the expense of said company." For of course if these changes are made at the instance of the Government of the United States, the inference would be that the expense incident to such changes should be borne by the Government. I have no doubt that the object is to require the company to pay this expense, but it ought to be so stated and specifically.

Mr. HILL. Of course that is the intention of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is not so provided. I suggest, therefore, that after the word "company," in the twentieth line of the bill, after this proviso inserted at the suggestion of the Secretary of War, the words I have specified may be inserted.

Mr. HILL. I do not think that is necessary. I do not want to delay the passage of the bill by requiring it to go back to the Senate. It has been lying here upon the table for over two months.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask if there is objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Still reserving the right to object, I ask the gentleman to allow this amendment to be incorporated.

Mr. HILL. This company promised, when the Government bought this tract of land, to build the railroad in order to give communication with the main railroad systems of the country and to enable material to be obtained from the seaboard with facility. It was never contemplated that the Government should have anything to do with building the road, but simply to grant the right of way to the company.

Mr. HOLMAN. But all the facilities which the Government may require shall be furnished as required in this bill, and of course that will be at the expense of the United States unless otherwise provided. I think it should be clearly provided in the bill that this expense is to be borne by the company.

Mr. HILL. I do not think it is at all necessary.

Mr. HOLMAN. This proviso reads as follows:

Provided, also, That such sidings, tracks, switches, and loading stations as may at any time be required by the Secretary of War, shall be promptly provided by said railroad company, and that such stoppage of trains, and generally such facilities and privileges as the United States may desire for the shipment of materials of war at any time shall be provided by said railroad company.

Now, I think after the word "company," at the end of that proviso, it should be amended so as to read, "at its own expense."

Mr. HILL. Personally I have no objection to the amendment; but it is entirely unnecessary, and will simply require the bill to go back to the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. Unless this is done the inference would be plain that this expense is to be borne by the Government.

Mr. HILL. Such an amendment will only hinder the passage of the bill and accomplish no good.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the words which I have suggested ought to come in after the word "company" in this proviso.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to have inserted the words "at the expense of said company." I reserve the right to object.

Mr. HILL. I will allow that amendment to go in.

The SPEAKER. The question is whether the bill shall be brought before the House for consideration. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Does the gentleman from Indiana offer an amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "company," in the proviso, insert the words "at the expense of said company."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Upon that I call for a division.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 66, noes 4.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum, I believe.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN, and the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. HILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire that the facts should be stated to the House that before this bill came before the House for consideration it was agreed the words embraced in my amendment should be added.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair could not do anything further than to submit the amendment to a vote.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggested an amendment, and unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill was based upon that. The bill came before the House on that condition.

The SPEAKER. That was perhaps an arrangement between the gentleman from Indiana and some others. The Chair does not know anything about that. The gentleman from New Jersey and the gentleman from Indiana will take their places as tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe it has been customary for the Chair in such cases to submit the request for unanimous consent that a certain amendment might be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The House has voted down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. But it did so under a misapprehension. Good faith should rule in the House in such matters.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question again. Is there objection to having the amendment made which was suggested by the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, and others objected.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will take their places.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 79, noes 6.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the point as to a quorum and call for the regular order.

So (further count not being called for) the bill was passed.

Mr. HILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate disagreed to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. No. 126) to reimburse the Creek orphan fund, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SLATER, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COKE as conferees on the part of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HASKELL. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. ELLIS. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

Mr. BAYNE. Pending that I ask unanimous consent—

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order cuts off everything else.

The motion to dispense with the morning hour was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up—

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] calls up the partially executed special order of the House relating to business presented by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HASKELL. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. DEERING.]

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW LANDS.

Mr. DEERING. I call up for present consideration from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 60) to grant a right of way for a railroad and telegraph line through the lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians to the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is that the regular order?

The SPEAKER. It is. The regular order is the further consideration of business presented by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. COX, of New York. How long does that run?

The SPEAKER. For two hours and thirty minutes, the Chair is informed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That a right of way is hereby granted to the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, a corporation duly organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, for the construction of a railroad and telegraph line, said right of way to be one hundred and fifty feet in width, through that part of the lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations occupied by the Choctaws, and three hundred feet in width at each station for a distance of four thousand feet in length, said right of way to commence at any point to be selected by said company on the line of the Choctaw Nation immediately contiguous to Sebastian or Scott Counties, in the State of Arkansas, and run thence in a southwesterly direction on the most direct and practicable route through the lands of the said Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations in the direction of Paris, in the State of Texas; said road to continue or connect with a proposed road from the city of Paris aforesaid.

SEC. 2. That the said Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway Company shall accept this right of way upon express condition, binding upon itself, its successors and assigns, that they will neither aid, advise, nor assist in any effort looking toward the changing or extinguishing the present tenure of the Choctaws or Chickasaws in their lands, and will not attempt to secure from the Choctaw or Chickasaw Nation any further grant of land, or its occupancy, than is hereinbefore provided: Provided, That any violation of the condition mentioned in this section shall operate as a forfeiture of all the rights and privileges of said railway company under this act.

SEC. 3. That the said railway company shall pay for all property injured or destroyed by said company, and for all material taken and used in the construction, operation, or repairs of said road and telegraph line, and shall take no such material except under contract with the proper authorities of the Choctaw or Chickasaw Nation, and according to the laws thereof: Provided, That before the construction of said road through any lands held by individual occupants according to the laws, customs, and usages of said nations, full compensation shall be made to such occupants for all property to be taken or damages to them by reason of the construction of the said road and telegraph line. In case of failure to make and cable settlements in any case, either national or individual, such compensation shall be determined by appraisalment of three disinterested referees, one to be named by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, one by the principal chief of said nation claiming damages or to which the persons claiming damages belong, and one by said company. This provision shall also apply to all cases of injury to persons or property occasioned by the construction or operation of said road and telegraph line, after the construction thereof shall have been commenced. Said arbitrators shall receive not exceeding $4 per day for each, with mileage not exceeding six cents per mile, and witnesses shall receive the usual fees allowed by the courts of said nations. Costs shall be made a part of the award, and be paid by the losing party.

In case of failure to pay such award, the Secretary of the Interior shall be, and is hereby, authorized to forbid the further passage of trains, or the use of said right of way, and to remove the agents and employees of said company from the limits of said nations, as intruders under the intercourse laws of the United States, until such time as payment shall be made by said company.

And in addition to the foregoing, the injured parties shall have the right of recourse to all legal remedies that may be applicable in like cases in the judicial tribunals; and consent is hereby given that the civil jurisdiction of the district court of the United States for the western district of Arkansas, and such other courts as may be established by authority of the United States, shall be extended within the territory and limits of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, without distinction as to citizenship of the parties, so far as may be necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 4. That for and in consideration of the uses and grants aforesaid, the said railway company shall pay quarterly annually to the national treasurers of said nations, every year during the existence of the rights and privileges granted to said company by this act, to be used for the benefit of schools therein, the sum of $750, one-fourth of said payments to be paid to the Chickasaws and three-fourths to be paid to the Choctaws; and until the first of such payments be made, no right or power to enter upon said lands, except for the purpose of surveying and locating its line of road and telegraph, shall be acquired under the provisions of this act: Provided, That if the general councils of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, or either of them, shall, within sixty days after the passage of this act, by resolution duly adopted, dissent from the allowance provided for in this section, and shall certify the same to the Secretary of the Interior, then the compensation to be paid for the use and grants in this act made for such dissenting tribe shall be determined as provided in section 3 for the determination of the compensation to be paid to the individual occupants of lands, except that one of said appraisers shall be appointed by the council of the dissenting tribe; and the award made shall be paid as and under the penalties provided for in said section 3: And provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit Congress from imposing such taxes as it may deem just and proper, upon the railroad hereby authorized, for the benefit of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, so long as they shall occupy and possess the territory, or to prohibit any State or States which may hereafter be formed out of said territory from imposing taxes upon said road.

SEC. 5. That within ninety days after the passage of this act the said company shall accept the provisions of this act, and within thirty days thereafter the said company shall fix and determine the general route of its line of road in accordance with this act, by filing with the Secretary of the Interior a map of preliminary survey, and by filing copies thereof in the offices of the principal chiefs of said nations, respectively; and thereafter no claim for a subsequent settlement and improvement along such line, within seventy-five feet on either side thereof, shall be valid as against the said right of way; and within one year from the date of the acceptance of this act by said company as herein provided, the said company shall file with the Secretary of the Interior a map showing the definite location of its line of roads and telegraph as designated in the first section of this act, and shall complete the said road and telegraph through the lands of said nations within the further period of one year.

SEC. 6. That the said right of way shall not be settled upon, by authority of said railway company, by non-citizens of said nations, except such employees of said company as are necessary to the successful operation of said railway and telegraph line, and their families: Provided, That only agents, operators, employees, and sectionmen shall be exempt by reason of such employment from payment of permits as required of other non-citizens of said nations.

SEC. 7. That no greater rates of fare or freight shall be charged in the Choctaw or Chickasaw Nation by said railway company than the lowest rate authorized by law in the States of Arkansas and Texas, or either of them, for services or business of the same kind; and said railway company agree to convey all passengers and to accept and transport all freight that may be offered, and to bill any freight which may be offered for shipment from points on said line by persons lawfully residing or doing business in the Choctaw or Chickasaw Nation to Chicago, with the privilege of stopping said freight at Saint Louis, by the shipper, on the same terms as if the bills had been made for Saint Louis in the first instance.

SEC. 8. That said company shall provide a sufficient number of tracks to do the business that may be offered, and shall permit any railroad company to have the rights of user of its main tracks and sidings by the payment of a fixed charge as rental therefor. The maintenance of superstructure, tracks, depots, and other buildings and appurtenances, and of stations and operating expenses, and such other expenses as may be imposed by law, shall be based upon the wheelage of such trains as may run over said road, each company paying such proportion as its wheelage shall bear to the total wheelage passing over said road. The rental shall be a fixed charge in addition to maintenance of road, and shall be determined by mutual agreement, or, in case of disagreement, by arbitrators, each party choosing one such arbitrator, the third to be chosen by the others appointed, whose decision upon all points respecting such rental shall be final. Each company enjoying the right of user as aforesaid shall pay for any and all damages to the property of the nation or individuals caused by the running of its own trains, to the company owning the franchise hereby granted, whenever such company has been required to pay the same under the provisions of this act. If said companies shall disagree as to damages aforesaid, all disagreements shall be settled and determined between them by arbitration, as provided in case of rental: Provided, That all trains running over said railroad shall be under the exclusive control of the company owning and operating said railroad.

SEC. 9. That the said railroad company shall execute a bond to the United States, to be filed with and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, in the penal sum of $500,000, for the use and benefit of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, to cover any and all damages which may accrue by reason of the failure of said railway company to comply with all or any of the provisions and conditions of this act. Said bond shall be good and valid against said company, its successors and assigns, and shall be renewed at the expiration of every five years, and whenever, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, a renewal of the same shall be deemed necessary for the protection of the interests of the Indians or of the United States.

SEC. 10. That if within ninety days after the passage of this act the company aforesaid shall fail to accept the conditions herein specified, by a resolution of its board of directors, certified to and filed with the Secretary of the Interior, or shall fail within one year from the filing of the acceptance of its charter to file its map of definite location in accordance with this act with the Secretary of the Interior, or shall fail to construct its road within the time and as hereinbefore provided, then all the rights of said company under this act shall thereupon cease and determine, and the Secretary of the Interior shall so declare; and thereupon the Secretary of the Interior shall give a consent in writing to the Chicago, Texas and Mexican Central Railway Company, a corporation duly organized under the laws of the State of Texas, which shall succeed to all the rights, privileges, immunities, duties, and obligations hereby conferred by this act upon the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, to the same extent as if said successor had been the grantee first herein named, upon filing with the Secretary of the Interior its acceptance of the provisions of this act within ninety days from the date of the expiration of the period herein granted to the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, and upon filing bond as prescribed in the ninth section of this act to comply with the provision of this act, and upon filing with the Secretary of the Interior within twelve months its map of definite location in accordance with this act, and within twelve months thereafter completing said road. And in the event of the failure of the Chicago, Texas and Mexican Central Railway Company to file its acceptance of the provisions of this act within the time hereinbefore specified, and thereafter to file its map of definite location in accordance with the provisions of this act, and to complete said road within the time herein granted, then the privileges herein granted to said Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway Company shall apply to any other incorporated company that shall have first obtained the approval of the President of the United States: Provided, That the said successor shall thereafter have the same time to perform in all respects the several acts and things herein enjoined to be done as is by this act given to the original grantee, including the definite location in accordance with this act, and the filing of bond as herein required: And provided further, That any railroad company enjoying the rights conferred by this act shall construct and maintain continually all road and highway crossings and necessary bridges over said railway, wherever said roads and highways do now or may hereafter cross said railway's right of way, or may be by the proper authorities laid out across the same.

SEC. 11. Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan.) The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. The bill is to be discussed.

Mr. DEERING. That is the understanding.

Mr. REED. The question is now, I understand, on the third reading.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage.

Mr. REED. Let it be understood that the vote on the third reading was not taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is in order on the pending question.

Mr. REED. But amendments would not be in order.

Mr. BUCK. We desire an opportunity to amend the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair stated the question distinctly.

Mr. REED. I move to reconsider the vote ordering the third reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading will be reconsidered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DEERING] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DEERING. Mr. Speaker, this is simply a proposition to grant right of way to a railroad through a portion of the Indian Territory. The road has already been completed from the north down to a point near the eastern border of that Territory, and is also in process of construction on the southern border, but here is a space or gap of one hundred and twenty-five miles that cannot be traversed until this charter shall be granted.

Early in the session a bill similar to this came properly before the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House, and was exhaustively discussed and considered in that committee, and was reported unanimously to the House with a favorable recommendation. After this bill passed the Senate the two bills were taken up and considered and compared in the Committee on Indian Affairs, and it was then decided to adopt the Senate bill, and I was instructed to move to substitute that bill and to urge its passage.

This bill has been very carefully prepared, and, as we believe, guards all the rights and interests of all the parties interested. It does not appropriate a dollar of money or grant an acre of land. After a protracted discussion it was passed in the Senate by nearly a two-thirds vote. I believe there is no difference of opinion as to the necessity and importance of this legislation.

It is proper I should say, however, that minority views were prepared and presented by two members of the Committee on Indian Affairs. Those members favor the main features of the bill, but are of the opinion that the right of way should first be granted by the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, through their councils. It is on these minority views that I wish to submit a few remarks.

It is known to many that I am friendly to the Indians and disposed to protect them in all their just rights. But, sir, this is not a question of sympathy or of sentiment or of friendship. It is a question of law and of facts and of principles, and must be settled on that basis.

What are the facts? The Government has already located in this Indian Territory a considerable number of tribes of Indians and is preparing to locate therein a great many more. By and by we may have forty tribes of Indians located in that Territory. Will any sane man for a moment contend that the Government has so tied up its own hands that any one of these bands of half-civilized Indians can check these great enterprises at the borders of that Territory; can stop the United States mail from being carried through that country; can stop the construction of telegraph lines in that Territory; can stop travel and transportation between the East and the West, North and South over a country as large as all of New England? That idea is simply preposterous.

Mr. Speaker, the Government of the United States can run a railroad right under your house or mine. It can take down our houses, tear up our cemeteries, and remove the sacred dust of our dearest and most loved friends. It does do it, and it is right that such obstacles should give way to the advance of great public improvements. And can it be possible that any man will assert that the Government is impotent to do for the white people what it can do for the Indian?

It will be asserted that these Indians are independent nations, and act as such, when the fact is that they cannot deed or lease a single acre of the land on which they live without first deriving authority so to do from the Government of the United States. Their title is one of occupancy only, as is shown by the very language of the patent by which this land was conveyed to them. Has not the time come when we should lay aside this sentimentality and look upon these Indian matters in a candid and rational spirit?

Within the last ten years the Government has expended on our troops west of the Mississippi River more than $223,000,000, largely for the purpose of keeping the Indians in subjection and good order. This is paying pretty dearly for the maintenance of a false dignity of distinct nationality, and it is quite time for us to dispel a groundless delusion.

But, Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to enter into a lengthy argument to enforce my views and the views of the Committee on Indian Affairs on this subject. Our committee have other and important matters which they wish to reach and dispose of. If I had the time I could show to this House that the two treaties of 1855 and 1866 are to be taken and construed together; and even if we are to act under those treaties we already have the authority here claimed.

The treaty of 1855 gives to the United States unlimited jurisdiction over the rights of way for railroads and telegraph lines through the Indian Territory. Should the Choctaw Indians abandon their rights under the treaty of 1855 they would certainly abandon very many of their dearest rights under treaty stipulations, as may be seen by reference to articles 7, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 18 of the treaty of 1855, and also the first "whereas" of the treaty of 1866, and articles 1, 5, 6, 10, and 45 of the same treaty.

The sovereignty and jurisdiction over this territory reside absolutely in the Government of the United States, and no officer of the Government ever had surrendered or ever can surrender that right to the Indians.

The Indians, as I stated a short time since, have only the title of occupancy or domicile, and can neither sell nor lease an acre of this land without the consent of the Government of the United States. Their principal chief or governor admits the jurisdiction of the United States over these lands. I cite any gentleman who desires to refer to the record to page 12 of Executive Document No. 15, which reads as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, CHOCTAW NATION, October 27, 1881.

To the General Council of the Choctaw Nation:

Suppose we stand up and say we won't have a railroad through our country; can we enforce our purpose? Can we say and believe that Congress has not the power to authorize the construction of a road through our country? If we cannot, then let us do all we can to retain our jurisdiction as long as possible.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. F. MCCURTAIN,
Principal Chief, Choctaw Nation.

I certify that the above is a true and correct copy of the original now on file in my office.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the Choctaw Nation, this November 8, A. D. 1881.

[SEAL.]

THOMPSON MCKINNEY,
National Secretary, Choctaw Nation.

The right of eminent domain in this Territory adheres, as I have stated, absolutely in the Government of the United States.

These Indians make no complaint of the provisions of this bill. This bill passed the Senate more than three months ago, since which time the Indians have known all about it, and until now they have offered no resistance to it or objection whatever.

There have been numerous decisions by the justices of our courts sustaining this theory of eminent domain and of the absolute sovereignty and jurisdiction of the United States over this country. The decisions of Marshall, McLane, Taney, and other of our most eminent judges are on record in this direction, and if cited would fill a volume.

I ask the Clerk to read an extract from the treaty between the United States and the Creek Indians.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Creek country west of the Mississippi shall be solemnly guaranteed to the Creek Indians, nor shall any State or Territory ever have the right to pass laws for the government of said Indians; but they shall be allowed to govern themselves, so far as may be compatible with the general jurisdiction which Congress may think proper to exercise over them; and the United States will also cause a patent or grant to be executed to the Creek tribe, agreeable to act of Congress May 28, 1830.

Mr. DEERING. That is substantially the same article that is contained in all the treaties with the five civilized tribes of Indians. It will be seen that everything is made subject to the jurisdiction of the United States. I now ask the Clerk to read from the decision of Judge Taney.

The Clerk read as follows:

The country in which the crime is charged to have been committed is a part of the territory of the United States, and not within the limit of any particular State. It is true that it is occupied by the tribe of Cherokee Indians. But it has been assigned to them by the United States as a place of domicile for the tribe, and they hold and occupy it with the assent of the United States and under their authority.

Mr. DEERING. Now, Mr. Speaker, one further extract I will ask to have read. It is from an opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, delivered by Chief-Justice Marshall.

The Clerk read as follows:

No question could arise as to the validity of the Cherokee law under which letters of administration were granted on the estate of Mackey; and as the power of attorney, given by the administrators to Raines seems to have been authenticated and approved, a payment to the administrator by the Government would have been a legal payment. The Cherokee country, we think, may be considered a Territory of the United States within the act of 1812. In no respect can it be considered a foreign State or Territory, as it is within our jurisdiction and subject to our laws.

Mr. DEERING. Mr. Speaker, the decisions which have just been read show conclusively that it has been at all times held by the courts that this Indian country is a part of the territory of the United States.

With the consent of the House I incorporate in my remarks a portion of the report on this subject which I had the honor to submit on the 6th day of June last:

We do not find that it was ever contemplated or stipulated by the Government that the Indian Territory should stand right in the very heart of our growing country as a barrier to its commerce, and an obstacle in the way of travel, traffic, and transportation between the different sections. It is of the highest importance to the nation at large that rights of way for lines of railroad and telegraph should be granted through the Indian Territory, and as generally as they are through the other Territories of the United States; and while we would observe the utmost good faith with these Indians, and would carefully guard their just rights and interests, we do not concede to them jurisdiction in this vitally important matter, because we do not find that principle laid down anywhere in the policy of the Government, nor is the theory sustained by its treaties with these Indians from the earliest date.

Article 18 of the treaty of 1855 with the Choctaws and Chickasaws mentions specifically the broad and unrestricted right of the United States to grant these charters and privileges through their country, and article 7, treaty of 1855, defines the extent of their rights to self-government and of their jurisdiction, as follows: "So far as may be compatible with the Constitution of the United States and the laws made in pursuance thereof, regulating trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes, the Choctaws and Chickasaws shall be secured in the unrestricted right of self-government, and full jurisdiction over persons and property within their respective limits."

Article 6 of the treaty of 1866 recites the fact that the Choctaws and Chickasaws grant the right of way for two railroads through their lands, but this is made expressly and in terms subject to the authority of the United States Government through Congress on the Secretary of the Interior, and is to be in accordance with the provisions of the eighteenth article of the treaty of 1865, to which reference is above made, and which recognizes the unlimited jurisdiction of the United States in these matters.

This position is supported by the fact that the Government has never fully parted with the title to these lands. The title of the Indians is conditional on their occupancy, and will revert to the United States whenever they shall become extinct or from any cause that occupancy shall cease. They have never been clothed with authority to sell or otherwise alienate the title. For them to grant rights of way to railroads, or other kindred rights and interests (in the reality) that might extend far beyond their occupancy, and consequently beyond the limits of their title to and interest in the lands, would not only be anomalous, but very unreasonable.

I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. RICE.]

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I take the floor in my own right as member of the committee.

Mr. HASKELL. Then the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DEERING] should reserve the remainder of his time.

Mr. DEERING. I will reserve the residue of my hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are forty-eight minutes remaining, as the Chair understands.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say at the outset that this is a very important bill—too important to be discussed in this heated atmosphere and before a weary House. But I ask the careful attention of members to the points which I shall have the honor to submit; and I solicit them, even though weary and warm, to scrutinize a bill which proposes to take from others that which belongs to them and not to us, and undertakes to give it to railroad companies, in violation of treaty stipulations written with our own hands upon our own paper with our own ink. The question is whether those whose possession of certain territory has been guaranteed to them by us shall be deprived of that territory without their consent, and in violation of our stipulations of guardianship and protection.

Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to give to two railroad corporations the right to run their roads through the Territory of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations without the consent of those nations. That is simply the scope of the bill. No such thing has ever been attempted before. No such thing was thought of in this case until an exigency occurred which made it inconvenient for the railroad companies to get along for a few months without this right of way. Then for the first time it occurred to these corporations that the United States could grant this right of way without the consent of the Indians.

My friend from Iowa [Mr. DEERING] has said that he has great consideration and regard for the Indians. He reminded me of the Scripture warrior who approached another, saying, "My friend!" and with the words stabbed him under the fifth rib.

As this bill was introduced and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs it contained the stipulation that this right of way should have the consent of those nations. The bill in that form was agreed to by the committee almost unanimously early in the session. The bill in its present form has received, I understand, the support of a bare majority of the committee.

Let me state to the House the circumstances under which the bill is here. Two railroad companies were contending to get the right of way through the territory of these nations. They went last winter to the Legislature of the Choctaw Nation. They were sustained there by eminent assistance from Texas and adjoining States. In other words, there was a very staunch, stiff lobby there from the outside, from the States surrounding this Territory, trying to lobby through the Legislature of that nation a bill granting this right of way. But at that time there was some difference between the two railroad corporations. They had not then joined hands as they have now.

After long discussion in the Legislature the result was that in the senate the vote was by, I think, one majority in favor of granting the right of way to the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railroad. In the House there was a tie vote, made so by the vote of the speaker against the bill. It was recorded by the clerk as having been lost, but the next day the railroad forces rallied and persuaded the governor that the speaker had no right to vote, and therefore, notwithstanding the record of the Legislature, the governor signed the bill as if it had passed both houses. With this legislative authority the railroad companies came to Congress in order that Congress might ratify that which it was alleged the Legislature of the Choctaw Nation had granted.

But the speaker of the Legislature of the Choctaw Nation appeared before our committee, and after he had stated the facts I think I may say it was the unanimous opinion of the committee that the speaker had a right to vote, and the vote having been tied by his vote the bill did not pass the house, and therefore had not received the sanction of the Legislature of the Choctaw Nation.

The bill was laid away. It was supposed it had failed. Then came the exigency, "What shall we do? We cannot get this bill through Congress, as the Indian Committee refuse to consider it because we have not got the consent of the Choctaw Nation. What shall we do?"

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DEERING] says that the Choctaw Nation has nothing to say about it; that it is only for Congress to say whether these railroads shall be run through this Territory or not. Why did not he think of this; why did not the able chairman of the committee think of it; why did not the able lawyers whom I have seen around the corridors here for the last few days, and who appeared before our committee to argue that the speaker of the Choctaw Legislature had no right to vote, and consequently this legislative action was valid—why did not they think of it if it is so plain, until they had failed to be able to get their bill through in any other way?

Mr. Speaker, it is not plain. It is only a principle which they seek to adopt in the exigency in which they are placed. Rather than wait and go back to the Legislature of the Choctaw Nation next winter as they did last winter they come to Congress and say, "The Choctaw Nation has nothing to say about this; assume your right of eminent domain and pass this bill, without saying anything more of waiting for the action of the Choctaw Nation." That is what they are doing now; and that is the bill they are seeking to pass here.

I say, Mr. Speaker, this is in violation of the treaty we have made with the Choctaw Nation. My friend from Iowa has read authorities to show that the jurisdiction of the United States is supreme over this Territory. I deny his authorities. With the single exception of that expression of Judge Taney there is not a scratch or line in the reports of the United States to justify his declaration; but, on the contrary, all along the line the great judges, Marshall, Story, and the rest, have declared that these Indian nations are nations. "They are nations," says Judge Marshall in the famous Worcester case. They are "independent nations;" not foreign, but "domestic," under the guardianship of the United States. And he says that guardianship does not give the right to despoil; it does not give the right to destroy; that the guardian has no right to take a property over which he has assumed the trust of guardian and appropriate it to his own use.

Yet that is the position in which this bill would put the United States as the guardian of a domestic nation, the guardian of a nation with which we have entered into a solemn treaty, that we would violate that guardianship and take from that nation the property we have pledged our honor as a nation to secure to them forever.

Says my friend, the right of the Indian is only the right of occupancy. Says Judge Marshall, the right of the Indians to their territory is the same as that of any other nation to its property, excepting that the United States has inherited from the European nations the status which they held toward the Indian Territory before the independence of the United States; that is, that the Indians have a right to the occupancy of their territory; but if the Indians become extinct, or if the Indians seek to part with their territory, then the United States in the case of the Indians becoming extinct succeed to their right to the territory, or if they see fit to part with it the United States has the right of priority to purchase.

Mr. HASKELL. Will the gentleman let me interrupt him by asking a question?

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. HASKELL. Does the gentleman assert that an Indian tribe or an Indian individual within the entire domain and jurisdiction of the United States has the power to sell one inch of that domain? Does he assert that doctrine?

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I assert every Indian in the Choctaw

Nation has a right to sell that which he has added to the land, has a right to sell whatever there is on the land which he has put there, to any other Indian. I assert that the Indian Nation has the right to assign the land and to allot it to the individuals of its tribe. I assert just what I asserted a moment ago, that the status of the United States toward these Indian nations is, as the gentleman intimates, that they cannot sell that land to outsiders except to the United States.

Mr. HASKELL. Let me add further, for my friend is terribly in error in this matter: they cannot sell to any other Indian. They have not any fee to part with; they have no title, and in no way and in no manner, under any circumstances, can one Indian sell a single square foot of territory from one end of this Government to the other. He can sell or bequeath or divest himself in any other manner by giving away or otherwise the possession of that which grows upon it—the improvements—but the lands, the fee, no Indian can sell, and no Indian ever had the power to sell since the Government of the United States was created.

Mr. DEERING. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts permit me to read the exact language of the treaty—

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I will first answer the gentleman from Kansas—one at a time; two are too many for me. If my able and enthusiastic friend from Kansas had carefully listened to me he would have seen that there is no difference between his statement and mine. The land does not belong to the individual Indians, but to the nation.

Mr. HASKELL. The nation cannot sell it.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. The nation cannot sell except to the United States. There is no difference between him and me. But that land was patented to the nation by the United States. It was patented to it in exchange for lands held by them and transferred to the United States—

Mr. HASKELL. But not in fee-simple.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. And the United States guaranteed to protect the nation in the use and occupancy of the lands so long as the nation shall exist or until it shall see fit to sell it.

Mr. HASKELL. A perpetual lease; that is all it is.

Mr. DEERING. Will the gentleman now let me read the exact language in which this treaty is expressed?

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I do not think that anything has any bearing upon this excepting that which relates to the treaty with the Choctaws themselves.

Mr. DEERING. This is the exact language of the Choctaw treaty, as I find by reference to the Department, and this is the language in which that land was conveyed to the Indians:

In fee-simple to them and their descendants, to inure to them while they shall exist as a nation and live on it.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I do not see but that that is exactly what I stated.

Mr. HASKELL. That is no fee-simple.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I do not claim that it is; nobody ever claimed it. I said that this nation took their land under the United States as they held it under the European nations before.

Mr. HASKELL. Subject to sovereignty then; that is all we claim.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Subject to no sovereignty except in the event of their own parting with the land.

Now, then, this nation having had the land thus patented to them by the United States, the United States by treaty of 1830 agreed to protect them in the occupancy of that land. More than that, they made their treaties with these nations; and let me suggest to my friends that treaties are the highest law of the land.

Let me suggest to them that these treaties are made by virtue of that treaty-making power which the Constitution gives to the Executive with the sanction of the Senate. They are therefore treaties with nations and are clothed with the sanction of treaties.

Now, if gentlemen will listen to me for a moment I will endeavor to weary them but a very few moments longer. The treaty of 1855—that I believe was the date—

Mr. WELLBORN. If the gentleman will yield for a moment I will ask that the Speaker require the House to be in better order, as we all desire to hear the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House must be in order; public business will be suspended until gentlemen cease conversation. [After a pause.] The gentleman from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I know it is hard to listen and it is harder to talk in this heated atmosphere, but I merely want to call the attention of the members to this single point: in the treaty of 1855 the United States did reserve to itself the right to charter railroads through the Territory of these nations. Before that it had no right to establish even a post-road through the Territory. So said Chief-Justice Marshall, regarding the original territory of these nations, in his opinion in the Worcester case. "The United States had no right," these are his own words, "to build even a post-road through that territory except by treaty stipulation, or by the agreement of the nation."

But, as I have said, in the treaty of 1855, after the exchange of the original for Western lands, the United States reserved the right to charter railroads and telegraph lines through the territory, and that right was unlimited. I admit that under that treaty, were it still in force, it would be competent for Congress to pass this bill. But another treaty was made in 1866, and by that treaty the United States reserved to itself the right to charter one road running through the territory north and south, and another from east to west. There the general right reserved in the treaty of 1855 was limited to two roads, and that limitation has been exhausted.

The United States has chartered its road east and west, and chartered one to run north and south; and to undertake to do what is proposed here under that treaty of 1866 is a violation of the treaty stipulation and in violation of the patent which the Government gave to the Indians, as well as in violation of its duty as guardian of these somewhat dependent domestic nations.

Mr. GUNTER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. GUNTER. Do you believe that the treaty of 1866 either repeals, modifies, or changes in any way the eighteenth article to which you have referred of the treaty of 1855?

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I believe—

Mr. GUNTER. That is my question.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. And I will answer it. I believe that when the treaty of 1855 reserved a general right, and when the treaty of 1866 stated that right to be confined to two roads, and then when in the latter part of the treaty of 1866 this article is found—

The United States reaffirms all obligations arising out of treaty stipulations or acts of legislation with regard to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations not inconsistent herewith—that the modification contained in the last treaty affects the first, and that the United States has no right beyond it.

Mr. GUNTER. If my friend from Massachusetts will allow me, I assert this, and I would like him to answer it: that the sixth article of the treaty of 1866 does not in any way repeal, modify, change, or alter the eighteenth article of the treaty of 1855. But there is a difference in this, as I understand it. In the treaty of 1866 the Indians wished to contribute, more or less, in the construction of railroads through their country, and they asked in that treaty a general right to take stock in roads and aid in building them through their country. The Government would not grant to them that general right, but did grant to the Indians a specific right, a special right, to take stock in and aid in the construction of two roads through their country, one north and south, the other east and west. And that is the whole force and meaning of the sixth article of the treaty of 1866, and it does not in the least repeal, change, or modify the eighteenth article of the treaty of 1855. That is where the trouble is.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Now will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GUNTER. One other word in connection with this. I not only state this from the general reading and construction of the two articles, but I had a conversation with Judge Wright, a very intelligent Indian from the Choctaw Nation, and by-the-by one of the treaty-making power of 1866, and he told me that was the full scope, force, effect, and meaning of the article to which I refer. Now I will answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I wish to ask my friend a question in connection with this statement which I have already made. In the treaty of 1855 a general right was reserved; in the treaty of 1866 the same subject was dealt with again, and it was agreed that the United States might charter two railroads; and it was agreed, to be sure, that the Choctaw Nation might take stock in those two railroads. Now, then, I want to ask my friend if, up to the time when the Committee on Indian Affairs decided that the legislative action of the Choctaw Nation of last winter was not valid, he ever heard anybody claim that the United States had any right to do anything more than to charter those two railroads, one east and west, the other north and south, according to the provisions of the treaty?

Mr. GUNTER. I will with pleasure answer my friend's question. I have never heard it insisted by disinterested parties that the treaty of 1866 did modify the treaty of 1855; and it never was seriously urged except through the lobbyists. Governor Overton, who was here, a lobbyist in the interest of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas road, assumed that position, and tried to urge it on members of Congress. And not only Governor Overton as a lobbyist here, but others strictly in the interest of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas road urged that that road would be a competing line in the interest of trade, commerce, and the postal service.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Who is Governor Overton?

Mr. GUNTER. He is an ex-chief of the Chickasaw tribe of Indians, and was here in the employment of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas road.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. He had as good a right to come here and appear on behalf of his nation, fairly and openly for the Chickasaw Nation, as had the paid lobbyists of other roads to be around the corridors of this Hall, as they have been the last month, button-holing members in behalf of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to add but a word or two more. If this be as my friend claims, if the unlimited right to charter these roads without the consent of the Choctaw Nation exists in Congress, why in the name of common sense did all that lobby from Texas and elsewhere gather about the Choctaw Legislature last year? Why did they come here to get us not to act independently but to act in ratification of what they claimed to be the action of the Choctaw Legislature? And why was there never a word uttered anywhere of this independent right of Congress to pass this bill until their failure to secure what they desired in the line upon which they started and under the policy against which to that time there had never been uttered a word of demurrer?

I will not weary the patience of the House further. I know how hard it is to attract the attention of members to this question. I say that here, upon the desire of two railroad corporations to get a little premature right of way before the meeting of the next Legislature of the Choctaw Nation, we are called upon to go back upon the policy which this Government has followed from the beginning. We are called upon to violate that which has always been believed to be the treaty obligation of this nation. We are called upon to discourage and overrule this Indian nation, staggering feebly forward in the progress of civilization under our guardianship, and to say to it, "You are only playing at independence; you are only setting up baby-houses of government which we do not recognize as real governments; and when it pleases our sovereign will and our interests and the interests of railroad monopolies to trample upon your rights and your feeble attempts at self-government, then we shall do it. Up to that point you may proceed in your attempts at self-government; there you must stop."

Mr. GUNTER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him another question?

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. GUNTER. The gentleman remarked a few minutes ago, as I understood him, that the proposition was to take lands from the Indians without consideration.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. No, I did not say any such thing.

Mr. GUNTER. Then I misunderstood you.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I will answer that by saying that you are going to pay them; but how? By a tribunal constituted under the authority of the Choctaw Nation? No. By a tribunal, one of which is to be appointed by the principal chief of the Choctaw Nation, one by the Indian commission here, and the other by the railroad corporation. That is the way you are going to award compensation to them.

Mr. GUNTER. If this bill passes it only grants 2,644 acres of land, and it provides that the railroad company shall pay annually for that land for all time to come $3,000 without any arbitration whatever.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. But it does not provide—

Mr. GUNTER. One moment. The bill provides that the railroad company shall pay this $3,000 annually for all time to come, and to pay it in quarterly payments, for the use of 2,644 acres of land. That sum would be of itself a full consideration for the land.

Then in addition to that—and that is what the gentleman alludes to in his argument—if any private property, fields, orchards, barns, dwelling-houses, or anything of the kind belonging to private parties, is injured in any way by the construction of this road, then this arbitration is provided, if the railroad company and the party interested cannot agree. That is what the gentleman refers to.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. GUNTER. That is in addition to the $3,000 paid annually to the Indians for the use of 2,644 acres of land.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I do not know how much land will be taken under this bill.

Mr. GUNTER. I do.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I know that it is a strip of land through the territory 150 feet wide, except that for a mile, or for 4,000 feet from any depot, the strip may be 200 feet wide. That is a pretty wide strip; 200 feet wide for 4,000 feet from every depot, and 150 feet wide everywhere else.

For that strip of land this bill provides that so much shall be paid to the Choctaw Nation. Does the Choctaw Nation say that? No. We say to them, We give you so much; take what we give you. Then if anybody is injured in his private property—and we are told here that there cannot be any private property to be injured, and therefore that does not amount to much—he may go to a tribunal of three, one to be appointed by the principal chief of the Choctaw Nation—and I do not know but that he is the one who signed an act when the Legislature did not pass it; I do not know whether he is the one or not—one is to be named by him; one to be named by our Indian Commissioner—and God help him, for he has a hard road to travel in looking after the rights of all these Indians—and one is to be named by this very enterprising railroad corporation, that has been able to persuade the Indian Committee of this House of the justice of the policy which they advocate here in this bill.

Mr. DEERING. Referring to what my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] has said in reference to abandoning the treaties and policy of the Government, I wish to say, and I think this House will agree with me, that it is fortunate for the Indians that the time has come when we have ceased the making and breaking of treaties, as we have done heretofore to the extent of about three hundred treaties, every one of which has been violated, and have begun the rational practice we now pursue of seeking to elevate and civilize the Indians.

JAPANESE INDEMNITY FUND.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DEERING] to yield to me to submit a conference report.

Mr. DEERING. I will do so, if it takes no time.

Mr. HASKELL. I hope the gentleman will not press that.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. If it leads to any discussion I will withdraw it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The conference report will be read. The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 1052, in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund, having met, after a full and free conference have been unable to agree.

CHARLES G. WILLIAMS,
W. W. RICE,
P. V. DEUSTER,
Managers on the part of the House.
J. S. MORRILL,
THOMAS W. FERRY,
J. T. MORGAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I now move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and ask for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILROAD RIGHT-OF-WAY THROUGH THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 60) to grant a right of way for a railroad and telegraph line through the lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians to the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railroad Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. DEERING. I desire now to yield to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. WELLBORN.]

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Before that is done I desire to know how much time I have remaining of my hour?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has fifteen minutes remaining.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I will reserve that time.

Mr. WELLBORN. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with much interest and attention to the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. RICE,] and if his premises and conclusions were correct it would be a matter of extreme doubt whether this proposed legislation ought to be passed. He has endeavored to impress upon the House the idea that the proposition contained in this bill is to take from the Indian tribes property belonging to them and grant it to railroad companies. I desire to say for one that if the bill contained any such proposition there is no man upon this floor whose voice would be sooner and more earnestly raised against it than mine. I do not understand, however, such to be the effect of the bill.

Let us see, sir, what it does propose? It grants a right of way through the Indian Territory to the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, and in the event that this company should fail to construct a road within a period named in the bill, then it grants the right of way to the Chicago, Texas, and Mexican Central Railway Company, and in the event that this last-named company should fail to construct within a given time, then the right of way inures to any railroad company that will build the road.

The principle which distinguishes the bill is the implied assertion of the existence in the Federal Government of the right of eminent domain over the Indian Territory, exactly the same right that resides in the legislative authority of every State in the Union. The limitations which this bill imposes upon the exercise of the right of eminent domain are substantially those provided by the laws of every State where the right is exercised within State limits. All the rights of the Indians are fully protected both in their tribal and individual relations. They are to be paid just and fair compensation for all property taken and all damages done them; and if either a tribe or an individual should be dissatisfied with the amount of money awarded, such tribe or individual has substantially the same resort to the courts of the country that is allowed to a citizen of a State whose property is, under like circumstances, taken for public use. This is all I desire to say in reference to the details of the bill. It protects fully and amply every right of the Indians.

The bill is one of deep concern to Texas. The Legislature of the State at its last session passed a concurrent resolution requesting Texas Senators and Representatives "to use all possible efforts to obtain at the earliest moment from the Congress of the United States permission for the construction of the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway through the Choctaw Nation lands to the Texas boundary line and a cession of the right of way through said nation for such purpose," &c. Boards of trade of some of the cities in said State have memorialized Congress to the same end. As the measure is one of such deep interest to Texas, and as it comes from a committee of which I am a member, I ask the House to indulge me a short time in presenting succinctly reasons which in my judgment require that the bill should be enacted into law.

It is only necessary to pass upon two questions in order to determine the expediency of this legislation. First, is there any necessity for granting the right of way? And, in the second place, has Congress the constitutional power to grant the right of way, or, in other words, has the Government of the United States the right of eminent domain over the Indian Territory? Let us look at these two questions hurriedly in the order in which I have stated them.

Is there any necessity for this right of way? A single glance at the map will disclose to the commonest understanding the necessity for this right of way. This Indian Territory is situated in the heart of a prosperous and growing country. On the west is New Mexico; on the north, Colorado and Kansas; on the east, Arkansas; and on the south, Texas. Now, will any gentleman insist that this Indian Territory shall be permitted to stand as an impervious barrier to communication between these different sections of the country?

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me one question?

Mr. WELLBORN. I must decline, because I have only a few minutes. I repeat, is there any man on this floor who is willing to say that this Territory shall stand as a Chinese wall between the growing commerce of those States and Territories?

This bill is designed to open up a competing line between the Northwest and the Southwest. There is to-day but one line of road running north and south through that Territory. The object of this bill is to open up a competing line with the one in existence. The simple statement of this fact is sufficient to show its necessity to these two great sections of country.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. That road now has a complete monopoly.

Mr. WELLBORN. I am coming to that. But, sir, I place this necessity upon the higher and broader ground of general public policy. The gentleman from Massachusetts has seen proper to refer to monopolies, and in such manner as tends to make the impression on this House that the bill is in their interests. I will show that the monopoly feature of this discussion belongs with the opponents and not the friends of the measure. In this day, when vast combinations are swallowing up and absorbing lines of transportation and travel—

Mr. BUCK. Will the gentleman allow me one question?

Mr. WELLBORN. I have only fifteen minutes. I would be glad to yield if I had more time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas declines to yield.

Mr. WELLBORN. Mr. Speaker, in this day, when large consolidations are being formed of lines of road hitherto under distinct and separate managements, among natural forces there is but one which can be looked to as a check and restraint upon their monopolistic tendencies, and that is the law of competition. Forcibly has it been said "that competition as naturally bears sway in all the transactions of exchange and in the distribution of wealth between the parties concerned in producing it as the law of gravitation controls the movements of the planets in their orbits."

Competition, however, to be thus effective must be fostered, maintained, and protected by suitable legislation. When thus fostered, maintained, and protected it will accomplish in matters of transportation and travel results kindred to those it effects in all other branches of commerce. In mercantile pursuits, for instance, in any given locality the more numerous the merchants the more active and earnest the common strife for the sale of their commodities, and consequently the lower the prices of those commodities to consumers. Thus, as has been said by another, "competition reduces price till what used to be confined to the homes of the rich becomes abundant in the homes of the comparatively poor."

So in reference to railroads, the more numerous the roads, assuming that hurtful consolidations are prevented, the more energetic and eager each to secure patronage over the others, and hence the lower the rates of transportation and travel to those dependent upon the roads. These statements are not mere speculative theories, but established truths, ascertained and demonstrated by universal experience and now recognized as first principles in political economy.

Following the logic of these truths, I maintain that whenever private capital without Government aid is willing to embark in the construction of competing lines it should be permitted to do so. Therefore, if Congress has the constitutional power to grant rights of way across the Indian Territory, it should be exercised as often as private capital will build new roads.

Now, sir, as to the second point. Has Congress the constitutional power to grant rights of way through the Indian Territory; or, in other words, has the Government of the United States the right of eminent domain over the Indian Territory? And I must confess to some surprise that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] controverts as a legal proposition the affirmative answer to this question. Why, sir, the right of eminent domain belongs to every government essentially, just as much so as does the power of taxation. The power to subject private property to public use whenever the need of the country requires it is just as essential to the Government as the power by forced exaction to raise revenue for its support.

"But," the gentleman says, "this power has been ceded away by treaty stipulations." Now, I have not time to examine these treaties of 1855 and 1866; I mean I have not time to comment on them; but I do say in general terms that there is not in them a single paragraph, a single sentence, or a single word which can reasonably be construed into an attempt to cede away this right of eminent domain.

But, sir, I assert further—I take higher ground—that if there were a thousand paragraphs in these treaties attempting to cede away the right of eminent domain those paragraphs would be utterly nugatory and void. Talk about the treaty-making branch of this Government having the power to cede away the highest, the supremest attribute of its sovereignty!

Why, sir, you might as well assert that the treaty-making branch of the Government, "the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," could bargain away the power of taxation, thus rendering the Government powerless to support itself. It would be equally as reasonable to assert that a constitutional government could constitutionally commit political suicide! There is not a writer on constitutional law in the bounds of Christendom who will assert that it is within the power of a branch of any sovereign government to cede away its sovereign attributes over territory within its limits and subject to its dominion. Cooley, in his Constitutional Limitations, (page 524,) says:

When the existence of a particular power in the government is recognized on the ground of necessity, no delegation of the legislative power by the people can be held to vest authority in the department, which holds it in trust, to bargain away such power, or to so tie up the hands of the government as to preclude its repeated exercise, as often and under such circumstances as the needs of the government may require. For, if this were otherwise, the authority to make laws for the government and welfare of the state might be so exercised, in strict conformity with its constitution, as at length to preclude the state performing its ordinary and essential functions, and the agent chosen to govern the state might put an end to the state itself. It must follow that any legislative bargain in restraint of the complete, continuous, and repeated exercise of the right of eminent domain is unwarranted and void.

As under the peculiar American system the protection and regulation of private rights, privileges, and immunities in general properly pertain to the State governments, and those governments are expected to make provision for those conveniences and necessities which are usually provided for their citizens through the exercise of the right of eminent domain, the right itself, it would seem, must pertain to those governments also, rather than to the Government of the nation. In the new Territories, however, where the Government of the United States exercises sovereign authority, it possesses as incident thereto the right of eminent domain, which it may exercise directly or through the Territorial governments, but this right passes from the nation to the newly formed State whenever the latter is admitted into the Union.

Again, on page 283 of same work, the same writer says:

It would seem therefore to be the prevailing opinion, and one based upon sound reason, that the State could not barter away or in any manner abridge or weaken any of those essential powers which are inherent in all governments, and the existence of which in full vigor is important to the well-being of organized society.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman let me ask him one question?

Mr. WELLBORN. Certainly.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Has France the right of eminent domain over Louisiana and Texas to-day?

Mr. WELLBORN. No, sir; and I will show the gentleman the distinction. I thank the gentleman for the question. My proposition is this: that no sovereign power can cede or bargain away any of its sovereign attributes over any of the territory that remains within its limits and subject to its dominion. When France in 1803 ceded Louisiana to the United States, all the dominion of France over Louisiana was gone. The territory of Louisiana no longer belonged to France, but became incorporated into the territory of the United States.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. When the United States ceded to the Choctaw Nation this land, did it not give them the right of eminent domain just so far as the limit of the patent extended?

Mr. WELLBORN. I will answer the gentleman. As already stated, when France ceded Louisiana to the United States she parted absolutely with the territory; she granted to the United States all her ownership, control, and dominion over the ceded country. This cession, of course, carried with it the right of eminent domain, which now resides, not in France, but in the United States. But will any gentleman on this floor assert that the country occupied by the Choctaw Indians has been thus ceded to them by the Government of the United States? Will any one take the position that the Choctaw country is as alien to and independent of the United States as Louisiana is of France?

Why, sir, the Indian country is as much a part of American territory and as absolutely subject to the dominion of the American Union as any other foot of soil over which the American flag floats. The executive branch of the Government has its officers and agents scattered all through the Indian Territory. Our postal routes permeate it as they do the States and other Territories. The judicial power of the Government is extended over it in certain cases. To compress the whole in one sentence, the emblems of our national sovereignty as fully there as anywhere else in the land exact personal obedience and proclaim territorial dominion; and none there dispute the legitimate supremacy of these emblems of sovereign power.

Mr. DUNN. Our Army occupies it.

Mr. WELLBORN. Yes; our Army occupies it, as the gentleman suggests, and it would be as reasonable to assert that the Federal Government could not, in the event of a military exigency, throw its armies across the Indian Territory as to assert that it cannot condemn property therein for other public use when public necessity requires.

But, further, the title of the Choctaws to the lands they occupy is certainly not higher, not more sacred, than the title of a citizen to the homestead for which he holds a patent from his Government.

Yet no one will for a moment insist that a patent to an individual surrenders the right of eminent domain over the land it grants.

The phraseology of the treaty, by which the Indian title (whatever may be its character, and this I do not propose now to discuss) is substantially that of a patent to an individual, is as follows:

The United States do hereby forever secure and guarantee the lands embraced within the said limits to the members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes, their heirs and successors, to be held in common; so that each and every member of either tribe shall have an equal undivided interest in the whole.

The chief difference is, that in the one case the land is held in severalty, while in the other the lands are the common property of many. In both cases the lands are a part of the American territory.

Nor does it matter that by treaty stipulation the Indians are guaranteed some sort of local government of their own. I have shown that the treaty-making power, even were it to attempt to do so in express words, could not bargain away the right of eminent domain over a single foot of American soil. If, however, the treaty-making power, by guaranteeing to the Indians a form of local government, could thereby grant to them the right of eminent domain we would have the striking solecism of the treaty-making power being able to accomplish by indirection that which it is powerless to do by direct methods.

The simple statement of this conclusion is its refutation. One other word, Mr. Speaker, and I will yield the floor. It is asked, why do you not settle all this dispute by going to the councils of these Indian tribes and getting their assent to the proposed right of way? I will tell you why; but the gentleman from Massachusetts, unconsciously to himself, presented the reason in language stronger than I can hope to employ when he spoke of "lobbyists and money interests" being brought to bear on the councils of these Indian tribes.

The reason why the friends of the bill are unwilling to have the assent of the tribes attached as a condition to the bill is that such a condition would utterly defeat the operation of the bill. The councils of these tribes have but a limited membership, and on this as well as other accounts are peculiarly susceptible to outside influences. It is, of course, clearly against the interests of the existing line of road to have competition. Let the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, or any other company, apply to one of these Indian councils for their assent to the building of a new road, and the application will at once be antagonized by all the power and influence of large consolidations. This power and influence will be predominant and the application be defeated.

I say to this House that if you insist upon remitting these questions to Indian councils the result will be that no new lines of railway will ever be built through their territory. The power and the influences of the vast moneyed combinations now operating roads through that Territory will be brought to bear upon the Indian councils so that their consent will never be secured to any other enterprise looking to competition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CULBERSON. I believe I am entitled to ten minutes, and will yield a portion of my time to my colleague.

Mr. WELLBORN. I will occupy but a very few moments longer. Now, the gentleman talks about "monopolies." I have shown, I think, to the satisfaction of this House that the monopoly feature of this question is not with us. All we want is competition, and all that this bill is designed to furnish is competition between the commerce of the Northwest and the commerce of the Southwest.

I say to this House again that competition wherever called into exercise and protected by legislation is always the victor before which monopoly prostrates itself and dies. Give us legislation, then, that will call into exercise and protect competition, and the country will be largely saved from monopoly aggressions. This whole argument, then, so far as results are concerned, is narrowed down to one issue, and simply this: if gentlemen upon this floor desire to open up competing lines of transportation and travel between the Northwest and the Southwest, let this bill be passed. If they are willing to prostrate before gigantic moneyed combinations the vast commercial relations between the lakes and the Gulf, let them vote against the bill; but when they do so let them remember that they could strike no deadlier blow at the interests of the people, whose representatives they are. [Applause.]

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I am not a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs; but inasmuch as the district which I have the honor to represent is directly interested in the legislation proposed by this bill, I trust I may claim the indulgence of the House for the brief period allotted to me by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DEERING] in charge of this bill. I do not propose, Mr. Speaker, to attempt to reoccupy the ground which my colleague, [Mr. WELLBORN,] a member of the committee, has so well and so ably occupied, but will content myself with a presentation of some of the practical effects of the bill, and the objects sought to be obtained by this measure.

The proposition, broadly stated, is to furnish another highway for commerce from the great West to the Gulf through Missouri, Arkansas, the Indian Nation, and Texas. The great importance of the proposed legislation to the country is manifest, and needs no argument but the map and the census to vindicate it. It has been said by gentlemen in opposition that we propose to violate the faith of the Government with the Indians and to take their property and bestow it upon railroad monopolies without their consent.

The provisions of this bill, Mr. Speaker, do not justify such charges. Let us test this measure by its own provisions and not by the unfounded and sweeping charges of its opponents. The bill proposes to grant a right of way over the territory occupied by the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians to the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, a corporation duly organized under the laws of Missouri. The right of way is to embrace on the ordinary line one hundred and fifty feet, and three hundred feet at each station for a distance of four thousand feet.

I propose to show from the bill itself how well the rights of the Indians are protected. The railroad company accepts the grant of a right of way upon express condition that it will neither aid nor advise any effort looking toward the changing or extinguishing the present tenure of the Choctaws or Chickasaws in their lands, and will not attempt to secure from either nation any further grant of land than such as is embraced in the right of way.

A breach of this condition will operate a forfeiture of all rights under this act. This ought to satisfy our friends who think that the future prosperity of these tribes depends upon a preservation of tribal relations and the ownership of their lands in common.

The railway company is required to pay for all property injured or destroyed, and for all material used in construction of the road, and a mode is provided whereby the company may be compelled to discharge such obligations.

It is provided in addition that the railway company shall pay to the treasurers of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations $750 each quarter or $3,000 annually for the right of way as long as it may be used for railroad purposes, and if these nations are not satisfied with this amount, a method is provided for the submission of the question to arbitration. Three-fourths of this amount is to be paid to the Choctaw and one-fourth to the Chickasaw Nation.

This provision is inserted because these nations own the lands in common. While they occupy in severalty certain portions of the common domain, no division or allotment has been made. These nations recognize as proper this proportion or measure of their respective interest in the common property. Now I beg to call attention to the fact, and I am indebted to the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] for the information, that the right of way proposed to be granted by this, in all its length and breadth, will not occupy or embrace more than 2,664 acres of land.

It will therefore be seen that this railway company, if it accepts this grant, will obligate itself to pay, for 2,664 acres of wild lands, not worth to-day exceeding $2 per acre, the sum of $3,000 annually for all time to come, besides paying each occupant for the value of his property which may be taken or damaged in the construction of the road. No account is taken of the vast benefits and advantages which are to flow to these tribes from the construction of the road. None whatever, sir. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this is a munificent royalty.

It is more, sir; it is an unjust burden to indit upon the demands of commerce and travel. What right have these people to levy such tolls upon the commerce of this country, passing over territory outside of any State and under the dominion of the United States Government? Why not compel the owners of the lands in this territory to accept an adequate compensation for such property as may be taken for public use, as you compel the inhabitants of other Territories to do? What higher claim have they upon the Government than the people of Dakota or Montana in this respect?

Notwithstanding this royalty, we hear it said that this bill proposes to rob the Indians of their lands and bestow it upon a monopoly. The truth about the matter is that the present monopoly which controls the commerce over the Indian Territory has created this war upon this measure. And if this bill is defeated there will be no resultant benefits or advantages to the Indians, but they will be enjoyed by those who now control the transportation over the Territory.

If, therefore, Mr. Speaker, all the rights of the Indians are respected, if he is made secure in getting adequate compensation for all his individual deprivations, and if besides the nation is to be the beneficiary of an annual stipend wholly out of proportion to the value of the land occupied, who is there among us to say that these people shall be permitted longer to obstruct commerce on its way to the Gulf and from the Gulf to the great Northwest. It is said that we are about to violate the treaties made with the Indians.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, no treaty has ever been made with these Indians by which the Government of the United States parted or attempted to part with its dominion over this territory. My colleague [Mr. WELLBORN] has shown that it would be incompetent for Congress to diminish in any respect the sovereignty of this Government over the Territories embraced within its limits. I will not say more on that subject, but I take the ground that the passage of this bill will not violate any provision of any treaty ever made with the Choctaws or Chickasaws. By the treaty of 1855 it was provided that—

The United States or any incorporated company shall have the right of way for railroads or lines of telegraph through the Choctaw and Chickasaw country, but for any property taken or destroyed in the construction thereof full compensation shall be made to the party or parties injured, to be ascertained and determined in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct.

By the treaty of 1855 it was provided that—

The Choctaws and Chickasaws hereby grant a right of way through their lands to any company or companies which shall be duly authorized by Congress or by the legislatures of such nations respectively, and which shall, with the assent and approbation of the Secretary of the Interior, undertake to construct a railroad through the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations from the north to the south thereof, and from the east to the west side thereof, in accordance with the provisions of the eighteenth article of the treaty of June, 1855—

Which provides, as stated before.

It is gravely assumed in this debate by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] that a road from north to south and a road from east to west across this Indian country having already been constructed by virtue of the grant of a right of way as provided for in the last-named treaty, that the power of this Government to grant a right of way is exhausted, and that the assent of the Indian councils is necessary to enable a railway company to construct a road over the Territory.

I do not assent to any such construction; but I maintain that the provision of the last treaty is supplementary solely, and instead of abrogating the provision of the treaty of 1865 refers to and recognizes its binding effect. The provision of the treaty of 1866 was punitive, so to speak. It was made just after the war, when reconstruction became necessary, as determined by the authority of the United States, and the Indians were required to give up the right of way to two roads without compensation for the property taken or embraced in the right of way so far as the nations were concerned.

There is no limit, and in fact no attempt to limit, the power of the Government to grant as many charters as the needs and requirements of commerce demanded. The roads which now traverse that country do not pay an annual stipend or toll, and why? Because the right of way was granted by the terms of the treaty.

But, Mr. Speaker, a treaty is no more than a law, and like a law may be repealed. A treaty made to-day may repeal a law made yesterday, and so a law made to-day may repeal a treaty made yesterday. And if it be true, as gentlemen contend, that this Government has attempted to abdicate its dominion and sovereignty over this Territory, the sooner we pass this bill into law and reaffirm the authority of the Government the better it will be for all parties concerned.

It is said, Mr. Speaker, that an amendment should be ingrafted upon this bill which shall substantially provide that the bill shall be inoperative until assented to by the councils of these nations. Such an amendment would and should defeat the bill. It asserts the monstrous doctrine that these tribes possess and have the right to exercise the highest powers of sovereignty and government and dominion over a Territory within the territorial limits of the United States, and despite the authority of the Government of the United States.

Practically considered, what would be the effect of such an amendment? Can we hope that a different result will be reached; have not these councils, already inspired by one cause and another, refused to grant this right of way, and do not gentlemen know that some causes, whatever they may be, exerted in the future as in the past, will produce like results?

Shall the commerce of the country be denied a transit over the Territories of the United States, and a highway from the great West to the Gulf be forbidden by these people, who, blind to their own interest, foster the interests of existing monopolies by withholding from the people of my State, and of the West, a competing line of transportation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. Mr. HASKELL. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DEERING] has thirteen minutes remaining.

Mr. HASKELL. It is my intention to call the previous question at the conclusion of what I may have to say. My colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. BUCK,] desires to offer an amendment, to have it pending, before the previous question is ordered. I yield five minutes to him.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I have twenty minutes, and desire to add as much time to the gentleman from Connecticut as he receives from the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HASKELL. That cannot be allowed. I have the floor at the time arranged for closing this debate, and I must call the previous question when I conclude. Out of my thirteen minutes I yield five; and if the gentleman from Massachusetts can get his time he must do so by voting down the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. BUCK.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as a new section the following:
"SEC. 12. This act shall not go into effect without the consent of the general council of the Choctaw Nation."

Mr. REAGAN. Does that require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does not.

Mr. BUCK. I find myself obliged to differ somewhat with the report of the minority, of the committee which is to the effect that both the Choctaw Nation and the Chickasaw Nation shall pass upon the question of whether this bill shall become law or not. I desire to correct one or two gentlemen who have seemingly fallen into an error as to the course of this railroad. This line of road does not touch the territory of the Chickasaw Nation at all; but runs wholly through the territory of the Choctaw Nation. Therefore I have offered an amendment, providing that the general council of the Choctaw Nation shall pass upon this bill before it shall become operative.

By treaties between these nations and the United States Government now in existence legislative jurisdiction is given over certain sections of the Indian Territory to the Choctaw Nation, and legislative jurisdiction is given over certain other portions to the Chickasaw Nation. But the lands are owned in common by the two. Therefore it is that I desire to say that this bill which the majority of the committee recommends for passage is in respect to the matter of damages for the land proposed to be taken entirely ample, entirely proper, because it secures to both of those nations their respective shares in the damages which may grow out of taking their common lands.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUCK. I have very little time.

Mr. DUNN. Would you give the Indian council the power to veto an act of Congress?

Mr. BUCK. I would give the Indian council of the Choctaw Nation, a nation which never yet put an obstruction in the way of the General Government, which never offered any factious opposition to either of the two railroad charters already granted and running east and west and north and south through its territory; a nation which was taken and put into the Indian Territory by a sentiment that lies at the bottom of every American heart, that of civilizing them and of giving them an opportunity of exercising the right of self-government; a nation which has its schools, its roads, its canals, its two railroads, its senate and its house of representatives—to such a community, to such a nation, I certainly would grant the right to pass upon just such a question as this.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. Has the gentleman information that they are opposed to this?

Mr. BUCK. No, sir; not at all. They undertook to pass upon a bill granting a right of way to this road, and the bill was brought here and urged upon the ground that they had approved of it. An agent of the Government was sent out to the Indian Territory to obtain their consent. The consent was carried in the senate, but the vote resulted in a tie in the lower house, the speaker having voted in the negative. The governor decided that the speaker had no right to vote, and that consequently the consent was obtained, and he so certified. Of course this was not law, as the speaker clearly had the right to vote.

This action of the Choctaw council was in accordance with the existing treaties between that nation and the United States Government. They had the right to pass upon that question. The treaty of 1855 provides that said nation shall be "secured in the unrestricted right of self-government." (Treaty of 1855, article 7.) And in the treaty of 1866 it is provided that said nation "shall not be prevented from authorizing such works of internal improvement as it may deem essential to the welfare and prosperity of the community." (Treaty of 1866, article 43.)

The passage of the bill was urged before our committee on the ground that the Choctaw council had passed upon the question, and only on that ground. But it appeared afterward that it had not received the approval of the Choctaw Nation, and so we, as a committee, at that time thought that it should go back. Subsequently the Senate bill was passed, and a change came over the spirit of the dreams of the majority of the committee, and they now recommend the passage of the Senate bill, which authorizes the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railroad Company to go through that territory, booted and spurred, without any regard to the wishes of the Choctaw council, and for that reason we of the minority are opposed to it.

We say they ought to pass upon it, as they have passed, in connection with the Government of the United States on one railroad running east and west, and on another railroad running north and south. There is still another application before our committee to-day, undecided, for a railroad to go through the Territory.

I say that this Indian nation has never offered any factious opposition whatever to railroads. What was their objection to this bill? It was that it gave too much land. It gave 200 feet in width along the line of the road which they did not want it to do, as they said it was too much land to give away for this purpose.

Another objection was that there was no suitable provision for the disposition of damages that might be awarded. Another objection was that they could not legislate to control the company in respect to the damages which might accrue to persons and property after the railroad was in running order.

Now, these are just such objections as the Legislature of the State of Kentucky might make to a railroad corporation in that State; just such objections as the Legislature of my State or the Legislature of the State of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] might make to railroads. Are these objections which this nation made to be urged on the floor of this House as a reason why this Indian nation is to be regarded as not competent to pass upon such a question?

I hope the House will adopt the amendment which provides for obtaining the consent of the Choctaw council which I have offered. I will say that there is a navigable stream over which this road must construct a bridge before it can run through this territory, as I understand it. It will take longer to construct that bridge than will be required to consult with the general council of the Choctaw Nation. Then if that general council offers any factious opposition, and without good reason refuses to allow this railroad to go through that territory, we can abrogate that treaty and in that way proceed according to law. But let us not do it before we have given them a fair chance to pass on the question.

Mr. HASKELL. Has not the time of the gentleman expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. How much time did the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASKELL. I yielded five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That time has expired.

Mr. BUCK. I want but a moment more. The troublesome question about the law matter can be set aside. Some think that the treaty of 1866 does away with the treaty of 1855. That may or may not be so. I know as a lawyer that we can pass this act if we choose to do so, and by the decision of the Supreme Court which has been cited by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] it is held that a statute will operate as the abrogation of a treaty, for a treaty with an Indian tribe is said to be of no higher grade than a statute.

We have the power to pass this bill. But I appeal to this House not to violate the treaty which we have made, and not to override the old law of the treaty by this new act which supersedes it. In the language found in the inimitable sermon on conscience and read by Corporal Trim to Uncle Toby: "Decide this case not like an Asiatic cadi, according to the ebbs and flows of his own passion, but like a British judge in this land of liberty and good sense, who makes no new law but faithfully declares that law which he knows already written." [Applause.]

Mr. HASKELL. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has three minutes remaining.

Mr. HASKELL. I desire to say but a word or two. Every provision of this bill, except the right of eminent domain, has been agreed to unanimously by all concerned. The right of eminent domain is not raised in this matter, because here is the express language of the treaty of 1855, giving us the power, if we will, to put these roads through this territory.

The very treaty of 1866 that my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] refers to, with its two-road provision, quotes in terms the treaty of 1855, and says that the two new roads are to be granted in pursuance of that treaty of 1855.

If we acted upon the right of eminent domain with these Indians what would we do? We would give to them the same powers, rights, privileges, immunities, and favors that we give to our own children: nothing more, nothing less. We would legislate for them as I would legislate for my own family, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] would legislate for his family, as the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BUCK] would legislate for his family. We would put our own children into the same line of law that by this bill we place these Indians. Will equity require anything more of us? Will the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BUCK] say to me that I am not kindly disposed to the Indian race when I legislate for them as I would legislate for my own babies? I now call for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. BUCK.] which will be read by the Clerk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add to the bill the following section:

"Sec. 12. This act shall not go into effect without the consent of the general council of the Choctaw Nation."

The question was taken; and, upon a viva voce vote, the Speaker pro tempore announced that the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and there were—yeas 26, nays 61.

So (more than one-fifth voting in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 43, nays 116, not voting 130; as follows:

YEAS—43.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. STEELE with Mr. COBB.

Mr. GROUT with Mr. COVINGTON.

Mr. BREWER with Mr. HOGE.

Mr. CASWELL with Mr. MOULTON.

Mr. O'NEILL with Mr. KENNA.

Mr. HOUK with Mr. DIBRELL.

Mr. BISBEE with Mr. ELLIS.

Mr. ROBESON with Mr. WILLITS.

Mr. ANDERSON with Mr. BLACKBURN.

Mr. RANDALL with Mr. MCCOOK.

Mr. CALDWELL with Mr. DAVIS of Illinois.

Mr. WARD with Mr. AIKEN.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, with Mr. HENDERSON.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. How much time is left for the consideration of business from the Committee on Indian Affairs?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the time occupied in calling the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill, which came over from yesterday as unfinished business, is to be reckoned in the two hours and a half, the time has already expired.

Mr. HASKELL. The previous question has been ordered upon the pending bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question has been ordered upon the third reading of this bill.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Does the Chair rule that therefore the bill has the right to run beyond the time assigned for the consideration of business of this character?

Mr. HASKELL. It has been so held.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the previous question will carry the bill through to the question upon its passage.

Mr. MILLS. That has been the ruling heretofore.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DEERING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HASKELL. I rise to a point of order. Does the Chair hold that the time occupied by the roll-call this morning upon a bill coming over from a previous day is to be taken out of the time allotted to the business of our committee? It was a roll-call under the ordinary rules of the House, and not under the special order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If it be not taken into account, the gentleman's committee has fifteen minutes remaining.

Mr. HASKELL. I should like to use that fifteen minutes.

VACATION OF EVENING SESSION.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is there an order for an evening session?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask, by unanimous consent, the session for this evening be vacated.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. KELLEY, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. HOOKER, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. MOREY, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. STEELE, for ten days, from the 26th instant.

ALEXANDER C. TWINING.

On motion of Mr. PHELPS, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the petition of Alexander C. Twining, of New Haven, Connecticut, for extension of a patent for the manufacture of ice, and the accompanying papers, no adverse report having been made.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, Mr. DOWD obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD remarks on the bill (H. R. No. 6158) to aid in the support of common schools, and Mr. PETTIGREW remarks on the bill (S. No. 1604) to establish an assay office at Deadwood, in the Territory of Dakota. [See Appendix.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WALKER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to ask a parliamentary question of the Chair.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 65.

Mr. BROWNE. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. WALKER. I demand tellers on the motion to adjourn.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the House refused to adjourn.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PEIRCE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 6242) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BROWNE. I move the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I rise to submit a privileged report.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I hope the Speaker will look this way one time. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin says he rises to make a privileged report, and the Chair supposed it was his duty to recognize the gentleman from Wisconsin under such circumstances.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I think so myself, that he deserves recognition; but I do, too. [Laughter.]

AMERICAN NAVAL FORCES IN ALEXANDRIA.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report back the following resolution referred to that committee on motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. ROBINSON,] and to move that the committee be discharged from its further consideration; and further to report back correspondence sent to that committee by the Secretary bearing on the same subject, and to move that it be printed.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby instructed to communicate with this House any correspondence with or instructions to Commodore Nicholson relative to his extraordinary threat to open fire upon the city of Alexandria under certain contingencies; and also to inform the House whether he has been informed that American sailors and officers are performing police duty in the city of Alexandria under the British admiral, and if so, by what authority.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the Committee on Foreign Affairs is discharged from the further consideration of the resolution, and the correspondence indicated is ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT OWENSBOROUGH, KENTUCKY.

Mr. WALKER. I now renew my motion to adjourn.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I rise to a question of personal privilege. I desire to state that during the eight months of this session I have never asked a personal favor of this House, and furthermore I desire to say I have never objected to the personal request of any member in this House. I ask by unanimous consent of the House to take from the Calendar House bill No. 4181 and put it on its passage.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that is a matter of personal privilege, but it will submit the proposition to the House.

Mr. McKENZIE. I think it is a question of personal privilege, under the circumstances. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not.

Mr. McKENZIE. It is personal to me. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to take up for present consideration House bill No. 4181 for the construction of a public building at Owensborough, Kentucky.

Mr. WALKER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. McKENZIE. I serve notice on everybody in this House there shall be no more unanimous consent. I have been forbearing as long as it is possible to be.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. RICH and others objected.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman has asked favors in this House and they were granted to him; but I serve notice now no unanimous consent shall hereafter be given.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is not in order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BROWNE. Let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion to adjourn.

Mr. WALKER. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. COX, of New York. I renew it, and demand the regular order.

Mr. McKENZIE. Why do you object to my bill? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The Chair is not informed as to what time still remains to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I understand objection has been withdrawn to this bill.

The SPEAKER. Several gentlemen, the Chair understands, have objected.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] withdraws his objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the proposition again to the House. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. RICH. I object.

Mr. McKENZIE. Who objects?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WHITE. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will withdraw his objection to the request of my colleague, and let this bill come before the House for consideration.

Several members demanded the regular order.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I desire to say in reply to the inquiry of the Chair that if the time taken in calling the roll upon the unfinished business of the Indian Committee coming over from yesterday is to be counted in the two hours and a half allowed them, then the time of the committee has expired; otherwise they still have twenty minutes of the time remaining.

Mr. NEAL. Regular order.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SIMONTON. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion to adjourn until Monday was not agreed to.

Mr. COX, of New York. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota, that the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 39.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and seventeen minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, July 28, 1882.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. HALE, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BROWN. I present a petition of the mayor and council and citizens of Brunswick, Georgia, praying that the quarantine station at Sapelo Sound may not be discontinued by the Board of Health. There has been some question about the appropriation for it, I understand. I was just going to state that the city of Charleston and the city of Savannah had sent a delegation here to look after that matter, and that it is very important, but the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] informs me that there is already an agreement to put it on the appropriation bill. I present the petition and move its reference to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

FRANCIS V. GREENE.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, some time since I reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs adversely the joint resolution (S. R. No. 55) conferring the rank of surgeon on the retired list of the Navy of the United States on Passed Assistant Surgeon Francis V. Greene, for highly meritorious service during the prevalence of the yellow fever on board the United States ship Lancaster in the year 1875.

Although I have no reason to think that the committee will change their decision on that subject, a friend of his, his counsel, desires to have a hearing before us, and I reported the joint resolution before he had an opportunity to be heard. I therefore ask unanimous consent to have the vote by which the joint resolution was indefinitely postponed reconsidered, and that it may be recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Which orders will be made if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

TENTH CENSUS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 2151) to provide for the publication of the Tenth Census.

Mr. BUTLER. There is evidently not a quorum present. I move a call of the Senate. I have no objection whatever to taking up any measure proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island when there is a quorum here.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senate will not insist upon a call. The bill the Senator from Rhode Island refers to was thoroughly discussed the other day and I have no doubt will go through at once without any objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator be kind enough to state what the bill is?

Mr. ANTHONY. It is the bill providing for the publication of the Tenth Census.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not know that was the bill. I have no objection to its consideration.

Mr. HALE. It is a matter we debated the other day and were almost ready to pass upon when the morning hour expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Quite ready, I think.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 2151) to provide for the publication of the Tenth Census.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts as modified.

The amendment as modified was read, as follows:

That in order to avoid duplication in the distribution of these documents, and to secure complete sets to libraries and other public institutions, the additional copies herein ordered, excepting those ordered for the Treasury Department and for the Fish Commission, be delivered to the document-rooms of the Department of the Interior; and the Secretary of the Interior shall distribute those ordered for the use of Congress as follows: in sets to each of such fifteen libraries and other public institutions or individuals as shall be named to him for this purpose by each Senator, and to each of such ten libraries and other public institutions or individuals as shall be named to him for this purpose by each Representative and Delegate, and in volumes to Senators and Representatives or such other parties as shall be designated by Senators, Representatives, and Delegates until the quota of each shall be exhausted: Provided, That one copy of each volume shall, on its reception from the Public Printing Office, be transmitted to each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress: And provided further, That duplicate copies shall not be sent to any library or individual on the request of any Senator or Member of the House of Representatives until both Senator and Member shall be notified that they have named the same library or individual: And provided further, That the party receiving the work upon the order of a member of Congress shall be informed by the Secretary of the Interior upon whose request it is supplied. And the Secretary of the Interior shall report to Congress at its next session the names and locations of the libraries and other public institutions designated to receive these reports under the provisions of this bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The change of the aggregate amount, the Secretary informs the Chair, was not formally agreed to. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] proposed to strike out $834,461.61 and insert $678,624.61. Is there objection to that amendment? The Chair hears none, and it is adopted.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HALE. I ask to have the naval appropriation bill taken up, and I shall then yield to formal business, or matter that will not take time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill is before the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I yield to the Senator from California, [Mr. MILLER.]

MERIDIAN OF LONGITUDE.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I ask consent to call up the joint resolution (H. R. No. 209) to authorize the President of the United States to call an international conference to fix on and recommend for universal adoption a common prime meridian to be used in the reckoning of longitude and in the regulation of time throughout the world. It is a measure called for by scientific people and will set at rest a question which has excited them for a long time. It is reported unanimously by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with an amendment, in line 11, to strike out "three" and insert "five;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, &c., That the President of the United States be authorized and requested to extend to the governments of all nations in diplomatic relations with our own an invitation to appoint delegates to meet delegates from the United States in the city of Washington, at such time as he may see fit to designate, for the purpose of fixing upon a meridian proper to be employed as a common zero of longitude and standard of time reckoning throughout the globe; and that the President be authorized to appoint delegates, not exceeding five in number, to represent the United States in such international conference.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I desire the amendment to be rejected, because if adopted the joint resolution would have to go back to the House for concurrence in the amendment. The committee thought five would be better, but have reconsidered their action under the circumstances. I therefore ask that the amendment of the committee be not adopted.

The amendment was rejected.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAY OF LETTER-CARRIERS.

Mr. FERRY. Having been occupied in committee, I ask the Senator from Maine to allow me to make a report. I am directed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4443) to amend sections 3 and 4 of the act of February 21, 1879, to fix the pay of letter-carriers, and for other purposes, to report it favorably without amendment, and to recommend its passage. I am requested by several Senators to ask for the passage of the bill at this time.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. FERRY. The bill does not increase the pay of letter-carriers except the pay of auxiliaries from $400 to $600. Four hundred dollars is altogether too small. The present law gives auxiliaries $400, and this bill provides for auxiliaries at $600. It does not change the pay of other classes. It simply leaves them at $800 and $1,000 in large cities. In cities under 75,000 the pay to-day is $850. This bill does not touch cities having a population of under 75,000, and applies simply to those having a population of 75,000 and over, there being two classes in those cities, and as stated their pay being $800 and $1,000. All the difference that this bill makes with the present law is that it makes it mandatory upon the Postmaster-General in case of vacancy in the first-class grade, and on a year's service, the carrier of the second class receiving $800 shall be promoted to $1,000. That is all the difference the bill in that respect proposes.

Mr. HOAR. I shall not interfere with the Senator's bill by opposing it, but I think it proper to say that the distinction between cities of over 75,000 inhabitants and under 75,000 is, in my judgment, wholly untenable in principle. A letter-carrier in the city of New York or Boston has a compact route where there is a great mass of population, the letters he carries are in small space, and it is a sheltered route, easy to traverse. On the other hand, in a city of 15,000 or 20,000 inhabitants, the number of letter-carriers being smaller than in a city of 50,000, he has just as many letters to deliver and at the same time he has a larger route to travel and much more space to cover. He goes into the outskirts and suburbs and has longer spaces to travel, and it is utter injustice to make the discrimination. I will not suggest a measure of injustice to these others who I admit are among the most hard-worked class of public servants. The number of these letter-carriers is very great and they have much labor to perform, walking and going up and down stairs, and they are entitled to my sympathy and respect. I wish, however, to put on record my dissent from these principles while not resisting the particular bill.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator from Massachusetts will allow me to say that this bill does not touch that general point of population classification. The present law makes the discrimination between cities of 75,000 and those under that number. In cities of 75,000 and over there are two classes of carriers, and in cities having a population under 75,000 there is but one class of carriers, receiving $850. They get $50 more than is provided for the second class in cities of 75,000 and over.

So far as the first and second classes are concerned, I desire to answer the Senator from Massachusetts by stating two facts which are in favor of those serving in the larger cities. One is the difficulty of getting homes. They have to go into the suburbs to find places where they can with their means secure suitable homes, when in smaller cities they can get homes nearer the circuit of their work. In the large cities they are compelled either to pay more for their rents or else go further from the circuit of their service.

Mr. HOAR. They have street cars in the large cities on which to travel to their homes.

Mr. FERRY. Then there is another point. In compact large cities they have to travel up five, six, and seven stories with but few elevators comparatively. Their labor in going up and down stairs is largely more than in smaller cities, where their steps are largely upon a level, so that the labor is more taxing in larger cities than in smaller cities.

Mr. HOAR. Those cases are very rare, and they exist in small cities, with the exception that there is somebody at the basement who takes the letters.

Mr. ROLLINS. It strikes me that the Senator from Massachusetts is quite right about this matter, and I can see no reason for the difference.

Mr. FERRY. This bill does not change that feature of the law.

Mr. ROLLINS. I think letter-carriers in some of the smaller cities do much more work than in larger cities, and there certainly should be no discrimination against them. They should have the same pay certainly.

Mr. FERRY. If the Senator will allow me, in smaller cities of less than a population of 75,000 carriers get $50 more than this bill contemplates for carriers serving in cities of 75,000 and over. This bill does not change the pay of the two classes of carriers in cities of 75,000 population and over. They receive by existing law, and will receive by this bill $800 and $1,000 respectively. The present law gives carriers $850 in cities under 75,000. This bill does not touch those in cities having less than 75,000 population, nor does it interfere with the classification of population. It is simply providing that instead of promotion being left to the discretion of the Postmaster-General, they shall upon one year's service of $800 be promoted to the $1,000 grade, provided there is vacancy for them in such higher grade. That is all there is about the bill, except as already stated, auxiliaries are increased from $400 to $600.

Mr. GROOME. I do not propose to oppose the passage of the bill or do anything to delay action upon it, but I rise simply to put myself right upon the record.

I wish to say that I agree entirely with all that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has so well said on this point, and I think he might have added to it by saying that the letter-carriers in the large cities have very great conveniences in the transaction of their business which are not had by the carriers in cities of the third class. In the larger cities they are furnished with wagons in which they are taken to the places where they have to distribute their mail, and their mail matter is carried for them; and hence their labors are very greatly lessened.

I should be very strongly inclined to think that if any distinction whatever is made between the carriers in the larger cities and the carriers in cities under 75,000 population those in smaller cities ought to have the larger pay; but I think the true rule is that in all cities where letter-carriers are required the pay of the carriers should be uniform.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say that as a member of the Post-Office Committee I opposed there the provision which increases the pay of the auxiliaries from $400 to $600. I did not approve of it and I did not give my consent to disturbing the present arrangement with reference to the class of $800 and $1,000 letter-carriers. I wanted that to remain as it is. I shall not vote for the bill as it is now.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ATLANTA COTTON EXPOSITION.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Maine kindly yields to me, I understand, for a moment, to present a report from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HALE. Not to take any time.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope it will not give rise to any debate. If it does I shall withdraw it. There was referred to the Committee on Printing a joint resolution (S. R. No. 74) for printing 5,000 copies of the official report of the Atlanta cotton exposition. The committee reports favorably, but with a substitute varying the language somewhat. I submit it, and by instruction of the committee I ask for its immediate consideration. If anything is to be done it ought to be done soon. I can give a very brief explanation if necessary.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Printing was, to strike out all after the resolving clause of the joint resolution and to insert:

That the official report of the international cotton exposition of 1881 be printed, and that 5,000 additional copies be printed, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 500 copies for the use of the Department of State, and 500 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture, and that the sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Public Printer to purchase at a fair price the stereotype plates of the official reports of the said exposition now in the hands of H. I. Kimball, the director-general of said exposition.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. At the request of the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. MAHONEY] who is indisposed, I offer an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which I move be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1052) in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund; agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. C. G. WILLIAMS of Wisconsin, Mr. W. W. RICE of Massachusetts, and Mr. P. V. DEUSTER of Wisconsin, managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution:

A bill (S. No. 740) to establish ports of delivery at Kansas City and Saint Joseph, in the State of Missouri; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 73) providing for the publication at the Government Printing Office of certain information in aid of the Society of the Red Cross.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 1819) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Elizabeth C. Custer; and

A bill (S. No. 972) creating the Oregon Short-Line Railway Company a corporation in the Territories of Utah, Idaho, and Wyoming, and for other purposes.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. Now I hope the Secretary under the order will read the bill.

The Acting Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, after the word "and," in line 37, to strike out "various staff corps of the Navy and of the Marine Corps, but naval constructors and assistant naval constructors may be appointed from civil life," and insert "engineer corps of the Navy and of the Marine Corps;" so as to read:

Provided, That hereafter there shall be no appointments of cadet-midshipmen or cadet-engineers at the Naval Academy, but in lieu thereof naval cadets shall be appointed from each Congressional district and at large, as now provided by law for cadet-midshipmen, and all the undergraduates at the Naval Academy shall hereafter be designated and called "naval cadets;" and from those who successfully complete the six years' course appointments shall hereafter be made as it is necessary to fill vacancies in the lower grades of the line and engineer corps of the Navy and of the Marine Corps.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, I have no objection to this amendment, but I must express my surprise that even the omnipotent Committee on Appropriations should have the audacity to propose an amendment to anything that comes from the House of Representatives. It is different from the doctrine laid down to us yesterday. We were then told that to amend a bill which came from the House was to insult that body and to draw down its wrathful vengeance upon us. It was threatened that if we amended the bill we should be kept here not only through the heats of August but into the snows of December. We were told practically that it was our duty to receive with unquestioning submission whatever the "sovereign majesty,"—that was the term used—"of the House" should deign to send to its vassal, the Senate.

Now, I do not agree to that. I do not believe that the House of Representatives is sovereign any more than the Senate; I do not believe that both together are sovereign; and I can vote for this amendment without violating the consistency which I think the Senator from Maine must break when he votes for it.

Mr. HALE. As the Senator from Rhode Island does not object to the provision, I prefer expedition in the passage of the bill to the gratification of answering him, and so ask that the question be put on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 51, after the word "board," to insert:

But nothing herein contained shall reduce the number of appointments from such graduates below ten in each year.

So as to read:

And provided further, That no greater number of appointments into these grades shall be made each year than shall equal the number of vacancies which has occurred in the same grades during the preceding year; such appointments to be made from the graduates of the year, at the conclusion of their six years' course, in the order of merit, as determined by the academic board of the Naval Academy; the assignment to the various corps to be made by the Secretary of the Navy upon the recommendation of the academic board. But nothing herein contained shall reduce the number of appointments from such graduates below ten in each year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "cadet-midshipmen," in line 57, to insert "and so much of section 1521 of the Revised Statutes as is inconsistent herewith is hereby repealed;" so as to read:

And if there be a surplus of graduates, those who do not receive such appointment shall be given a certificate of graduation, an honorable discharge, and one year's sea-pay as now provided by law for cadet-midshipmen; and so much of section 1521 of the Revised Statutes as is inconsistent herewith is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "discharged," in line 62, to insert "at the end of four years' course at the Naval Academy;" in line 63, after the word "with," to strike out "his" and insert "a proper;" and, in line 64, after the word "graduation," to strike out "and one year's sea-pay, under the provisions of this act;" so as to make the clause read:

That any cadet whose position in his class entitles him to be retained in the service may, upon his own application, be honorably discharged at the end of four years' course at the Naval Academy, with a proper certificate of graduation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 68, after the word "cadet," to strike out "assigned to a staff-corps;" so as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe a special course of study and training at home or abroad for any naval cadet.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "purpose," in line 73, to strike out—

And the appointments of chaplains and assistant surgeons shall be made from civil life as now provided by law.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I wish to offer an amendment at that point.

Mr. HALE. The agreement is that the bill shall run through on the amendments reported, and after that the additional committee amendment and other amendments shall be offered, just like any other appropriation bill.

Mr. MILLER, of California. My amendment is to strike out a considerable portion of the bill and insert a section.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly an amendment to the amendment is in order; but if the Senator's proposition is an independent amendment it will not be in order until we get through with the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I do not wish to agree to the amendments which have been proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, nor to some of the matter which came from the House.

Mr. HALE. My only question to the Senator is whether the amendment he offers is an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I ask that my amendment be read, and if it is not in order I propose to reserve it until it is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from California will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "law," in line 75, down to and including the word "grade," in line 116.

Strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 130, down to and including the word "pay," in line 162.

Mr. HALE. I submit that would be an amendment proper to come in after we have gone through with the committee amendments. It is only a matter of order; that is all.

Mr. MILLER, of California. It is immaterial to me when the amendment is considered, though I should think this was the proper time to consider it. I do not want to be shut out hereafter on a point of order.

Mr. HALE. There is no intention of that; only we are proceeding as appropriation bills are always proceeded with, under the order that the committee amendments shall first be taken up. In fact, I have some amendments from the committee which I do not propose to offer until we get through with the reading of the bill and then go back, and then the Senator's amendments may be taken up, and any other amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California object to the amendment of the committee striking out the words:

And the appointment of chaplains and assistant surgeons shall be made from civil life, as now provided by law?

Mr. MILLER, of California. Of course I object to that. There are several amendments of the committee in this part of the bill to which we object.

Mr. HALE. That is only the law as it is now.

Mr. ROLLINS. That is just what I wish to ask the Senator from Maine, if he understands that striking out these lines changes existing law at all.

Mr. HALE. Oh, no; let me explain.

Mr. ROLLINS. I do not want any ambiguity.

Mr. HALE. This amendment is perfectly legitimate. We provide for it in another part of the bill. The House put in several exceptions, and we have grouped them all, and have not interfered with the appointment of chaplains and assistant surgeons in any way.

Mr. ROLLINS. It occurs to me that Annapolis is not the best place to educate chaplains.

Mr. HALE. Those are not touched at all. That is taken care of in another part of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 78, after the word "inspectors," to strike out "fifty surgeons and ninety assistant and passed assistant surgeons," and insert:

One hundred and forty surgeons, of whom fifty shall be designated as surgeons of the first class, with the relative rank and pay now provided by law for surgeons, and ninety of whom shall be surgeons of the second and third classes, with the relative rank and pay now provided by law for passed and other assistant surgeons. Appointments in and promotions to these three classes shall be by examination before a board of medical officers of the Navy.

So as to make the clause read:

That the active list of the medical corps of the Navy shall hereafter consist of fifteen medical directors, fifteen medical inspectors, one hundred and forty surgeons, of whom fifty shall be designated as surgeons of the first class, with the relative rank and pay now provided by law for surgeons, and ninety of whom shall be surgeons of the second and third classes, with the relative rank and pay now provided by law for passed and other assistant surgeons. Appointments in and promotions to these three classes shall be by examination before a board of medical officers of the Navy.

Mr. HALE. I have a committee amendment to offer to this amendment.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The question I wish to ask now is, should this amendment be adopted, would it be competent for me to move to strike out afterward? Would that be in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the Senate it would be in order, but not in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MILLER, of California. That is the reason why I think the amendment I offer should be considered now. We want to discuss the question and dispose of it in Committee of the Whole before the bill gets into the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order to move to strike it all out and insert something else, of course.

Mr. HALE. That can be done after we go through with the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. After the bill is gone through with it will be in order to strike out the whole of this provision and insert something else.

Mr. INGALLS. But the Senator from California does not wish to be deprived, I understand, of an opportunity of discussing and resisting the pending amendment, and, as he suggests, if it is agreed to now, which I understand the Senator from Maine to ask, there will be no possibility of doing anything except to ask a disagreement in the Senate. Therefore, if the Senator from Maine will pardon the suggestion, it appears to me that the proper way to do is to consider the amendments as we go along, and to regard them as open to discussion and amendment, because of course he does not wish to deprive any Senator of the right either to resist or to amend.

Mr. HALE. No. Let me say that I am proceeding here, as the Senator from Kansas knows, according to the unvaried proceeding on appropriation bills, which is to go through first with the committee amendments and consider them, with any amendments to them, of course. When any one of the committee amendments is reached any amendment to that particular committee amendment is in order. There are certain amendments which go beyond that. I understand the amendment of the Senator from California, which I do not wish of course to in any way shut out or to limit the privilege of debate and consideration upon, goes further than any particular amendment of the committee that we have reached, and proposes to strike out certain parts of the bill covering several amendments and to substitute something else. Clearly that would be in order when we have got through and have perfected the committee amendments. Then the Senator comes in and proposes to recast the bill by substituting something that would cover one, two, three, or four pages; but I do not want to consider that now while we are considering a special amendment of the committee. I think the Senator from Kansas will see the force of that.

Mr. INGALLS. But the Senator from California does not wish that special amendment agreed to, and therefore the proper plan would be for him to object to its adoption and have it reserved for consideration hereafter; because if the Senator from Maine asks that the amendment may be agreed to by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and it is agreed to, it is beyond reach until the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. HALE. It is not beyond the reach of the Committee of the Whole afterward to strike out and substitute something else, I think.

Mr. INGALLS. Probably not.

Mr. HALE. That he can do when we get through the committee amendments, and I take it that is what the Senator has got, a provision striking out several of these amendments and substituting something else.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He proposes to take out a part of the text of the bill also, from line 75 down to line 116.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Let my amendment be read.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to its being read. Before that is done, however, let me offer my amendment perfecting this amendment of the committee. In line 87, after the word "Navy," I move to insert the words:

Provided, That the passed assistant surgeons now in the service who have been examined and found qualified shall not be subject to further examination before promotion to the grade of surgeon of the first class.

Everybody will see that that is proper, and that the provision for examination should not apply to men who have already been examined.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I think a point of order would lie against the whole amendment, all that part in italics, including the amendment of the Senator from Maine just adopted, because it is new matter, it is new legislation introduced upon an appropriation bill by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator prefers the House provision, very well; but this is simply amending the House provision which dealt with the medical corps of the Navy. The House provision cuts down that, and makes certain classifications. At the request of the head of the corps the Senate Committee on Appropriations substituted a classification more suited to the needs of the Department, as the head of that corps said, instead of the House provision; but it is not new matter; it is entirely germane to that, and is part of the subject-matter. If the Senate prefers the House provision I have no objection particularly myself; only we thought that it was a better provision than the House provision.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I do not prefer either of them.

Mr. HALE. The question is between the two.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I am against both of them.

Mr. HALE. If the committee amendment is stricken out, then the House provision will remain.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I submit still that the proper course to pursue now is to consider these amendments, and get rid of the question whether we shall strike out.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will let this matter of my amendment be fixed, and then have his amendment read, perhaps I shall have no objection to considering it now.

Mr. MILLER, of California. What does the Senator want to fix?

Mr. HALE. The amendment I have just offered to the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has been adopted.

Mr. HALE. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from California will be read.

Mr. BROWN. Before we pass from the amendment made by the committee, I move to insert, in line 86, after the word "by," the word "competitive;" so as to read:

Appointments in and promotions to these three classes shall be by competitive examination before a board of medical officers of the Navy.

Mr. HALE. Supposing in any case of vacancy in the lower rank of the medical corps of the Navy there was but one appointment, one designation, how could there be a competitive examination? And yet there should be an examination.

Mr. BROWN. Then I will say "competitive in all cases where there is more than one applicant," so as to meet that objection. It seems to me it is eminently proper in these cases that there should be a competitive examination, so that every applicant may be properly examined and examined in connection with every other applicant. I desire that the brightest and best qualified in a case of this character shall take the prize, whatever it may be, and the way to reach that is by competitive examination.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to the Senator's amendment if he thinks it will do any good.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia what is the design? What does he propose to accomplish by the word "competitive" in this particular?

Mr. BROWN. I propose, with all due respect to the Senator from Illinois, to have the different applicants for advancement to these grades appear before the board and stand a competitive examination and compete with each other for the honor of promotion. I desire, as already stated, that the brightest and best qualified and ablest man among them shall be the person appointed, without any regard to what his connections are with the Navy, or how popular he may be, or whose friend he may be, or anything of that character.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will examine the question a little further he will find the fact to be that examinations by a board are for the purpose of ascertaining the qualifications of the party to be appointed to the office of surgeon or assistant surgeon, or whatever it may be. Under the law promotion in the Navy is made by seniority, but still in these cases a man is not appointed unless he is competent. If not competent he is left to remain where he is. If there are four or five applicants in the case of an original appointment to an office, or if there are two or three vacancies, they make examinations. The man who passes the highest examination gets the first appointment. Those who pass the examination stand on the list No. 1, No. 2, and No. 3; they are classified. That is the rule now, and they go into the Navy in that way. If three appointments are to be made the man who passes the best examination goes to the head as No. 1, and so on. It is just as much a competitive examination as you can possibly make it; but if you use the word "competitive" there is but one vacancy, and it applies to promotion, you have got to repeal the law of promotion. So inserting the word "competitive" there does not accomplish what the Senator desires to accomplish, but only creates confusion.

If the Senator understands what I mean, it is this: where original appointments are to be made there is now an examination which is competitive; if twenty are examined and there are three appointments to be made, the three highest go in and they go in according to their number as they pass the examination; if there is only one vacancy for promotion, then by the law the man qualified for promotion who is entitled to it gets it; but if you use the word "competitive," then you bring other persons into the examination, and you derange the organization of the corps in that way. That is the effect of it.

Mr. BROWN. If it is a derangement, it is just such a derangement as I desire to see. This amendment of the committee reads thus:

One hundred and forty surgeons, of whom fifty shall be designated as surgeons of the first class, with the relative rank and pay now provided by law for surgeons, and ninety of whom shall be surgeons of the second and third classes, with the relative rank and pay now provided by law for passed and other assistant surgeons. Appointments in and promotions to these three classes shall be by examination before a board of medical officers of the Navy.

I propose to amend, by saying in the latter clause "by competitive examination in all cases where there is more than one applicant before a board of medical officers of the Navy."

Now whatever the present law may be on this subject I am ready to repeal it if it is in the way of that provision, and make this the last law on the subject. I think that as there are to be three grades of surgeons, proposed to be paid different salaries and with different honors according to grade, it is only proper when it comes to an examination—and the committee's amendment provides for that—that that examination should be competitive. If it is necessary to have one at all, let all compete for the honor, and whoever is the brightest and the ablest let him take it. If a man in the third class is the ablest man, the best posted, the best informed in his profession, and the best qualified for the discharge of the duties, certainly he should be promoted in preference to a man who is old or may have stronger connections or more influence in the Navy, but who has not the qualifications he has. That is my object.

Mr. HALE. If I had got at the Senator's intention before—I do not think I did—certainly I would not agree to it. I should never have agreed to it if I had supposed he was going so far as he now seems to propose. Does he want all promotions from one grade up to another in the medical corps to be subject to the competition of all the men in the lower grade?

Mr. BROWN. I should prefer that.

Mr. HALE. I supposed that what he meant was that in the original appointments, where for instance half a dozen men are designated to appear in order to be examined for an appointment to the lowest grade, then it should be a competitive examination. I have no objection to that; for an original appointment he is right; and I supposed that was all the Senator desired. I did not suppose that he desired that all the question of promotion, which is regulated by rank and by order, should be thrown open to a scramble by competition in the rank, because that would leave everything so loose that you never would get any promotions made in any degree satisfactory. I am willing that the original appointments shall be by competition.

Mr. BROWN. I said the prize should be to those best qualified. I admit that where some brighter and abler man in the lower grade took the prize it would not be satisfactory to those not qualified.

Mr. HALE. You disturb the whole question of length of service and seniority and those things which are so essential.

Mr. BROWN. The committee say in their amendment:

Appointments in and promotions to these three classes shall be by examination before a board of medical officers of the Navy.

Why examination?

Mr. HALE. I will tell the Senator why. It is because in the promotion that is regularly made in order from one grade to another there should be an examination to see if the officer who is entitled to promotion, if he is not lacking, is qualified for promotion. If he is not then the next man in order comes up, and if he is not fit on examination then the next man in order can be examined; but if you throw open every vacancy to the competition of everybody in the next grade you would revolutionize all kinds of appointments.

Mr. BROWN. Then it is a revolution very greatly needed. If the present law on that subject simply makes provision for a line of men not qualified, a line of favorites, a line of men who are afraid to stand a competitive examination, then I say revolution is very necessary.

Mr. HALE. The Senator breaks up all seniority and all rank and all preference by length of service, and puts everything into a competition. That I cannot agree to. I should like a vote of the Senate.

Mr. BROWN. It might be so in some of the other departments.

Mr. HALE. I do not want to prolong the discussion; I ask for a vote.

Mr. INGALLS. Does this amendment change the number of passed assistant surgeons and assistant surgeons in the Navy?

Mr. HALE. It reduces them from one hundred and ninety to one hundred and eighty.

Mr. VANCE. Allow me to inquire of the Senator from Maine why there are not more men taken off this list?

Mr. HALE. That is a question that I inquired of myself when the bill first came over, but on consultation and examining the records of the Department and the duty performed the committee came to the conclusion that the reduction of ten, as explained by the Surgeon-General and by other officers there, was as much perhaps as could be applied now upon this corps. I do not know but that we might have made it twenty; but we gave the corps the benefit of the doubt.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BROWN. The committee by their amendment say that appointments and promotions in the medical corps shall be by examination. I suppose that does not break up the modes of promotion. Wherever they say "by examination" I ask that it be "by competitive examination." If my amendment changes or revolutionizes promotion, then theirs does. If there is an examination at all, why not allow it to be competitive?

Mr. HALE. The law is not changed. I have explained how that is. This would revolutionize it.

Mr. BROWN. The change would be a later enactment and make the examination competitive.

Mr. LOGAN. Competitive examination applies to original appointments and not to promotions; that is the difference.

Mr. BROWN. If one man has shown himself laggard, incompetent, an idler, not attentive to his duties, he should not be promoted over a bright man who stands a better examination in his grade.

Mr. HALE. I am willing to take the vote. If the Senate think this whole thing should be thrown open in all the grades to a competitive scramble, I do not want to take up any more time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected; there being on a division—ayes 11, noes 29.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Maine in charge of this bill that the Senator from California [Mr. MILLER] moves to strike out from line 75 down to line 116.

Mr. BROWN. Before we pass from the amendment of the committee in line 87, I desire to offer another amendment.

Mr. BLAIR. I observe that the committee say to us that they have changed some of the language of this sacred text that has come to us from the House of Representatives. They have trifled with it in some instances, as in this case. They seem to have erased nine words from the text as it came from the House and they have inserted instead thereof eight lines. I have read what is erased and that which is inserted by the committee, and it all seems to me to be precisely the same thing or to be an iteration of existing law. I should like to inquire of the committee the reason of the change and wherein is the improvement except in the adoption of a considerable amount of verbiage?

Mr. MILLER, of California. I desire now—

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to hear from some member of the committee wherein it is claimed that here is an improvement. It may be one, but it is not apparent to the naked eye.

Mr. HALE. I cannot explain it any more fully than the text of the bill shows. What is the amendment of the Senator from Georgia?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Did the Senator from Georgia have a further amendment to move?

Mr. BROWN. As my proposition to open the whole field to competition to the brighter and ablest man was voted down, I desire to offer this amendment:

In all cases where a new appointment is to be made, it shall be done after a competitive examination.

Mr. SEWELL. I think that the Senator will find that that is the law now, that when these appointments are made the only restriction is to the age of the appointee. He has to pass a competitive examination, and then the highest on the list receives the appointment when a vacancy occurs.

Mr. INGALLS. It may be the law, but very frequently it is not the fact.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I have an amendment to offer now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Georgia is now pending. The Chair will recognize the Senator from California when that is disposed of.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia. It does not change the law.

Mr. BROWN. I propose that my amendment come in at the end of the amendment of the committee:

And in all cases where an appointment is to be made it shall be done after a competitive examination.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Now, Mr. President, I propose to strike out the amendment of the committee as it has been perfected, beginning with the words in italics, in line 79.

Mr. HALE. The vote has not been taken on it; it has to be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on adopting the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Is it not in order for me to move to strike it out?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in order. The question is on inserting it.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Then I move as a substitute or as an amendment to the committee's amendment, to insert in lieu of it my amendment, commencing on the eighth line, raising a commission. Let the Secretary read it.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert in lieu of the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations the following:

A commission consisting of nine members, to wit: two Senators, to be designated by the President pro tempore of the Senate; three Representatives in Congress, to be designated by the Speaker of the House; the Secretary of the Navy, and three officers of the Navy, to be designated by the President of the United States, is hereby constituted and appointed a board or commission to consider all matters relating to the proper reduction of the official list of the Navy and the adjustment of the several grades and corps thereof, said commission to make report thereon to Congress at its next session. The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to detail an officer to act as secretary, and to employ such clerks and stenographers as may be necessary; and said commission shall have power to send for persons and papers.

Mr. HALE. I object to that amendment and make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the point of order?

Mr. HALE. It is not germane to that portion of the text, to begin with; it has nothing to do with it; and then it is entirely, absolutely new legislation.

Mr. INGALLS. There is nothing in the rule that prevents new legislation as an amendment to an appropriation bill. The entire bill is new legislation.

Mr. HALE. That may be. The House may make entirely new legislation and we cannot deal with it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There has been no point of order raised to the committee amendment; but the point of order is raised to this amendment to it. This amendment is clearly general legislation.

Mr. ROLLINS. Does the Chair rule that the point of order is well taken?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon this amendment?

Mr. ROLLINS. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so holds.

Mr. ROLLINS. Allow me to say just one word. At the proper time I propose to call the attention of the Senate to this matter more distinctly. Here is a bill termed an appropriation bill. It is not an appropriation bill, in my judgment, within the rules of the Senate. It is a bill having for its object the reorganization of the Navy, and incidentally there are appropriations for the support of the Navy. There are provisions of law here, or will be when this bill becomes a law, for the completion of certain iron-clads, but this is not, in my judgment, an appropriation bill within the strict meaning of our rule, upon which such a point of order ought to be sustained. With all due deference to the Chair, if the Committee on Appropriations will come in here with a bill providing for the reorganization of the Navy, I submit that in all justice and all fairness any amendment looking in that direction in which this bill goes should be in order and should not be overruled.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Chair will permit me to make a suggestion upon that point. I understand the objection to this proposition of the Senator from California is that it is new legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine raises the point that it is general legislation.

Mr. HALE. It is general legislation; it changes existing law; it is absolutely new; there is no such law now.

Mr. HAWLEY. Now, my point is that a large part of this bill is of that precise character, so that if a committee shall desire to bar the Senate from changing its provisions it has only got to object that what we propose by way of amendment to the committee's amendment is general legislation subject to the rule. I suppose whatever they offer is amendable.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator is entirely mistaken in one respect—

Mr. HAWLEY. Let me get through. Here are some words in italics on the fourth page which we suppose to be the language of the Committee on Appropriations, and a proposition is submitted by the Senator from California aiming at changes and reductions in the Navy in a different way from that suggested by the committee. Now, if that is not in order, is any amendment of any description changing the terms of those words in italics in order?

Mr. INGALLS. The amendment itself is not in order if anybody sees fit to object to it.

Mr. ROLLINS. I submit that if the amendment proposed by the Senator from California is not in order, nearly all the amendments proposed by the Committee on Appropriations go out for the same reason. They change existing law. If we are to have a point of order made here by the Committee on Appropriations, let us understand it at the outset, and then he who makes the most points of order is the best fellow.

Mr. LOGAN. I wish to make a suggestion.

Mr. ROLLINS. To test the matter I make the point of order on the amendment of the committee beginning in line 79.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow, I desire to make this suggestion: that when a point of order is decided there is nothing in order before the Senate except an appeal from that decision, if there is dissatisfaction with it. It is not in order to discuss it after it is decided.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Has the point of order raised by the Senator from New Hampshire been decided?

Mr. LOGAN. I am talking about the point of order made on the proposition of the Senator from California. It was decided, and then this debate arose on it after it was decided. I merely suggest that it is not proper to discuss a point of order after it has been decided.

Mr. HAWLEY. I appeal from the decision of the Chair, then.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I hope no such point will be made on this important matter. I do not understand that it was decided. Of course the Chair might have indicated that it held the point well taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order now made by the Senator from New Hampshire is upon the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HAWLEY. But lest I may lose the right to do so, I appeal now from the decision of the Chair as to the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I made that same point of order against the committee amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I want the question understood.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not hear the Senator from California.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The report of our proceedings will show I raised that point of order on the committee amendment, and it has not been decided.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The attention of the Chair was not called to the point of order. The Chair can decide both points readily. He has decided one point on the pension appropriation bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. I appeal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Did the Senator from California make the point of order on the amendment of the committee?

Mr. MILLER, of California. I did.

Mr. HARRIS. I understand that the Senator from Maine raised the point of order as to an amendment which was offered to the committee's amendment, and that the Chair has ruled upon that question of order, from which ruling the Senator from Connecticut appeals. I think the thing for the Senate to do is first to decide that appeal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the Senator from California insists that he raised the first point of order on the amendment of the committee. The Chair did not hear it. If the Senator insists that he raised the point of order on the amendment of the committee, that is first in order.

Mr. HALE. What is that point of order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is on the amendment from line 79 to 87 inclusive.

Mr. HALE. Upon the point of order—

Mr. INGALLS. It is not debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not debatable. The Chair decided the same question on the pension appropriation bill on an amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to that bill. Although the amendment of the committee is in the line of the provision of the House, it is still general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. INGALLS. And is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not in order.

Mr. HALE. The Chair decides, then, that the amendment of the committee is out of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir; and he made the same decision upon the pension appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. Then we fall back upon the provision of the House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that if the Senate prefer that. We endeavored to adapt it to what we supposed would be the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. ROLLINS. That puts us all on the same plane.

Mr. MORGAN. That compels us to take the House bill without any amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The same point was raised on the pension appropriation bill and decided by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON] then occupying the chair. The meaning of the rule is that there shall be no general legislation of any kind on an appropriation bill. The Senate rules cannot affect the text of the bill as it came from the House; but no committee has authority, if the point of order is raised, to alter by amendment the provisions of the bill as they come from the House if the alteration proposed is general legislation.

Mr. HALE. Now I have no objection, as that point of order is deliberately made, to take the House bill as it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the question is on striking out in lines 78 and 79 the words "fifty surgeons and ninety assistant and passed assistant surgeons."

Mr. HOAR. I should like to understand precisely the scope of the ruling of the Chair, if I may be permitted, because this is a very serious question in regard to the authority of the Senate. Does the Chair hold that if general legislation on a given subject is before the Senate in order by reason of the fact that it has come from the House of Representatives as part of a proposed appropriation bill, that general legislation cannot be amended by changing its character by perfectly germane amendments disposing of the same matter in the same way but perfecting or changing the mechanism? For instance, suppose the House sends up here a proposition on an appropriation bill that there shall be hereafter a bureau of industry which shall consist of a commissioner and a deputy commissioner and ten clerks of the first class and ten of the second class; that is in the bill; cannot the Appropriations Committee move to amend that by saying that there shall be five clerks of the first class, that instead of a commissioner there shall be a secretary or superintendent, and vary those details? If that be true, it puts the whole legislation of the Senate in a sack of which the House of Representatives ties the string. Without any reference to its effect on this controversy with the Committee on Appropriations in this particular case, I hope the Senate will pause before they put themselves in that position.

Mr. BLAIR. If the view which the Senator from Massachusetts takes is right and the Chair is wrong in holding that the amendment reported by the committee is subject to the point of order that it is general legislation, how can it be possible when a member of the Senate moves an amendment to the committee's amendment that that is out of order? If the Chair is right in his holding as to the amendment of the committee the whole will go out together, and, as the Senator from Massachusetts suggests, the Senate is in a bag tied by the House of Representatives, and we take what they send to us.

But, sir, assume the other position, that the committee can come in here with amendments comprising general legislation, and that no member of the Senate can move an amendment to their amendments in the same line, how is it that the Senate itself is not in the bag of the Committee on Appropriations if that amendment to their amendment is not in order? The Chair is right all the way through, or wrong all the way through, and it is a very important question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This whole subject was discussed pretty extensively upon the pension appropriation bill. The amendments of the Committee on Appropriations in that case were in the line of the provisions adopted in the House. They were discussed here for two or three hours, and the Chair was of the opinion then, and is now, that to carry out our rules any amendment which proposed general legislation, which altered the law, was not in accordance with our rules, being general legislation on an appropriation bill. The rule is that there shall be no general legislation on an appropriation bill. The Senate has chosen to say that. If this is not general legislation, the Chair does not know what it is.

Mr. HOAR. This is not an amendment to the bill that the Senator from California proposes, but it is an amendment to a proposed amendment. He is not proposing to alter a law; he may vote against that afterward.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HOAR. I know.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the amendment of the committee, not the amendment of the Senator from California, that the Chair is ruling on.

Mr. BAYARD. I wish to ask a question of the Chair because I consider that the effect of this ruling may lead us to very extraordinary results if I understand its full force. Under the Constitution each House may determine the rules of its proceeding, and I can comprehend that it is not in the power of the Senate to object to the consideration of measures that come to us from the House of Representatives because of the form under which they come, or of the rule under which they come. Therefore the House of Representatives may present, and in the present case certainly has presented general legislation upon an appropriation bill that could not have been done originally in the Senate. I apprehend that all of the rule, the purview of its meaning and the scope of its effect is in regard to amendments offered here originally in the Senate; that is to say, there cannot be an amendment to a general appropriation bill which proposes general legislation, offered in the Senate; or at least if it is offered, it is objectionable under the twenty-ninth rule. But can it be that where the House has sent us legislation, that legislation being general in its nature, and not pertaining to appropriations, it is not open to the objections to which amendments to appropriations under Rules 27, 28, and 29 are open?

Therefore, I hold that any member of the Senate can move to amend the text of general legislation that comes to us from the House, that any committee may order a member to do it, and that it is not in conflict with the meaning, and cannot be in conflict with the meaning of Rule 29. Rule 29 is a Senate rule. It does not affect the forms of legislation in the House; it only affects the forms of legislation in the Senate; and when we have general legislation that is one thing; when we have legislation on an appropriation bill that is another thing. The House choose to send us both combined. Then I say our rules in the Senate that apply to general legislation are applicable to that portion of the bill that comes from the House which proposes general legislation, and the rules of the Senate that affect appropriation bills are applicable to that portion of the House bill that proposes appropriations only. But surely if a general law under cover of an appropriation bill comes to us, it is to be treated according to the rules of the Senate and under the general laws of legislation, and any member of the Senate can move to perfect it in the ordinary way in the first or second degree, and any committee of the Senate may do so.

Our rule is intended only to affect bills of general appropriation, but when you find a bill that under any action of the House is not only a bill for general appropriations, but is also a bill for general legislation, you are obliged to adapt your rules in order to apply them in reason, either to amend the general legislation or to amend the general appropriations according to the rules of the Senate affecting those two classes of subjects. If you do not, what is the result? You are bound as in cast-iron to the text of the bill the House may send you; you cannot amend it in any degree; you must adopt or reject it in whole; you cannot improve it. The fact is you can only amend the bill by voting against the entire bill.

Mr. ROLLINS. Let me ask the Senator—

Mr. BAYARD. Let me illustrate further. If I am right in this the matter is very important. Suppose a general appropriation bill should contain but a single item of general appropriation to carry out the existing law, and that all the rest of the bill should be entirely general legislation. Now, coming into the Senate, what rules of amendment are you to adopt? Are you to say because there is one item of appropriation on that bill its character is so changed that you cannot amend it in any particular, you cannot perfect it, and the only thing to do is to vote down the bill or to accept it, for that is precisely the result we are brought to. If what I understand to be the effect of the ruling is carried out, you cannot amend general legislation because the House has coupled it with general appropriations. I do not think we can be prepared for that.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, there are two questions of fact to be determined. First, is this a general appropriation bill; and I apprehend however much or little legislation it may have upon it, it will not change its character of being a bill making appropriations for the support of the Navy. It is one of the general appropriation bills. The next question of fact to be determined is, is the amendment proposed general legislation? If so, it does not matter whether it is reported by a committee or offered by a Senator. Rule 29 provides that—

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

It cannot matter whether reported by a committee or offered by a Senator upon this floor, if it is upon a general appropriation bill, and the amendment proposed, whether by a committee or by a Senator, proposes general legislation, it is expressly forbidden by the twenty-ninth rule; and therefore the ruling of the Chair is bound to be sustained. Indeed, the Chair could not have ruled otherwise, as it seems to me, than as the Chair has ruled.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from Tennessee remove a difficulty I have got if he can?

Mr. HARRIS. I will if I can.

Mr. BECK. It is this: the House have sent us a bill containing a proposition which is clearly general legislation, which they have the right to do, I assume. They have done it, at any rate, and we cannot question it. We may regard their provision as a good amendment of the law, but not a perfect amendment, and seek to amend it by new legislation. That we cannot do, as the Chair says. Therefore we reject the House amendment, and we go into a committee of conference with the House amendment rejected. The House say, "We will adhere to our amendment, but we will agree to modifications of it such as may suit you in carrying out the views of the Senate," and they are agreed to by the conferees. The House bill is amended in conference. Then it is in order, and no point of order can be raised against it.

Mr. BAYARD. May I put a question right there?

Mr. BECK. The ruling of the Chair may be the law, but that rule adhered to compels us to accept what the House has done or strike it out; and if we strike it out and go into conference we give the conferees a power that we have not got ourselves. While the ruling may be law, it is an absolute absurdity for the Senate to tie itself down in that way.

Mr. BAYARD. Would not a motion to strike out a portion of the House proposition be an amendment? Is not that one form of amendment?

Mr. HARRIS. My answer to the Senator from Delaware would be that it is a form of amendment, but I hardly think it would be construed into general legislation, and therefore a motion to strike out the whole or a part of the legislation that comes from the House would hardly be decided or held by the Chair to be general legislation. Such a motion I apprehend to be in order.

In answer to the Senator from Kentucky, I say that if the Senate shall amend by striking out a part or the whole of the legislation that is contained in this bill as it comes from the House, and the House shall insist upon its provisions, a committee of conference would have perfect power to modify the clauses so amended according to the judgment of the committee, and I apprehend that no question of order could be made upon the report of the committee, but the two Houses would have to sit in judgment, and finally decide whether they should adopt the report of the committee or reject it as a whole.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator a question before he sits down, with a view of testing the extreme to which he would go? Suppose the House on this bill had proposed new general legislation which enacted that persons embezzling some of the funds herein appropriated should be punished by imprisonment not exceeding twenty years, or that persons making false answers in some examination should be so punished, would it in his judgment be out of order to propose in the Senate to reduce the term of imprisonment to ten years, on the ground that it was proposing general legislation here?

Mr. HARRIS. I should incline to the opinion that even that amendment would be properly held to be general legislation. Certainly if general legislation, if I make no mistake in that, such an amendment is prohibited by the very letter as well as the plain and unmistakable spirit of the rule.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, does not that question indicate to his mind the fallacy of the whole proposition? This is not an amendment, in the sense of our rules, proposing general legislation. The general legislation has been already proposed; it is in order. To propose is to place before the Senate. Now, the House proposes to the Senate general legislation, and an amendment proposing to amend that is not an original proposition of general legislation under the rules.

Mr. HARRIS. My answer to the Senator from Massachusetts will be to ask the Senator another question. Is the amendment reported by the committee general legislation? If it is not, then it is not objectionable under the twenty-ninth rule.

Mr. HOAR. It is a modification of the general legislation in the House bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Is this as a matter of fact general legislation? That is the crucial test.

Mr. HOAR. No.

Mr. HARRIS. If it is not, then it is not prohibited by the twenty-ninth rule of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Is it general legislation? It proposes to take the general legislation proposed in a different way. It is not an original proposition of general legislation.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, for one I desire to avoid just the difficulty that has been pointed out by the Senator from Delaware, and that is putting this bill, without the consideration of the Senate upon its provisions, into a conference. I think that would be a calamitous thing. I think that nobody would desire to take that responsibility upon such important questions without the instruction of the Senate.

Now, whatever may be the technical rule about new legislation or the change of law as applied by the Chair, I believe it to be unfortunate as applied to this bill. My intention, so far as I was in control in running the bill, was to go through with the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations, and if they were rejected or adopted, when we got through with them, then if such an amendment as that suggested by the Senator from California was offered, not to make the technical objection that it was a change of existing law, but to have the vote and judgment of the Senate upon it, so that we might see what this body wants to do fairly. But when this amendment in line 79 came up, the Senator from California, as he asserts, did make the point of order against it that it was new legislation; and that obliged me when he put in his amendment to make the point of order against that, for I could not of course consent that a point of order should be made with the risk of striking out the committee amendments and not make the same point of order against other amendments that were brought in. But what I hoped was—

Mr. MILLER, of California. I did not press that point of order, though I made it. It was passed over and was not decided by the Chair. When I offered my amendment, the Senator particularly made the point of order.

Mr. HALE. Because the Senator himself had made the point of order before, notwithstanding the explanation that this amendment came from the Department itself. He did not press it, but he had the same privilege, and the presumption would be that on any other amendment he would raise the point of order against the committee amendments, so that I am obliged to make points of order upon everything that is brought in from outside.

Now I think it would be very much better if we could go through with the bill as appropriations bills commonly are gone through, considering the committee amendments and passing upon them, vote them in or out or modify them, and then when we get through proceed to consider other amendments for striking out a portion of the bill or the entire bill, or whatever may be the amendments that have any foundation in law, so that we get the judgment of the Senate on this bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, every argument that has been employed shows that the ruling of the Chair was right. No Senator has ventured to suggest that the interpretation given by the Chair to the rule was wrong; but it has been urged that the decision was inconvenient, that it was calamitous, that, as one Senator said, it would put the Senate in a bag, and that in various ways great difficulty and confusion might result; but no Senator has ventured to say that the interpretation of the rule was not only technically but absolutely correct.

Now the only answer to all that is, if the rule is wrong, if the reason of the rule has passed away, then change the rule, but do not be guilty of the absurdity of saying that the ruling of the Chair was wrong because an inconvenience results.

I suggest, Mr. President, as the proper method out of this difficulty, that the suggestion of the Senator from Maine be adopted, that the point of order be neither pressed against the amendments offered by the Committee on Appropriations nor presented against amendments offered by a Senator, in order that this subject, confessedly of prime importance, may be discussed upon its merits.

I suggest that the Chair ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the point of order under Rule 29 shall not be presented upon this bill.

Mr. HALE. And that we proceed to consider the committee amendments and then proceed to consider other amendments under that agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That would undoubtedly be convenient if the point of order were withdrawn.

Mr. SHERMAN. If this is to be treated as a legislative bill, it ought to be treated in the ordinary way as a legislative bill, open to amendment as we proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When the Senate adopted this rule the Senate never dreamed that a general appropriation bill would be a common, ordinary legislative bill.

Mr. ROLLINS. I desire to understand what the agreement is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from California withdraw his point of order and the Senator from Maine withdraw his, and let the bill proceed in the ordinary way? That is the best way, of course. The Chair has no doubt of the correctness of his ruling; but the best way in this matter is for both sides to waive the points of order.

Mr. ROLLINS. Is it understood that an individual Senator can submit a motion looking to the matter of the reorganization of the Navy, as this is a bill having that purpose in view, and that neither the Committee on Appropriations nor any other committee will make the point of order?

Mr. INGALLS. Not make the point of order that it is general legislation? Of course an amendment may be objectionable on other points of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point to be waived is that of general legislation.

Mr. INGALLS. My suggestion went to that point alone, that the rule prohibiting general legislation on an appropriation bill should not be enforced against amendments offered to this bill.

Mr. ROLLINS. I simply want to claim this, that the same liberty shall be extended to every other member of the Senate that there is to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. My proposition is made because I cannot fail to see that the House of Representatives has put on a great deal of legislation here, and that, in the interest of fairness, in order that proper propositions may come before the Senate we should vary the rule; and I want it varied upon all sides, not only in favor of the committee amendments, but in favor of other propositions, so that the Senate may have the advantage of all the propositions before it and may consider them. No fairer proposition, it seems to me, could have been made. I could run the bill through on the ruling of the Chair and stick to the House legislation, but that is not so good legislation as that which the Committee on Appropriations has reported; and I do not think that would be in the interest of good legislation.

I have no desire to get any unfair advantage. I have no pride in getting a special bill through. I want something done with the acquiescence of the Senate, and with the Senate behind me, and if I go into a committee of conference, I do not want to go into a conference without any action of the Senate on these matters that have been in controversy, thus leaving me blind without any instruction or without any support. I want the action and the deliberate action of the Senate on all these propositions. My suggestion is that we take this bill, take the committee amendments and consider them as we do on all appropriation bills, consider amendments germane to them, and then when we get through, if there are any independent propositions that are proper on this bill do not make the point where there is general legislation on them, but let the Senate consider them. If anybody can make a fairer proposition than that, I shall wait and be glad to accept it.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, it is obvious that there is a want of comity between the rules of the Senate and the rules of the House in regard to appropriation bills, and the Senate is obliged on this bill to consider general legislation that would be obviously out of order had it originated in the Senate.

I have no objection to passing by sub silentio our own rules so far as the forms of business sent us by the House may make it necessary; that is to say, I have no objection to every proposition of general legislation by the House in this bill being treated as bills of ordinary legislation are and be amended accordingly and no rule be cited against an amendment; but I should object and shall raise the question where there is general legislation originating in the Senate offered upon this bill. I say that where there is general legislation originating in the Senate on this bill, not by way of amendment to House propositions, not by way of perfecting the text of general legislation that came in this bill from the House, but original general legislation not suggested by the House, which did not come here from the House, I do not think we have any right to pass by our own rules on that subject; and I hope therefore that they will not be ignored but that the point of order will be raised against general legislation originating in the Senate upon an appropriation bill.

Now, Mr. President, one word more. Some time ago the claim was made—no matter by whom made—that the House had the right, in voting supplies to carry on the Government, to put conditions upon appropriation bills, to send them here with features of general legislation, and say, "Unless you shall agree to this the appropriation shall not become a law." To that proposition at all times I stood in the most unquestioned opposition. I never agreed to it publicly or privately. On the contrary, I denounced the proposition publicly and privately, because the doctrine would simply lead to this, that you would resolve all the powers of the Government into the hands of the House of Representatives. If they can grant supplies on condition, if they can make appropriations only upon condition, then the whole Government lies at their feet, the judicial branch will depend upon their pleasure, upon the terms that they can furnish the salaries. So of the Executive, so of the Army, so of the Navy, so of the postal service, and so of every branch of the Government. To that I never did consent, and I never will until my mind shall be radically changed upon that subject. It is a consent which would place the operations of the whole Government in all its branches subject to any accidental majority of the House of Representatives. I never shall concur in such an idea.

Therefore it is that when they do send an appropriation bill coupled with general legislation I will not believe that they say, "You are bound to accept our terms or go without an appropriation; your naval officers shall starve and your ships shall lie and rot if you do not agree with us in our theory of organizing the Navy." I do not believe the House of Representatives mean that. I do not believe for one instant they can stand upon such an issue. I will not presume that they have assumed such a position as that. I think the difficulty in the present case, if difficulty there be, has arisen out of the want of conformity between the rules of the House, which permit a form of legislation upon a general appropriation bill which is forbidden by the rules of the Senate.

I have no objection in this case to pass upon these propositions of the House. I am not quick to make issues with the different branches of this Government. I do not think that is the spirit in which this Government should be carried on, looking out for occasions to make differences and embracing every opportunity of making opposition. I do not believe in it. I am therefore willing in the present case to treat the features of general legislation as open to amendment in the ordinary way as they come to us from the House, having originated there. I have no objection to trying that on this bill; but I do object to ignoring the plain, manifest rules of the Senate which forbid amendments originating general legislation to be ingrafted on an appropriation bill. Therefore as they occur I shall raise the question of order; but where the simple question is of perfecting the general legislation that comes from the House I do not care; we might as well pass upon it.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the present question of order be withdrawn, and that by unanimous consent all amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations and offered by other Senators, germane and pertinent to the legislation contained in this bill as it came from the House, shall be acted upon by the Senate independent of the question of order. That is a means of bridging over this difficulty.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to say a word or two as concisely as possible. General legislation on appropriation bills is unwise. That is the judgment of the Senate, and it has put it into the form of a rule. That is in general the judgment of the House, but it has made an exception upon appropriation bills for certain purposes. Now, when general legislation upon an appropriation bill comes from the House here it compels the annulment of our rule that we will not have general legislation on appropriation bills; otherwise we are deprived of a constitutional right. By the Constitution and the spirit of the Government both Houses are made entirely equal in the consideration of all bills and amendments with one exception. Revenue bills shall originate in the House, but lest the Senate should be hampered, the Constitution says the Senate may propose amendments to those. This rule of ours under this construction—and I cannot see but that the Chair is right in giving it this construction—is, in my judgment, unconstitutional, for I hold that we cannot by one of our rules deprive ourselves of the right to a full and equal consideration of every item of any bill.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, the decision of the Chair, in my opinion, is clearly right. I hold that the amendment proposed in this case is general legislation, and the consequences which have been depicted here all result from a violation of the organic law of this body, because it never was contemplated that the Senate should be called upon to amend a bill of this kind that had in it legislation of this description, and there was no logical course open to the Senate but to do what was attempted to be done last evening, to strike it all out, because that legislation which cannot be amended under the rules of the Senate the Senate ought not to be called upon to consider at all. How can you consider this general legislation on this bill when you cannot amend it as proposed by the Committee on Naval Affairs or by the members of it? Then there is no logical result but one that can follow from that, and it is that that legislation ought to go off entirely, and it is not proper that the Senate should pass upon it and refer it to a conference committee of the two Houses and let them make up the bill without regard to the sense of this body; that would be worse still. Of course unanimous consent can do anything in this body, but this only shows that the consequences which follow are a disregard of our own rules in the conduct of the public business.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I do not pretend to know much about rules, but the Senator from Florida seems to think that if we had referred the bill back to the committee yesterday with an order to strike out all the legislation in it we should have been at the end of our trouble, whereas it is perfectly apparent that after we had stricken it all out and brought it back here the question would have been upon each amendment offered by the committee not agreeing with what had been done in striking out the action of the House, and the action of the House could have been restored by the vote of the Senate just as absolutely after we had stricken it out as it can be now by a vote of the Senate here. And after it was stricken out by a vote of the Senate, if it was so stricken out, it would go back to the House, and the House might say "it shall not be stricken out." What is left then to a committee of conference? When that committee of conference meets, the conferees of the Senate may agree with the House with an amendment to insert what the House had originally inserted in the bill together with the amendments that the Senate Committee on Appropriations offered to insert. That would be legitimate and would bring all these matters before the Senate, and they could not be touched by a point of order.

There is where the difficulty comes in, and the trouble that we are in is not because of any violation of the rules of the Senate, as the Senator from Florida suggests; the trouble is that we are denying to the House of Representatives the right to insert this character of legislation in an appropriation bill. Our rules forbid us to bring general legislation in upon an appropriation bill, but we do not know and we have no right to assume that the rules of the House of Representatives prohibit them from imposing general legislation on an appropriation bill. They have done it. The presumption is that they had a right to do it. Whether they had the right or not, we have no business to question what they have done in that regard. That is well settled, and finding it here we have to deal with the thing legitimately in the bill and we ought to have the right to amend it because we have the right, as the Senator from Connecticut well said, to consider all these questions on equal terms with the House. If we do not, then we transfer all our powers to a committee of conference that nobody denies has the right to amend the amendments of the Senate as it may see fit and no point of order can touch it.

I do not pretend to say that technically the interpretation of the rule is not correct as given by the President of the Senate, but I do say that that rule, in my judgment, has no application to legislation that comes to us on any bill from the House of Representatives. It only prevents us from originating legislation here; it does not prevent us from considering and amending legislation that they see fit to send to us, because these are things over which we have no control. We cannot revise their rules; we cannot find fault with what they have done. We have got to consider what they send to us. And I for one do not believe our rules can tie us down, or that the decision of the Chair is right in saying that we shall be tied down; and if an appeal is taken, I for one shall vote that that decision is wrong, and that the rule does not apply to legislation that comes to us from the House of Representatives. It only limits us here from putting new legislation upon appropriation bills, and does not prevent us from considering what is rightfully, so far as we are concerned, in the bill, perfecting it, and treating it as we may think best. If the decision of the Chair is right, it turns over to three conferees on the part of the Senate when they meet with three conferees of the House, a power which the Senate itself does not have, and I deny that any rule can have such a construction.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The Senator says that the reason of our rule with respect to amendments on appropriation bills does not apply to this case. I ask him why? I ask him as a thoughtful statesman what is the reason of this rule? Where the reason of the rule applies the rule itself will apply, but where the reason is not applicable of course the rule passes away.

Now, I say that every reason which lies at the foundation of the rule in its application to amendments originating in the Senate and put upon a bill that has nothing of this kind of legislation on it is just as applicable here as it is in the other case; and why? What was this rule intended to guard against? It was intended to guard against ingrafting on appropriation bills legislation that could not go through without being put there. That was the purpose of it. It was the intention of that rule to cut off all legislation from this description of bills that was not meritorious enough, well-considered enough to stand upon its merits and receive the sanction of both Houses upon those merits. When you propose either in the Committee on Appropriations or in the Senate to bring forth new legislation and put it upon an appropriation bill, even though it may amend a provision of the House which is general legislation, it comes within the objection of this rule and the spirit of it.

Mr. BECK. This legislation is in the bill now, is it not?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It is in.

Mr. BECK. Is it not rightfully in so far as the Senate is concerned?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I think not.

Mr. BECK. Then if you strike it out can it not be restored by the House and put in by our conferees if we agree with them?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I would never consent to put it in.

Mr. BLAIR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I should like to ask if the conference report contains general legislation if that is not equally open to the point of order that may be raised under the twenty-ninth rule? How can it be that the conference report can come in here with what is in its nature an amendment to the bill and is general legislation and it not be subject to the same point of order? I should like some one who understands the law of the Senate to answer that question.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from California to withdraw his point of order, and the Senator from Maine to withdraw his point of order, and the Senator from Kansas to ask unanimous consent that upon this bill amendments should be offered with reference to legislative topics. Now, can the Chair put that question?

Mr. ANTHONY. I agree with what the Senator from Delaware has said. While I am willing to waive objections to amendments presented by the committee or by Senators in modification of the legislation presented by the House, I am not willing to waive the point of order upon legislation that comes to us originally from the committee of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I perfectly agree with the Senator. I do not think the Committee on Appropriations ought to have any more power to originate legislation than any other committee of this body. I never have so considered and the committee do not so consider.

Mr. ANTHONY. They have sent it here.

Mr. HARRIS. I asked unanimous consent of the Senate some time since that all points of order be withdrawn; that all amendments reported by the committee which were germane and pertinent to the legislation that the bill contains as it came from the House, and all amendments offered by other Senators which were germane and pertinent to the legislation contained in the bill, should be acted upon by the Senate independent of questions of order; and let the question of order be made upon all other amendments proposing general legislation.

Mr. ANTHONY. That will do.

Mr. ALLISON. That is substantially the proposition.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I shall refuse my consent to any arrangement which is predicated upon the correctness of the interpretation of the rule which seems to meet the assent of a majority of the members of the Senate who have spoken. If this rule means that, it ought to be abolished or changed. There has been a reductio ad absurdum by this interpretation in the statements of the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Tennessee. If the rule means what has been supposed, then it denies to the Senate powers which it puts into the hands of its conference committee, and nowhere else. The Senator from Tennessee concedes that this construction leads the Senate to this absurdity, that if the House attach to an appropriation bill general legislation providing for a punishment of some offense with reference to the Navy imprisonment for ten years, you cannot move an amendment here reducing that term of imprisonment to nine years. That absurd result fortifies the belief in my mind that the rule means no such thing.

The "proposing general legislation" meant by this rule is the bringing that particular general legislation before the Senate. An amendment placing before the Senate a new general law is not in order here; but when the House sends up that new general law, to move to amend its detail, to perfect it, to change it, to alter it by other subordinate provisions accomplishing the same result, is not "proposing general legislation" within the meaning of the rule. It is merely proposing to modify by amendment. The amendment is not proposed by the Senate until it is adopted and becomes a part of the original bill, and accordingly it is merely modifying what is already proposed and has got before the Senate. In other words, our rule is intended to prohibit the bringing before the Senate or originating by amendment, and not the perfecting what has already had its origin elsewhere in order and has already been brought before the Senate.

Now, therefore, if I am right in my view, this whole difficulty is solved. If I am wrong in my view, as a majority of the gentlemen who have spoken seem to think, then it is time the Senate extricated itself from this dilemma by a change of its rule, not by a unanimous consent which permits the evil to continue.

Mr. HARRIS. Has there been an appeal from the decision of the Chair?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. The points of order have been withdrawn, and therefore there is no question pending upon which the Chair can decide.

Mr. HARRIS. Then the amendment of the committee is before the Senate for action.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I am in error, and let this debate go on without end.

Mr. HARRIS. No debate is in order without an appeal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The debate cannot go further if there is no appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CALL. There was a point of order made, and the Chair announced its decision. Can there be no appeal?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There can be an appeal.

Mr. CALL. I enter an appeal, if I have a right to do so, and I wish to submit a few observations upon this point.

I concur with the decision rendered by the Chair, but I think this is too important a subject to be passed over without full consideration. In my judgment, it involves an entire surrender of the constitutional rights and privileges of the Senate. The Constitution manifestly provides that the House, if it sees fit, shall put upon an appropriation bill general legislation; but it also provides that the Senate shall in the exercise of its duty, if it sees fit, prohibit general legislation upon any appropriation bill.

Now, the Senate has declared, as has been asserted by my colleague, in plain and imperative terms that no general legislation shall be placed upon any appropriation bill; yet the Senator from Kentucky and other Senators rise here and say that cannot mean an appropriation bill that comes from the House. Where else can an appropriation bill come from but from the House? And, as my colleague has stated, the reason of the rule applies fully and entirely to it.

What are the consequences of the other interpretation? Senators gravely say here that if the House sees fit to put upon an appropriation bill general legislation, it destroys the authority and the power of this body to adopt its own rules of proceeding, and say there shall not be, in the interest of the public, general legislation upon appropriation bills. But not only that, the House has authority to say that there shall be general legislation upon an appropriation bill, and all the rules of the Senate that require a reference of particular subjects to particular committees are by that action of the House set aside, and when the bill comes here the Appropriations Committee, a small portion of the Senate, refuse consideration to any of the committees appointed under the rules of the Senate, and by that action of the House the entire consideration of that subject is vested in that committee.

Why, Mr. President, in my judgment it violates the constitutional rights and duties of the Senate and of every Senator here. Why should there not be a rule prohibiting general legislation upon the appropriation bills from the House, as well as amendments that originate in the Senate? There can be no appropriation bills, as the rule says, except those that come from the House. It was not because they came or did not come from the House that the rule was adopted, but because the principle of committing subjects which required the examination of other and special committees was declared by the Senate to be essential to the due and orderly and wise course of legislation.

The idea that a conference committee has power not derived from the Senate or from the House and superior to the rules and the exercise of organic power by either the House or the Senate has no foundation in reason. Where does it get its authority? Certainly unless there is some constitutional provision that the conferees of the two bodies are an independent organic body, not controlled and governed by the voice of the Senate, they can have no such power.

But, Mr. President, this only serves to illustrate the impropriety of this action. It overthrows all the rules of proceeding, both those that require the careful deliberation of special committees upon special subjects and those that assert the great cardinal principle that bills for raising specific sums of money for specific and ascertained purposes committed to particular Senators for that specific inquiry alone shall not be accompanied by provisions which revolutionize the whole legislative and executive system of the Government.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I move to lay the appeal from the decision of the Chair upon the table. Let us end this matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves to lay the appeal from the decision of the Chair on the table.

Mr. CALL. I withdraw the appeal; I only wanted to say a few words.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I appeal from the decision of the Chair, and I move to lay the appeal on the table, so as to dispose of this question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon laying on the table the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The Senate refused to lay the appeal on the table, there being on a division—ayes 18, noes 21.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, my views on questions of this kind are such perhaps as entitle me to be classified as an "old fogy," but I hold that when we have rules under which we propose to act in the Senate we ought to adhere to them or else abrogate them. I object to having a rule and pretending acting under it in the Senate, and setting it aside in a particular case by unanimous consent. It is not a parliamentary method of procedure, and the country has no security when the Senate of the United States finds itself in a condition when it must abrogate its own rules by unanimous consent in order to proceed with the public business.

If the first clause of the twenty-ninth rule is so much in the way of the progress of this bill as it came to us from the House of Representatives that we cannot get along with the bill except by unanimous consent dispensing with the application of that rule to this measure, then one of two things is certain, that the bill ought to go down in its present form or the rule ought to go down, for I have never before seen the Senate in a condition where an appeal was made to it by any Senator that by unanimous consent one of its rules should be removed as an obstruction to the progress of business on a certain bill; and I am afraid of any such precedent as that. I would rather not participate in it; I would rather withhold consent in order that the Senate may find some safer method of extricating itself from the present embarrassment.

It is admitted on all hands that the embarrassment under which the Senate is laboring cannot be attributed as a fault to this body or to any of its committees. If there be any fault in the attitude of this question before the Senate and before the country to-day, it is from the fact that the House of Representatives has assumed to violate what may be termed an admitted principle of parliamentary law in this country that the appropriation bills shall not be used as a vehicle by which general legislation can be imposed upon the country, that the appropriation bills shall not be so handled in their passage through the Senate, to say the least of it, as that persons interested in certain legislation which otherwise might not meet the approval of the country can ingraft that legislation upon these indispensable measures and force its acceptance against the will of the Houses.

Our rule has a peculiar reading, Mr. President, one that I think the Senate ought to pay some attention to. Our rule is that—

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

Was it the purpose of the Senate in the adoption of this rule to confine the objection to which it applies to amendments to the bill? I insist that it was not. It was the purpose of the Senate to confine its rule to amendments originating in the Senate to appropriation bills originating in the Senate. At the time of the adoption of this rule it was not conceded, and so far as I am concerned it has never been conceded and will never be, that the Senate has no right to originate an appropriation bill. That is a species of parliamentary concession that has been made sub silentio or tacitly for years and years together. So it appears at least for six or seven years almost without objection; but there is no warrant for it in the Constitution. The Senate has as much right to originate an appropriation bill as the House has, and no man can point out in the Constitution of the United States any clause of it that by the most strained and forced construction can be held to cut off the Senate from the power to originate general appropriation bills appropriating money. The only clause that applies to that subject at all is this:

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills.

Bills relating to the raising of revenue, and not to the expenditure of money; and that is the only section I have ever heard quoted in this body or elsewhere as justifying the proposition that the Senate has no right to originate an appropriation bill.

Now, sir, the twenty-ninth rule was adopted upon the express idea that the Senate has a right to originate an appropriation bill, for the Senate up to that time had never conceded that we had no such right. Hence the language of the rule is perfectly appropriate that in the Senate or in any committee of the Senate an appropriation bill originating here shall not be amended by ingrafting upon it general legislation. That is the reason why the word "amendment" was used instead of the other phrase, which ought to have been used, that the Senate shall not receive or consider any general appropriation bill coming from the House which contains any matter of general legislation. When it is remembered that this rule was framed upon the hypothesis and the assumption and the claim and the demand by the Senate that it had the right to originate appropriation bills, and when it is construed in connection with that fact, the language of the rule is perfectly simple and plain.

Then what shall we do in a case of this kind when the House sends to us a general appropriation bill which, according to their rules or contrary to their rules, (for it is none of our business, it appears,) may contain legislation? Our proper plan is to substitute for that bill a bill originating in the Senate that contains no general legislation, and send them an appropriation bill according to our rules, and which we are permitted by our sense of respect for the Constitution of the country to put in reach of the House. If this bill had been moved here as a Senate bill and substituted for the House bill sent to us appropriating money for the support of the Navy, then the question of originating an amendment in the Senate or in any of its committees would of course have stricken out every proposition that is said to contain general legislation. It is impossible for us to concede without doing away with the influence and the dignity of this body that the House of Representatives may send us a bill for general appropriations, may assume the exclusive jurisdiction of originating that bill, may have upon it general legislation of a character entirely foreign to the general purpose of the bill itself, and that we are bound to take that, all that the House sends to us as being in order under the rules of the Senate.

It is useless for us to have any rules at all, in fact it is useless for us to parade ourselves before the world as an independent legislative body, if having rules the House at its own option and on its own motion can send to us bills which we are obliged to consider as the House sends them here, no matter what our rules are about them. That is an attitude which I do not wish to assume.

I am very liberal in one respect about appropriation bills. I believe that everything is germane to an appropriation bill concerning the Army and the Navy which determines the manner of the future expenditure of money. I think it is a necessary power to be reserved in the hands of both these legislative tribunals to control the Army and Navy upon appropriation bills as to regulate in future their numbers, their grade, their rank, their pay, their distribution, their armament, their expenditures of every kind, and even the places in which they shall be required to serve.

I am liberal upon that proposition because I think that the appropriations for the Army and the Navy stand upon ground peculiar to themselves, and that whatever disposition we see proper to make of the Army or the Navy in respect to its organization, its increase or its reduction, its pay or its employment in one place or in another, or in one service or another, is a matter entirely germane to the subject, and is not, therefore, general legislation in the sense that is denounced under the twenty-ninth rule.

That is my view of it, and it was upon that ground mainly that I voted against the reference back of this bill to the committee, believing that they had the right to sweep over this field that they have occupied.

I had no doubt of it upon the ground that here is a peculiar duty resting upon Congress whenever an appropriation bill comes in here that affects the Army or the Navy, that does not apply to a sundry civil bill, or a legislative, executive, and judicial bill, or any other of the great appropriation bills that we are required to consider in the conduct of this Government. That is the reason I voted with the committee yesterday that they had a perfect right to put these amendments on if they chose to do so. Now I believe that the House has a right to put these amendments on if it chooses, because this relates to the Navy. Therefore I am convinced that these amendments ought to be allowed to come in from the hand of any Senator or of any committee of this body, because they are germane unless they are ruled out upon the ground that they increase expenditure, and that is really the only objection that can be made to them, that they increase expenditures.

But I am opposed to setting aside our rule. I do not see any occasion for it. I believe that the Senate at this moment has the full jurisdiction of every provision in this bill that has been sent here by the House, and has been reported back by our committee, and that it is entirely relevant and entirely germane and proper for any Senator to offer any amendment to this bill that he thinks will improve it.

Not seeing the necessity for setting aside our rules at all, not concurring with the Chair in its ruling that the amendment is out of order; although I take a different ground from that which the Chair took on the subject, I shall be compelled to vote against sustaining the ruling of the Chair upon this appeal, and I cannot give my consent to an abrogation of this rule. I very much prefer, if consent is asked, that a motion to set aside the rule shall be made and lay over until to-morrow morning until it can be considered in due order under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I am compelled to differ with the Chair in its construction of this rule. The rule says:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill; nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received.

What does that mean? That means that any amendment which is germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill shall be received. If the bill is simply a naked appropriation, then any legislation is not relevant or germane to it, and therefore it is excluded under the first clause because it is general legislation to the appropriation bill proposed by the amendment in the Senate.

The next clause is:

Nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not relate thereto.

That clause means that any amendment to any item or clause which does relate directly thereto shall be received. If there be in an appropriation bill coming from the House clauses of legislation, then any amendment which is pertinent or relevant to that legislation is in order. If the bill be a naked appropriation you cannot attach to any item in that bill any amendment which proposes legislation; but if the bill itself contains general legislation, then any amendment which is germane or relevant to that subject-matter is in order, and any amendment to any item or clause of that legislation which relates to it, amends it, or modifies it, is in order.

Mr. VANCE. Then the amendment of the Senator from California is in order in the opinion of the Senator?

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it is, unquestionably. I do not think there is any doubt of the power of the Senate, the right of the Senate, under the literal and proper construction of this rule, to take any House appropriation bill which has general legislation upon it and amend, change, or alter that legislation in any way that is germane or pertinent; but you cannot go to that appropriation bill, to an item making an appropriation and propose and offer to that general legislation which is not pertinent. I have no doubt that the amendments of the committee are in perfect order under that rule, and the amendment of the Senator from California is in order; and we are powerless if the construction I have given is not correct. The House sends us legislation. We can only act upon it. If we reject it that does not end it; we cannot amend it; we cannot modify it, and I say when the reason of a rule ceases the rule itself ceases. But the reason has not ceased here. The reason is proper and just. It is proper and just under that rule that any amendment proposing general legislation to any clause or item of the bill which is not itself legislation shall not be in order, but any amendment which proposes to alter, amend, change, or modify any legislation contained in the bill is perfectly in order, and therefore I shall vote to overrule the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I confess that I am somewhat surprised at the line of argument of my friend from Missouri who is almost invariably so correct in his judgment and so logical in his conclusions. Now let us see what Rule 29 is and what it means:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

The first question to be asked when an amendment is offered to a general appropriation bill is, does it propose general legislation, and, if so, in the plainest language this rule says it shall not be received. It may not contain general legislation; but the rule proceeds:

Nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received.

However clear the amendment may be of general legislation, if it be not germane or relevant it cannot be received under the plain meaning and literal reading of this rule. If either of these objections—it does not require that both shall exist—exists or is found to the amendment, it is condemned by Rule 29 and cannot be received in the Senate. If it contain general legislation, you need inquire no further; I care not how germane or relevant it may be to the general provisions in the bill it is rejected because it proposes general legislation upon a general appropriation bill. If it have no general legislation in it, but be not germane or relevant to the subject-matter of the bill, it falls under that objection and is rejected. If either fact exist, the amendment under Rule 29 cannot be received by the Senate or considered by the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. How could any amendment to a general appropriation bill, unless it were legislation, be irrelevant or not germane? Here is a naked item of appropriation. This rule says:

Nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received.

How could you have any amendment not germane or relevant to that unless it were legislation?

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

That means to an appropriation bill proper. This is an appropriation bill and something more. This is more than an appropriation bill; it is a bill of legislation; and the legislative part of this bill is as much under the control of the Senate as any other bill that proposes legislation, regardless of the fact that it is also a general appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. VANCE. Let us have the yeas and nays on that. It is an important decision.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Chair state the question once more. Upon which point of order is it that we are to vote?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order made by the Senator from California on the committee's amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Was there objection to the suggestion made by the Senator from Kansas some time ago that by common consent no objection should be raised under the rule?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Massachusetts to object.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will withdraw that objection and let us proceed with the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I cannot consent to have one rule applicable to this bill and a different rule applicable to all other appropriation bills that come up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the appeal.

Mr. HOAR. If nobody else presses the objection I certainly will not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama has pressed it.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator from Alabama object to the arrangement that was proposed by which we can go on?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama object to withdrawing the points of order and to an agreement that no points of order shall be raised in relation to this bill?

Mr. HARRIS. Points of order in respect to the legislation that the bill contains, points of order on amendments that are pertinent and germane to the legislation that the bill already contains.

Mr. MORGAN. That is, I am asked to consent that we shall have no rule governing the passage of this bill. I cannot do so. I cannot consent to that.

Mr. VOORHEES. It seems to me we had better have a settlement of this question. Let us come to a vote, and that will end it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. VANCE. I want to vote intelligently upon this question. I understood that the amendment of the Senator from California was ruled out of order by the Chair and that the time for taking an appeal passed without an appeal from the decision of the Chair being taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California insisted that he had made the first point of order upon the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VANCE. Now, do we vote on the point of order on his amendment or on the committee amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order was taken to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations from line 79 to 89. The ruling of the Chair upon that point of order was that it was general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. VANCE. Now I understand it.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 26, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—26.

| | | | |
|-----------------|-------------------|----------|-----------|
| Blair. | Hampton. | Lapham. | Vest. |

So the appeal was laid on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In line 78, the question is, Will the Senate agree to strike out the words "fifty surgeons and ninety assistant and passed assistant surgeons?"

Mr. HALE. As the amendment of the committee has been ruled out of order I hope the House words will not be struck out. We must leave something in, of course.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROWN. Before we proceed, I desire information on one point. I think the Chair ruled out of order the amendment of the committee from line 79 down to line 87.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He did. The words in italics were ruled out.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to get a little information. What course has been adopted on this bill? Is it proposed to go through with the bill and act upon the committee amendments first before any amendment is suggested on the floor of the Senate?

Mr. HALE. That order was adopted the other day when the bill was first called up.

Mr. BUTLER. I have several amendments that I desire to offer.

Mr. HALE. I wish to say here, notwithstanding the ruling of the Chair, that, so far as I am concerned, I do not propose to insist upon technical points. Realizing that the bill contains legislation, and that any matter that is pertinent to the Navy and to its organization and service ought to be considered, when we get through with the amendments of the committee, and any proposition is made, I shall not insist on enforcing the ruling of the Chair. I shall be glad if, in the same spirit, all Senators will withhold objections to the committee amendments. As we go along, one by one let us consider them, discuss them, and modify them, if we will, or strike them out. I shall be very glad if, in the same spirit that I announce my course of action, Senators on the other side shall fail to make points of order, and in that way we shall have everything considered.

Mr. ROLLINS. We might reach an amicable arrangement on that point if the Senators on the floor were allowed to offer their amendments to the bill as we progress. Then we can see how far liberty is extended to members of the Senate. I want to secure for each member of the Senate and for each committee of the Senate the same rights and privileges which are extended to the Committee on Appropriations, and that is all. If that can be extended to us I am satisfied.

Mr. HALE. But let me ask the Senator—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Chair make a suggestion. If the arrangement suggested is not carried out in good faith, the Senator from New Hampshire can in the Senate assert any right that he has.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly. What fairer proposition could be made than mine, that we proceed in accordance with the order adopted the other day to take up the committee amendments? When we come to those amendments, any amendments that are offered to those amendments I shall not object to even if they do involve new legislation, provided they are pertinent, and then when we get through any general proposition that any Senator has to strike out half a dozen pages in the bill, like that of the Senator from California, I shall not object to, and we shall have a vote upon that.

Mr. BUTLER. That is exactly the point on which I wanted to get information. I propose to strike out all that portion of the bill which is general legislation.

Mr. HALE. I shall make no point of order on that. I do not care what points of order there are of any kind as to being germane or as to being new legislation or as to changing law, I will not make any point of order. I do not want the bill run in that way.

Mr. BUTLER. With that understanding I shall not now make the motion.

Mr. ALLISON. It is perfectly in order to move to strike out anything.

Mr. COCKRELL. I cannot consent to that. This amendment of the committee has already gone out on a point of order, and unless that is restored and we act upon it I shall object.

Mr. HALE. Let me appeal to my colleague on the committee not to be too tenacious about that. The amendment just passed over was only a little varied from the House provision; it is not an essential thing, and the mere point that that must go back I do not consider essential; but let us go on and consider the bill and the important amendments on it and get the vote of the Senate and the opinion of the Senate. I hope my friend from Missouri will not insist upon obstructing this arrangement.

Mr. BUTLER. Then after the context is perfected we can go back and strike out.

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It is very evident that there is quite a division in the Senate in reference to the propriety of a reorganization of the Navy at the present time. Would it not be better by some motion to test the sense of the Senate on that question? Would it not relieve perhaps a great deal of embarrassment in the further consideration of the bill?

Mr. HALE. We get at that in a better way after we see what the Senate does adopt as it goes along. Nobody can tell. It may be that in detail the Senate may strike out a portion of the amendment and leave it in such a condition that Senators then will be willing to take it. Some of the Senators announced yesterday that they were in favor of a portion of these amendments and against others. When we get through, whatever the Senate has left of reorganization, whatever is embodied of reorganization then, I do not want to see anybody make a point of order against a proposition to strike it out and take the sense of the Senate as to whether we shall have anything of that kind in the bill or not.

Mr. SAULSBURY. But after we have adopted the amendments proposed by the Committee on Appropriations will it then be in order to strike out all provisions relating to the reorganization of the Navy?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly an amendment will then be in order grouping together a half dozen different amendments and striking them all out, because that is a distinctive proposition of itself and comes in fittingly when we have got to the end of the bill. I have no doubt that that is in order, because that is a distinctive proposition.

Mr. HARRIS. It will be in order in the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. I see on page 6—I merely intend to refer to that with a view of preventing any misunderstanding in the future—beginning on line 130, a provision relating to the retirement of the Admiral of the Navy. If that is permitted to pass without a point of order would it then be too late to make the point of order?

Mr. HALE. I do not understand if we go on that anybody is bound except by this general understanding. The Chief Clerk will read the bill, and we shall go as far as we can and as fast as we can until we meet a point of order. Whenever an occasion is reached where any Senator feels that he must make a point of order because it is some subject-matter that is more clearly subject to a point of order than these other things, then of course he can make it; but let us go on with the amendments and get along as far as we can.

Mr. BUTLER. That is all right.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not desire to be misunderstood as withdrawing anything I said. If we cannot have economy and retrenchment in this bill, let us have nothing.

Mr. HALE. I think we shall have what the Senator desires.

Mr. COCKRELL. Here is a proposition that one hundred and seventy surgeons are to be reduced down to one hundred and forty.

Mr. HALE. No; it is only one hundred and eighty reduced to one hundred and seventy, let me say.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that reduction. If we cannot act upon that matter as upon other amendments, (I am not specially in favor of it; I think all ought to be attended to,) we had as well not consider anything.

Mr. HALE. Let it be understood that we may come back to that when we get the bill into the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the point of order is to be made on that proposition I intend to make points of order in other cases.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will not obstruct the passage of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not fair and right that one Senator shall have the privilege of making a point of order and others not have it. The point of order has been made and sustained, and if that is to be made and sustained I intend to exercise the same inalienable right.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Since that time there has been an agreement.

Mr. COCKRELL. No; there has been no agreement to withdraw this point of order. If the point of order is withdrawn it is all right.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I suggest to the Committee on Appropriations to discuss these questions when they arise and not anticipate them. Perhaps they will not arise at all in the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Chair if the point of order which the Chair has intimated would be sustained to any amendment of the committee or any other amendment proposing new legislation is in order when the Committee of the Whole reports the bill to the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the Senator. Did the Senator make an inquiry?

Mr. HOAR. My inquiry of the Chair was whether when the proposed amendments made as in Committee of the Whole are reported to the Senate, the point of order as to new legislation is then open in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not if an amendment is ruled out.

Mr. HOAR. Not when it is ruled out, but suppose the Senate adopt the amendment, waiving the point of order in Committee of the Whole, and the Committee of the Whole reports the amendment to the Senate, is the point then open?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator inquire if the amendment is open then to a point of order?

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks not. The Chair thinks that if the Senate chooses to let a provision pass as in Committee of the Whole, it is not open to a point of order then, and in the opinion of the Chair he could not entertain it in the Senate.

Mr. HALE. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 90, before the word "paymasters," to strike out "thirty" and insert "forty;" after "paymasters," to strike out "and thirty-five assistant and" and insert "twenty;" and in line 91, after the word "paymasters," to insert "and ten assistant paymasters;" so as to make the clause read:

That the active list of the pay corps of the Navy shall hereafter consist of thirteen pay directors, thirteen pay inspectors, forty paymasters, twenty passed assistant paymasters, and ten assistant paymasters.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 97, after the word "lieutenant," to strike out "and one hundred assistant and" and insert "sixty;" and after the word "engineers," in line 98, to insert "and forty assistant engineers;" so as to make the clause read:

That the active list of the engineer corps of the Navy shall hereafter consist of ten chief engineers with the relative rank of captain, fifteen chief engineers with the relative rank of commander, forty-five chief engineers with the relative rank of lieutenant-commander or lieutenant, sixty passed assistant engineers and forty assistant engineers, with the relative rank for each as now fixed by law; and after the number of officers in the said grades shall be reduced as above provided, the number in each grade shall not exceed the reduced number which is fixed by the provisions of this act for the several grades.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 130.

Mr. BROWN. I see in line 117, which we have just passed over, we have forty-two rear-admirals, twenty commodores, twelve captains, &c., on the retired list. I desire to ask what is the pay of a rear-admiral on the retired list?

Mr. ANTHONY. Forty-five hundred dollars.

Mr. HALE. I will give the Senator the official figures here.

Mr. ROLLINS. It is $4,500.

Mr. BROWN. The attention of the country ought to be called to this subject.

Mr. HALE. The sea-pay of the Admiral is $13,000; on shore duty, $13,000; leave and waiting orders pay, $13,000. The pay of the Vice-Admiral at sea is $9,000; on shore duty, $8,000; on leave, $6,000. The pay of a rear-admiral at sea is $6,000; on shore duty, $5,000; on leave or waiting orders, $4,000. The pay of commodores at sea is $4,500; on shore duty, $3,500; on leave or waiting orders, $2,800.

Mr. BROWN. It seems to me this is an enormous retired list, considering the size of the Navy.

Mr. LOGAN. That is what we have been trying to explain.

Mr. BROWN. I wanted to get the salaries on the record.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 130, after the word "hereafter," to insert:

The provisions of the laws retiring officers of the Navy shall apply to all officers on the active list thereof, provided that the Admiral and Vice-Admiral shall not be retired before reaching the age of sixty-four years, and that the Admiral shall retire on full pay of his grade; and section 1461 of the Revised Statutes allowing promotions of officers on the retired list, and the act entitled "An act relating to the promotion of commodores on the retired list of the Navy," approved August 15, 1876, are hereby repealed.

So as to make the provision read:

Provided, That hereafter the provisions of the laws retiring officers of the Navy shall apply to all officers on the active list thereof, provided that the Admiral and Vice-Admiral shall not be retired before reaching the age of sixty-four years, and that the Admiral shall retire on the full pay of his grade; and section 1461 of the Revised Statutes allowing promotions of officers on the retired list, and the act entitled "An act relating to the promotion of commodores on the retired list of the Navy," approved August 15, 1876, are hereby repealed.

Mr. BUTLER. I make the point of order on that amendment of the committee that it is general legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The point of order is well taken, and the Chair sustains it.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 140, before the word "all," to insert "hereafter;" so as to read:

Hereafter all promotions to the grade of rear-admiral on the active list shall be made, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 142, after the word "made," to insert "by selection;" so as to read:

Hereafter all promotions to the grade of rear-admiral on the active list shall be made by selection from the grades of commodore and captain, and no more promotions to the grade of commodore shall be made after July 1, 1883.

Mr. BAYARD. I desire to raise the point of order upon the amendment of the committee contained in line 142, the words "by selection," that it is general legislation originating in the Senate upon an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LOGAN. The point of order is not debatable, of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not unless an appeal is taken, or by unanimous consent.

Mr. LOGAN. Before the Senator makes that point of order we ought to understand it. I should like for the Senator, if he will, by common consent to state the objection to the Senate, so that we may know it is not merely a captious objection but an objection to the merits of this proposition.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator argued this question, I believe yesterday or the day before. I heard all he said in favor of the system of selection as against the system of seniority. I remember very well the argument made by the Senator from Illinois, so that my objection to it under the form of a point of order was made after deliberation.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator then desires that promotions in the Army shall be made by selection, but not in the Navy? Is that the proposition? If the proposition to-day was to provide in regard to the Army that the major-generals should be promoted by seniority instead of by selection, would the Senator be in favor of that? What I want to get at is the idea, so as to see that the principle is applicable to the same line. Of course a point of order is made and the Chair sustains it, and I do not wish to detain the Senate by discussing it, for the reason that the Chair sustains the point of order, and that is the end of it.

Mr. HALE. Let the Chief Clerk read on.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 144, after the word "made," to strike out "after July 1, 1883."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am opposed to striking that out, and prefer to retain the House proposition.

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote upon that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Those words ought to stay in the bill. I am opposed to the amendment striking them out; it is very harsh in its operation. I think time ought to be given before this harsh provision goes into operation. I greatly prefer the provision as it came from the House.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator talks about its being a harsh provision; what does he mean by a harsh provision?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It works very harshly upon some very meritorious officers.

Mr. LOGAN. I want to ask the Senator in reference to the grade of commodore; does it make any difference whether the law goes into effect now or on the 1st of July, 1883?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir; it may make a very material difference.

Mr. LOGAN. Why, I should like to know?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Upon somebody who would be a commodore by that time, and it would prevent him forever from being a commodore, because you propose to abolish that rank in the Navy, the most glorious one in it, that of commodore.

Mr. LOGAN. We will not discuss that. If we are going to abolish it I suppose your idea is to increase it before abolishing it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If you want to abolish it let it take effect, as as the House has provided, on July 1, 1883, and not strike out those words. I hope the Senate will not concur in the amendment of the committee; I hope the words will be retained.

Mr. LOGAN. We will vote on it and see.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 13, noes 18.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is rejected by the vote, but no quorum has voted.

Mr. HALE. I hope no Senator will make the point about a quorum not voting; it is not an essential thing.

Mr. ALLISON. I want to say before we pass from it, that the Senate has now decided to allow this provision not to take effect until three or four certain officers can secure promotion to the grade of commodore, and thus prolong the time when the law shall take effect. That is all there is in the provision; it is to fix a time so as to include three or four favorite officers of the Navy. That is all there is about it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know what motives the House may have had for putting in the proposition, but it strikes me that the reason why the amendment was made was to keep three or four meritorious officers out of promotion who have been recommended for promotion by the Admiral of the Navy, and who have never received the promotion to which they were entitled for gallant services during the war. I am opposed to excluding those men.

Mr. LOGAN. Let me make a statement in answer to the Senator from Kentucky. The Senator says this prevents promotion to commodore. How can you promote men to the grade of commodore when there are twenty-five commodores now, all that the law allows? How can you do it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Because commodores will be retired.

Mr. LOGAN. Retired when?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Retired by the operation of the law; that is when.

Mr. LOGAN. Will they be retired between now and the 1st of July, 1883?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I so understand.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator had better examine and see.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If they are not retired the provision does no harm.

Mr. LOGAN. The fact is that if you destroy a grade in either the Army or Navy—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Illinois to the fact that this debate is entirely out of order. The amendment is rejected unless the question of a quorum is made, and if that question is made nothing is in order but a call of the Senate or a call of the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection as to the debate being out of order, but I will say to the Chair I would take it as a great kindness if he would suggest to Senators who speak before I do that they are out of order, and not wait until I get the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was not discriminating between Senators.

Mr. LOGAN. I know the Chair was not, but after other Senators got through then it was out of order for me to proceed. I know it was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the division as reported by the Chief Clerk the yeas have it, and the amendment is rejected. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 156, after the word "perform," to strike out "at sea;" in line 158, after the word "misconduct," to strike out "or want of capacity, not caused by or in consequence of the performance of his duty;" and in line 161, after the word "discharged," to insert "with not more than one year's pay;" so as to read:

And provided further, That whenever on an inquiry had pursuant to law concerning the fitness of an officer of the Navy for promotion it shall appear that such officer is unfit to perform the duties of the place to which it is proposed to promote him, by reason of drunkenness or from any cause arising from his own misconduct, he shall not be placed on the retired list of the Navy, and he shall be discharged with not more than one year's pay.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out lines 168 to 175, in the following words:

That the active list of lieutenants in the Navy shall hereafter consist of two hundred, and until the number of lieutenants now on the active list of the Navy shall be reduced below the number of two hundred no promotion shall be made to fill vacancies occurring in said grade: Provided, That no lieutenant now in the service shall be reduced in rank or deprived of his commission by reason of the provisions of this rank.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That hereafter only one-third of the vacancies which may happen in the grades of line officers in the Navy below that of commodore and above that of midshipman shall be filled by promotions; and this suspension of promotions shall continue until the total number of officers in said grades shall be reduced to six hundred, and shall then cease; and promotions may be made to fill vacancies thereafter happening, but not to increase said total number of officers above six hundred, as herein limited.

Mr. HALE. I submitted two amendments the other day from the Committee on Appropriations to the amendment of the committee. I ask that they be read.

The PRINCIPAL LEGISLATIVE CLERK. After the word "limited," at the end of the matter proposed to be inserted by the committee, it is proposed to add the following proviso:

Provided, however, That this suspension of promotions to any grade shall not continue, but promotions thereto to fill all vacancies shall be resumed after said grade has been reduced to the limits herein provided, namely, for captains forty-eight, for commanders eighty-two, for lieutenant-commanders seventy, for lieutenants two hundred and fifty, for masters seventy-five, for ensigns seventy-five.

After the word "only," in line 175, it is proposed to strike out "one-third," and insert "one-half;" so as to read:

That hereafter only one-half of the vacancies which may happen in the grades of line officers in the Navy below that of commodore and above that of midshipman shall be filled by promotions.

Mr. BUTLER. I make the point of order on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will not make a point of order on it. That will open the whole discussion again. I certainly did not understand that on any proposition of this kind a point of order was to be made. It is only an amelioration of the House provision, which struck out eighty officers bodily and did not include the promotion at all. This is surely very much better than the House provision.

Mr. BUTLER. I propose to strike out the House provision, if I can have my way about it.

Mr. HALE. Afterward, when we come back to it, the Senator will have the opportunity to move to strike it out, but if the Senator makes the point of order now it will renew the point of order raised by the Senator from Missouri, and we shall have the whole subject opened again.

Mr. BUTLER. I make the point of order on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. VANCE. I hope the Senator from South Carolina will withdraw the point of order a moment, until I can make a proposition which I think will obviate his desire to make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina withdraw the point of order?

Mr. BUTLER. I will not withdraw it except to allow the Senator from North Carolina to make an explanation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is temporarily withdrawn.

Mr. VANCE. The objection made to this provision in the House bill as modified by the Senate Committee on Appropriations is that it would condemn young officers to an exceedingly long probation of from twelve to fifteen years before a cadet-midshipman or a midshipman could get the position of ensign, and so on, and it operates still more harshly upon the lieutenants. How that would result actually, whether it would be so long as twelve or fifteen years, I do not know; but I propose to offer an amendment, if permitted to do so, that I think would enable me to vote for the amendment of the committee. I propose to add the following proviso:

Provided, That any officer having served in any one grade for the period of fifteen years shall thereafter be entitled to the pay of the next highest grade.

So that if he is debarred of his promotion by the operation of this bill he will receive the advanced pay. If that would suit the Senator from South Carolina, it would suit me.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no objection to the proposition, but I insist on my point of order.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from South Carolina will withdraw the point of order for a moment, so that I may explain, I will state that the House of Representatives in dealing with the lower ranks in the Navy struck in at one place and reduced the lieutenants from two hundred and eighty to eighty. As Senators will see who look at lines 168, 169, 170, 171, and 172, the House made no provision whatever relieving the ranks below lieutenant from the cessation of promotion; that is, no promotion could take place until the lieutenants had been reduced to two hundred from two hundred and eighty. The result would be that for many years no man in the Navy who was ensign or master or cadet-midshipman, could be promoted until the number of lieutenants was reduced to two hundred. The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate thought that an unfair thing; they thought it injudicious that these young men just leaving the Naval Academy should be stopped entirely, and yet the committee wanted to agree to the feature of reduction.

Therefore, instead of making all those reductions in lieutenants, the committee distributed them over the lower ranks, and provided that only one vacancy in two should be filled. Then in order that it might not apply to prevent lower ranks from being promoted until the top ranks went out, the committee provided that when a lower rank is reduced to a certain number, promotions may go on. There is no better way, I think, any friend of the Navy, any naval officer, can devise for keeping up this system of promotion, and at the same time cutting down, because it was done in consultation not only with the Secretary of the Navy but with naval officers, and is a clear amelioration of the House position.

I do not know what object my friend from South Carolina has in making this point of order against the committee amendment. If he is a friend of these young officers and wants them promoted, and does not want them stopped, and wants to give them a chance, why does he object to the committee amendment, which is so much better than the House provision?

Mr. BUTLER. I am perfectly frank to say that I think this entire legislation is so obnoxious to my ideas of what is due to the Navy that I want to make it as objectionable as possible, and then I hope the Senate will come to the conclusion to strike out the objectionable features. I shall insist on my point of order.

Mr. HALE. That will not strike it out.

Mr. BUTLER. I think the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina improves the clause very much; I think the amendment of the Senate Committee on Appropriations improves it very much; but even with that improvement on it I think it is ineffably objectionable.

Mr. HALE. But does not the Senator see he has got to confront the House of Representatives at last on their proposition, and that we stand a great deal stronger if we have got a good proposition here, which he himself admits is a good one?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not think it is a good one; I think it is better than the House provision. I think the whole thing is wrong, and therefore I shall insist on the point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. I want to call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to the fact that by insisting on his point of order, and of course he can follow it up with similar points in reference to the bill, he places the Senate exactly in a position where we shall be compelled to agree to the House provisions or else be confronted with whatever follows agreeing to no provisions. In other words, he is putting the Senate in precisely the position that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] indicated yesterday, because if no amendment is in order to this provision it will be impossible for a committee of conference to take jurisdiction of any provision of like character. Therefore we shall be obliged to take the legislation as proposed by the House on this question or else whatever there is in the way of the chance of defeating the entire bill.

If Senators desire that thing, if they desire to accomplish by indirection what they failed to accomplish yesterday, we may as well understand it here and now and not waste our time upon this bill; because if we are to have points of order made upon every provision in the bill that is material, and those provisions are to go out upon points of order, let us at once consent to the House provisions of legislation and test the sense of the Senate whether we will strike them out here and send all these questions to a committee of conference, or whether we will make a sharp contest with the House with reference to the question whether general legislation shall be put on appropriation bills at all, even in the interest of economy.

Mr. BUTLER. Do I understand the Senator from Iowa to say that unless we accede to the provision proposed by the House we take the responsibility of defeating an important appropriation bill? Is that the point the Senator makes?

Mr. HALE. Agreeing to this amendment is not acceding.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand the Senator from Iowa to make that proposition.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not make that proposition, but I say you are this minute by your point of order aiding the House of Representatives in its endeavor to force upon us legislation that we do not agree to. You are not willing to test the sense of the Senate upon these modifications of the House provision, but you insist upon a point of order the effect of which will be that we must take the House provision or nothing.

Mr. BUTLER. Not at all.

Mr. ALLISON. That is exactly the proposition.

Mr. BUTLER. Not at all.

Mr. ALLISON. When we have passed this provision of the bill there is no amendment in order even through a conference committee.

Mr. BUTLER. If a majority of this body should hold that general legislation upon this appropriation bill was unwise and should not be agreed to, and it goes to a committee of conference, do I understand the Senator to say that we are to be coerced into admitting it because if we do not we must remain here? Is that the proposition?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator does not understand me to say any such thing, but let me put the converse of the proposition to the Senator. Does he suppose the House is going to be coerced by points of order upon a question of this kind? I may just as well ask him that question in the one case as in the other. If it is a question of coercion, the question is which shall last the longest. Is it not better and wiser for us to meet the House in reference to these reforms, if they be reforms, making the best provisions that we can, and then try to agree?

I have no wish about this matter. There are many features of the House provisions to which I do not agree. I confess to the Senate that I would not vote for this provision as it comes from the House. I do not believe that it is a wise or right provision.

Mr. BUTLER. Then move to strike it out and it will go to the committee of conference.

Mr. HALE. But we do not want to be reduced to that alternative. That is precisely what the Senator is trying to do, to put us in direct antagonism with the House.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If we adopt the amendment of the committee, which I concede is better than the House provision, and send it to the House, and the House then accept of that, we have got a reorganization notwithstanding we may be opposed to it. I, for one, have believed that the whole thing is unwise to attempt a reorganization of the Navy at this late hour upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I know the Senator thinks that; so we may all have thought originally, but I want to ask the Senator from Delaware how he expects to get rid of the House provisions? Answer me that question.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not say but that the two Houses may disagree, the Senate refusing to adopt the House provisions, but, then, if the Senate adheres, we still leave every appropriation for the Navy, and the House would have nothing to stand before the country upon.

Mr. ALLISON. We should have no appropriation at all. This bill cannot pass until the Houses come together. The House of Representatives has put this provision in the bill. I ask the Senator from Delaware how he is going to get it out? Are we to get it out by adhering to our disagreement?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Is it reasonable to suppose that the House will refuse to make appropriations for the Navy unless we consent to a reorganization of the Navy?

Mr. BUTLER. That is the point.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I believe a reorganization of the Navy would be proper and right and ought to be made, but I do not believe it is right and proper to do so upon an appropriation bill without the proper time to consider it. If we adopt the committee amendment and send that to the House we have then agreed to a reorganization in some shape, and if the House then accede to our proposition there is a reorganization according to the amendment proposed by the Senate committee. For one, I am opposed to the attempt to reorganize in this way the Navy. While I would be perfectly willing, upon a proper bill at a proper time, to see the Navy reorganized, I do not believe it is wise and proper at this late hour of the session to attempt that thing. I would vote for the committee amendment in preference to the House provision except that it places us in the position of going into a reorganization of the Navy at this time.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It has happened repeatedly during the present session, and I think under the able management of the Senator from Iowa, who has had much experience on conference committees, that on many propositions the conference committees were able to agree and on others they were not. It is possible that a conference committee on this bill, if the Senate should not concur in the legislation proposed by the House, might be able to agree with respect to the sums of money appropriated to sustain existing establishments and might disagree in regard to the matter of reorganization.

Mr. ALLISON. Let me put a question to the Senator. The Senator is seeking to put the Senate exactly in a position where we must agree to the House legislation as a whole, or none of it. In other words, by the suggestions of the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Florida we can exercise no supervision over the House legislation at all. You are putting the Senate into a position where it must either accept the House legislation or no legislation.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That seems to be the logical result of what has already happened with respect to the amendments proposed to the legislation of the House. It has turned out thus far that nothing can be done now practically without unanimous consent in opposition to the rules of the body, because the Chair has held that amendments of general legislation proposed to the provisions of the House on this bill are not in order. That only shows the impropriety of having any legislation on it at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BUTLER. I make the point of order on that amendment that it is general legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained as to that part of the amendment which is proposed to be inserted. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the amendment striking out the matter inserted by the House?

Mr. HALE. I move to modify that by inserting after "two hundred," both in line 169 and in line 171, the words "and twenty-five;" so as to make the number "two hundred and twenty-five."

Mr. BUTLER. Do I understand the Chair to sustain the point of order as to the amendment of the Senate Committee on Appropriations?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order as to that part of the amendment of the Senate committee which is proposed to be inserted into the bill is sustained, and the question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee to strike out the text from line 168 to line 175.

Mr. HALE. I have moved to modify that part of the amendment. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine moves to amend the part that it is proposed to strike out.

Mr. BUTLER. If it is in order I will now move to concur in the amendment of the Senate committee to strike out the matter from line 168 to line 175.

Mr. HALE. I have moved to amend that first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine moves to amend. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Maine to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the committee to strike out, as amended.

Mr. HALE. I want the Senate to see, and I think it does see without my explaining, that I have been trying here this morning fairly to get an expression of the Senate so that all sides would be represented. Upon the amendment, which is recognized to be much better than the House provision, the Senator from South Carolina has insisted and persisted upon his point of order, and has struck it out. I have moved to change the provision by increasing the number from "two hundred" to "two hundred and twenty-five," in order to give jurisdiction to the committee of conference to do what is a fair and a right thing, and the Senator from South Carolina is not content; he wants to drive this thing further. He wants to put a more firm defiance in the face of the House and strike out their provision entirely and absolutely. I say we go to the House better as a co-ordinate body by keeping in their provision and leaving it open than we do to strike it out absolutely, but if the Senator desires, and if the Senate desires, to inflame this matter so that when we come into conference we find that body directly opposed, with no one can tell what is the end, then make it all the more offensive.

Mr. BUTLER. That is the most remarkable statement I have ever heard in my life. The Senator says I am desiring to inflame this controversy when I am simply moving to sustain the committee of the Senate, his own committee, his own report.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is not, because the whole movement of the Senate committee rests upon the provision which the Senator has insisted on going out on a point of order. The conclusion the committee arrived at, the result of its deliberations, the Senator has insisted shall go out on a point of order; and now the Senator turns and says he wants to carry out our wish. He knows that that is disingenuous. He knows that is not the position of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, to strike out the House provision and not insert anything in its place. The whole is one proposition, to strike out and insert, and he has debarred us of that, not by a vote of the Senate, but by a rigid insistence on a point of order. I now seek to modify the committee amendment so as to leave it open, and I leave that to a vote of the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask the Senator to repeat his amendment, for I did not hear it clearly.

Mr. HALE. It is to increase the number in the House provision to two hundred and twenty-five, and then, instead of striking out the provision, leave it with that amendment on it.

Mr. BUTLER. That is in line 171?

Mr. ALLISON. In lines 169 and 171. It occurs in two places.

Mr. BUTLER. How will it read?

Mr. HALE. The provision will then read:

That the active list of lieutenants in the Navy shall hereafter consist of two hundred and twenty-five, and until the number of lieutenants now on the active list of the Navy shall be reduced below the number of two hundred and twenty-five no promotion shall be made to fill vacancies occurring in said grade.

Mr. VANCE. How much would that reduce the number of lieutenants, leaving it at two hundred and twenty-five?

Mr. HALE. It is two hundred and eighty now. It would reduce the number fifty-five.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It will be seen that the amendment of the Senator from Maine improves the provision in the line that my friends from South Carolina and North Carolina wish. It adds to the number already provided for by the House. What is the result if the motion of the Senator from South Carolina prevails and the text of the bill is stricken out? The Senate disagrees with the amendment of the committee, and the text of the bill is still in conference between the two Houses, and he has accomplished absolutely nothing, because the provision still goes to a conference. It is a House provision. You can strike out so far as the Senate is concerned, but it remains in the bill and it goes to a conference, and the conference committee can deal with it both on the part of the House and the Senate as they think proper, of course reporting their action to the House and Senate afterward. Then that report must be rejected or accepted as a whole.

I suggest to my friend from South Carolina, is it not much better to allow the provision to be so modified as to come a great deal nearer his views than as it now stands? It appears to me the amendment of the Senator from Maine is an improvement on the House provision, and it is in the direction desired by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. Do I understand the members of the Committee on Appropriations to withdraw their amendment striking out? Is that the proposition?

Mr. HALE. There is no withdrawing it.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Maine has moved to strike out "two hundred" and insert "two hundred and twenty-five."

Mr. HALE. Instead of striking out I move to amend it, and then I shall be in favor of keeping it in as amended.

Mr. BUTLER. It is proposed to be stricken out by the committee.

Mr. HALE. It is not stricken out until the Senate votes to strike it out.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I say to my friend who has charge of the bill that the Senate cannot dispose of it.

Mr. HALE. It cannot dispose of it, of course.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It still remains in the bill, and goes to the House as a part of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me a moment, I will state that I am almost indifferent myself whether the amendment of the Senator from Maine is adopted or not, or the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina. In either event it simply gives the committee of conference jurisdiction, and I think then our conferees will insist on this wise provision, so that we shall get it in the end. Gentlemen need not think they can play upon a bill in this way and get matter out of it. They do not gain anything by these propositions. Whether the whole of this is stricken out or whether the amendment of the Senator from Maine is adopted, a conference committee will have complete jurisdiction over it, and I hope they will settle the matter wisely and well when they come to settle it.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Have not the two Houses jurisdiction over a committee of conference?

Mr. ALLISON. They have, of course.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. But it will be borne in mind that the Senate has not jurisdiction over the House of Representatives, who put this provision in the bill. The Senate has nothing to do with them and cannot control them. Simply striking out the action of the Senate committee has no effect whatever upon the House, because the House has a right to maintain its position just as well as we have to maintain ours.

Mr. BUTLER. Does not agreeing to the motion to strike out indicates very clearly what the opinion of the Senate is upon that provision in the bill?

Mr. HALE. Not where it is stricken out on a point of order. If we debated the question and then struck out the clause it would be another thing.

Mr. BUTLER. But I am not discussing the proposition which has been stricken out.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, I have the floor. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BUTLER. I understood that the Senator from West Virginia had yielded the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not so understand.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I yield further to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. I was not discussing the proposition that was stricken out on the point of order, but I say it is not uncommon for the Senate to strike out provisions on any bill coming from the House, and that is what the Committee on Appropriations have done here.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator misapprehends. We did not propose to strike it out except by substituting a proposition for it.

Mr. BUTLER. But that has not appeared.

Mr. LOGAN. That is exactly it. The point of order was made to strike out the amendment, when you want the amendment to stand.

Mr. BUTLER. But I did not know that the amendment of the committee was made conditional.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. That does not necessarily follow. That is to say, striking out the amendment of the committee on a point of order, it does not follow that they abandon their position upon the text of the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will say to my friend from South Carolina that, as is readily seen, the matter from line 168 down to line 175 came from the House.

Mr. BUTLER. I know that.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senate Committee on Appropriations believed that that provision ought to be modified. They therefore proposed to strike it out and modify it by inserting the words commencing in line 175, down to the end of the paragraph. The Senator from South Carolina has raised a point of order which causes the amendment of the Senate Committee to be dropped out; in other words, the Senate disagrees to the amendment upon the point of order. What is the result? The result is that the clause as it came from the House remains.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it not stricken out by the committee?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It cannot be stricken out by the committee; and I do not care if the Senate is unanimous in favor of striking it out, it still must go back to the House. It is part of the bill as we received it. We may modify it.

Mr. BUTLER. I have never questioned that; but the point I want to make is whether the Committee on Appropriations did not report to strike out that provision?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Not unless it was modified as proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would state that if the amendment reported by the committee was in fact a motion to strike out and insert, then the ruling of the Chair was erroneous. The Chair was treating the two propositions as independent. A motion to strike out and insert is indivisible; and the Chair would have ruled, if the question had been put in that form, and holds now, that such would be the proper ruling, being indivisible, if the amendment proposed to be inserted be out of order, the whole amendment is ruled out of order, and it leaves the original provision of the bill as it came from the House, standing without modification or change, but subject to amendment.

Mr. HALE. And that I move to amend by inserting the words "and twenty-five" after "two hundred."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If this be an amendment to strike out and insert, as upon scrutinizing it the Chair believes it is, the Chair rules the whole amendment out of order, striking out as well as inserting. Then the part left in the bill is subject to amendment, and the Senator from Maine has proposed to amend it.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the Chair if it is not in order to strike out that provision?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Of course it is.

Mr. ALLISON. I merely wanted to know the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I think the Chair was clearly right when he took the view that those two propositions were independent of each other. What is the first proposition, the one which the committee propose to strike out? It relates to lieutenants in the Navy;

That the active list of lieutenants in the Navy shall hereafter consist of two hundred, and until the number of lieutenants now on the active list of the Navy shall be reduced below the number of two hundred no promotion shall be made to fill vacancies occurring in said grade: Provided, That no lieutenant now in the service shall be reduced in rank or deprived of his commission by reason of the provisions of this rank.

That the committee propose to strike out, and after that they superadd an amendment, as follows:

That hereafter only one-third of the vacancies which may happen in the grades of line officers in the Navy below that of commodore and above that of midshipman shall be filled by promotions; and this suspension of promotions shall continue until the total number of officers in said grades—

That is, all the grades in the Navy—shall be reduced to six hundred, and shall then cease; and promotions may be made to fill vacancies thereafter happening, but not to increase said total number of officers above six hundred, as herein limited.

The propositions are distinct in their nature. The one proposition of the House, which this amendment strikes out, goes only to the lieutenants in the Navy, where they are limited to two hundred, while the other proposition relates to the whole service and proposes to limit all the officers in the naval service to six hundred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules the whole amendment striking out as well as the part to be inserted out of order, which leaves the bill as it came to the Senate from the House intact, except so far as amended on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has it been amended on the motion of the Senator from Maine?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was amended on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. Then I have nothing further to ask in regard to the provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will be reported.

The PRINCIPAL LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, after the word "for," in line 184, to strike out the words "two secretaries, one to the Admiral and one to the Vice-Admiral."

Mr. HALE. Under the action of the Senate on the point of order with reference to admirals those words, instead of being stricken out, should remain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 185, after the word "paymasters," to strike out "of vessels;" and in line 190, after the word "actual," to insert "personal;" so as to read:

For two secretaries, one to the Admiral and one to the Vice-Admiral, clerks to paymasters, clerks at inspections, navy-yards, and stations, and extra pay to men enlisted under honorable discharge; commission and interest, transportation of funds, exchange, mileage to officers while traveling under orders in the United States, and for actual personal expenses of officers while traveling abroad under orders.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 191, before the word "officers," to strike out "hereafter;" and in line 192, after the word "orders," to insert "hereafter issued shall travel by the most direct route, the occasion and necessity for such order to be certified by the officer issuing the same and;" so as to read:

And officers of the Navy traveling abroad under orders hereafter issued shall travel by the most direct route, the occasion and necessity for such order to be certified by the officer issuing the same; and shall receive, in lieu of the mileage now allowed by law, only their actual and reasonable expenses, certified under their own signatures and approved by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I ask the Senator from Maine what is the rate of mileage now allowed by law in cases of this kind?

Mr. HALE. Eight cents.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. This, then, is in the direction of retrenchment. I think that the actual expenses of the officers would be less than the mileage.

Mr. HALE. It was found that under the provision for mileage it was sometimes insisted upon by very indirect routes, and sometimes even when upon Government vessels. The examination led the committee to believe that there would be a saving of several thousand dollars each year if the actual and legitimate expenses alone were paid, which nobody wants to cut off.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. If the matter of the actual expenses is left to the officers it is a question whether it would not increase instead of diminishing.

Mr. HALE. The committee thought when they came to examine the accounts which have been put in heretofore that this change should be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Bureau of Navigation," after line 266, to insert:

For beginning the transfer to copper plates of five hundred and thirty photographic charts, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Ordnance," in line 284, after the word "for," to strike out "that purpose" and insert "these purposes;" so as to read:

For fuel, tools, materials, and labor used in procuring, producing, and preserving ordnance material; for the armament of ships, and for the general work of the Ordnance Department for these purposes, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 305, to reduce the appropriation "for miscellaneous items" for the Bureau of Ordnance from $5,000 to $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting," in line 332, to reduce the appropriation "for transportation of enlisted men: for expenses attending the transportation of enlisted men and boys at home and abroad," from $40,000 to $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 342, to reduce the appropriation "for contingent expenses, equipment, and recruiting" from $20,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Yards and Docks," in line 362, to increase the appropriation "for general maintenance of yards and docks" from $220,000 to $270,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 370, after the word "the," to strike out "governments for the amounts in this act appropriated for the maintenance of and civil establishment at the navy-yards, he shall not make any deficiency for these purposes, but" and insert "Government;" so as to read:

Provided, That if the Secretary of the Navy shall find that work at all the navy-yards now maintained cannot be carried on with advantage to the service and economy to the Government, he shall suspend work at those yards where he finds it can best be dispensed with, and shall close such yards and transfer all perishable stores and property therefrom to other yards for use therein, and report the facts and the reasons governing his action to the next session of Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "discharged," in line 382, to insert:

And no deficiency shall be made for maintenance of, or for the civil establishment at navy-yards.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "navy-yards," in line 384, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That not less than two navy-yards shall be maintained upon the Atlantic and Gulf coast, one north and one south of the Potomac River, and one upon the Pacific coast.

Mr. COCKRELL. I make the point of order on the proviso that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in line 390, after the word "yard," to strike out "for the Bureaus of Equipment and Recruiting and Ordnance;" so as to read:

Provided further, That the navy-yard at Washington, District of Columbia, may, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, be maintained as a manufacturing yard, and that work may be continued in the rope-walk in the Boston navy-yard.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Medicine and Surgery," in line 405, to increase the appropriation "for the naval-hospital fund, namely: for maintenance of the naval hospitals at the various navy-yards and stations" from $25,000 to $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "examiners," in line 417, to insert "rent of rooms for naval dispensary;" and in line 420, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty" and insert "fifteen;" so as to make the clause read:

For contingent expenses of the bureau: For freight on medical stores; transportation of insane patients to the Government hospital; advertising; telegraphing; purchase of books; expenses attending the medical board of examiners; rent of rooms for naval dispensary; purchase and repair of wagons and harness; purchase and feed of horses and cows; trees, garden-tools, and seeds, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 428.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask my colleague, the Senator who has the bill in charge, in regard to the appropriation of $20,000 in line 428, "for the maintenance of the civil establishment at the several naval hospitals, navy-yards," &c., whether a careful examination was made to see if that reduction was not too great? It is one-half. It used to be $40,000, and $40,000 was asked for; it is reduced to $20,000.

Mr. HALE. It was the same proportionate reduction that was made in the other civil establishments, and the committee believed that the service could be done with this money, and even with less.

Mr. FRYE. I have a letter from a very intelligent surgeon at the naval hospital at Chelsea, Massachusetts, in which he gives a list of the employés, and says that they are not sufficient, that they need a watchman in addition, and that the $20,000 as apportioned among the several establishments would reduce their present force one-half.

Mr. HALE. The Senator will always find that where any attempt of this kind is made there will be expostulations raised at the places where it is done, because nobody wants to give up his place. The committee looked into it very carefully in connection with the Secretary of the Navy, and they believed that this reduction could be made, and in many cases even more.

Mr. HAWLEY. I inquire whether that was not made so low because they provided in other parts of the bill for reducing the number of navy-yards to be kept in order? In case that amendment which was objected to by the Senator from Missouri should not be finally made it may be necessary to consider that item again.

Mr. HALE. No, it was not made with that view; it was made with reference to the law as it exists now.

Mr. FRYE. What I desired to know was whether the committee had given the matter a careful examination?

Mr. HALE. We looked into it carefully.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Bureau of Provisions and Clothing," in line 435, after the word "ships," to strike out "for cooking and drinking purposes;" so as to make the clause read:

For provisions for the seamen and marines; commuted rations for officers, seamen, and marines; expenses of the handling and transportation of provisions; of inspections and storehouses; and for purchase of water for ships, and for provisions and commutation of rations for 750 boys, $1,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I beg the pardon of the Senate. I intended when upon lines 365 to 397, looking to the discontinuance of certain navy-yards, to propose an amendment, which has already been submitted to the committee. I do not know whether the committee would prefer to go back to that now or to wait.

Mr. HALE. That can be done after we get through with the committee amendments.

Mr. HOAR. I will take the course that the committee prefer.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Bureau of Construction and Repair," in the clause making appropriations "for preservation and completion of vessels on the stocks and in ordinary," in line 459, after the word "exceed," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to read:

Provided, That no part of this sum shall be applied to the repairs of any wooden ship when the estimated cost of such repairs shall exceed 25 per cent. of the estimated cost of a new ship of the same size and like material.

Mr. BLAIR. I raise the point of order on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations that it is new legislation.

Mr. HALE. I think that presents in about as neat a way as can be done the operation of the rule about legislation, and I am desirous of getting the ruling, with the Senator from New Hampshire, upon that point. Here is a House provision, a good one undoubtedly, intended to prevent undue repairs upon old ships or the practical rebuilding of an old ship, calling it by her old name when it is really a new ship, limiting it to 30 per cent. of the value, and the Committee on Appropriations have changed that 30 per cent. which the House puts in to 25 per cent. It has originated no legislation; it has put in no new law; but it has simply changed the percentage as provided in the bill of the House.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator's argument is this—

Mr. HALE. I have not made any argument.

Mr. BLAIR. Then I will sit down until you do.

Mr. HALE. I do not propose to make any argument. I am willing to take the decision of the Chair upon this matter, and I do not care how it is decided.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator has failed essentially to state the position and the facts as raised by my point of order. The House of Representatives has made a very injudicious provision in the text. It proposes that the existing navy shall not be repaired when the repairs will be more than 30 per cent. of the cost of a new vessel of the same character and material. The committee comes in with an amendment that the ship shall not be repaired—that is to say, it shall be utterly destroyed and shall cease to be a constituent part of the American Navy when it will cost 25 per cent. of the value of a new ship to repair it, and they say that because they have made an increased reduction therefore they are right. That principle of reasoning would come to this: that if it would cost one dollar even to repair the ship, for that very reason it should not be repaired; if it cost over a dollar, or if it cost ninety-nine cents, it would be thrown away; so that the Senator's argument results in an absurdity.

I do not raise this point of order for the sake of making a technical objection. We have one hundred and forty ships in the navy, of which only thirty-eight are said to be efficient and really available as naval ships in case of war—naval ships, I mean to say, of the character, the construction, the material, the ordnance, and the like that appertain to these. Of course they are not capable of meeting the formidable armaments of other navies, but they are good for the character of ships which we do possess; and with an increased navy, with a formidable navy, we should need every one of the thirty-eight which we now have, of precisely the same character and material. They would all be found efficient and serviceable.

If that character of ships will be necessary in the new navy which we expect to have in the future, it is obviously for our advantage to keep these for what they can do during this transitional period, and also for the service they may be hereafter, when we have the additional vessels which may be called for. The English navy has vessels like these which it is proposed to destroy.

What is the proposition which lies behind and beyond, and I think at the bottom of the whole naval bill? I think it is an effort of outside parties, who know we must have a navy, who know we are going to build a very extensive one, to strike down the navy, to destroy the navy which we now have in order to hurry the moment when outside contractors can come in and take advantage of the fact that we have no navy whatever, which we help to destroy by failing to repair what we now have, and which the necessity of the times imposes upon us, force us to give to them the work as contractors, holding the Government by the throat and paying them just whatever sums they may see fit to exact as contractors for the construction of a new navy.

In order to attain that end it is necessary for them to accomplish two things. They must first destroy all the facilities which the Government has on its part for the construction of a navy. In order to do that they close every yard we have, and there are provisions for that in this very bill, that in the discretion of the Secretary (and by implication that discretion is to be exercised, for they have withheld the appropriations,) the yards shall be closed with the exception of three, and those exceptions are only brought in here by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate; they do not come to us from the House at all. In that way they close our yards; they scatter our skilled labor.

We have it now, we have it under our control; but the moment that labor is once scattered and the necessity for the construction of a navy becomes more and more apparent, and the vessels which we now have fail to be repaired, and go to rot and ruin, as they are now going, then we shall be with no yard, with no skilled labor; and the scattering of skilled labor is a matter of much more importance in fact than the retention of the yards themselves, for when it is lost to the Government and is under the control of outside establishments it is much more difficult to replace it than it is to replace the yards themselves. The machinery and the improvements in machinery which go on from day to day are all in the possession of outside parties, and the Government is utterly helpless without yards, without skilled labor, and the necessity for the construction of the navy impending.

I believe, to get back to the point, that the provision which the House sends us is one which they supposed would be utterly fatal to the repairs of the existing navy, and unless provision is made for that, of course such navy as we have goes to the dogs immediately. I desire, however, that this tendency in the same direction which has exhibited itself in the amendment which has been brought here by the committee of the Senate shall be checked, and that we shall at least require the provision to stand as it was sent here by the House.

In fact I am not entirely without authority for these suggestions which I make. I know that constructors of the Navy, men who understand this whole matter very much better than any Senator on this floor—I do not now refer to any existing officer—but I know men who are thoroughly acquainted with the Navy and with the subject of naval armament all the way through from one end of it to the other, believe that this is an exceedingly unwise provision as it came to us from the House, and that instead of being 30 per cent. it should not have been less than 50 per cent. at the very lowest. A vessel which is worth one-half a new vessel, any one of the thirty-eight or forty which are now efficient, should not be allowed to go to destruction for the lack of repairs.

Further on there is a provision that where machinery is only worth 25 per cent. less than new machinery, or where it is worth 75 per cent. of new machinery in other words, it shall not be repaired. Engines worth seventy-five cents on the dollar of new ones are to be taken from the vessels. The vessels themselves go of course with the machinery, and the result is that every vessel we now have which is worth seventy-five cents on the dollar of a new vessel is to be consigned to immediate destruction simply for the need of repairs.

Anybody can see that the destruction of the navy is provided for in the bill, for unless we can repair ships and such ships as we have then we have no navy whatever, and when you have destroyed the navy that we now have the very next year you will be under the necessity of constructing a new one. When you have destroyed your yards and destroyed your machinery, scattered your skilled labor, destroyed your navy, and are utterly unable to build a new one, I want to know if we shall not be entirely at the mercy of those individual contractors in the country at large and in the Old World who may make prices precisely to suit themselves and hold us at their mercy!

Those who believe in the doctrine of protection which is talked of so much by Senators on this side of the Chamber and on the other side of the Chamber will see how this will operate.

How has Great Britain built up her free-trade commerce? How has she made herself strong, and how does she continue her clutch upon the commerce of the world? She pours her goods upon the market of any country which admits them without protection, pours them in ad libitum, until she has broken down every home establishment, and when the capital invested in manufactures in any given nation is destroyed, the yards gone, skilled labor scattered, then she turns around and makes up her losses in underselling at cost prices by taxing the foolish nation to any extent she may see fit. In precisely that same way, pursuing that same policy, we are called upon by provisions, as I understand it—and I can understand its general effect in no other way—first to destroy our capacity to produce, and then to destroy whatever we now have, and then to go to those who build ships to buy ships at their own prices.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Before the Senator takes his seat will he allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Can the Senator name how many ships we have in the Navy now that are not wooden ships which would not fall within the provisions of this clause? I think we have very few but what are wooden ships in the Navy.

Mr. BLAIR. This proviso I understand covers the great mass of our vessels.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It does.

Mr. BLAIR. My recollection is that we have one hundred and forty ships. We have some thirty-eight which are considered efficient, good fighting ships.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Wooden ships?

Mr. BLAIR. Wooden ships I speak of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from New Hampshire to raise a question of order against the amendment?

Mr. BLAIR. I raise the question of order.

Mr. LOGAN. It applies to the whole thing.

Mr. BLAIR. It applies to the committee amendment. I raise the point of order and I shall move an amendment at a subsequent time striking out the word "thirty" and inserting perhaps "50 per cent."

Mr. LOGAN. How can you do that?

Mr. COCKRELL. Will that be in order?

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly it will be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the point of order made by the Senator from New Hampshire—

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire to strike it all out and let it go without any limitation.

Mr. BLAIR. I raise the point of order so far as the committee amendment is concerned. If the point of order is sustained, that leaves the bill precisely as it came to us from the House, and at a subsequent time I will have the right under all the suggestions which have been made here to move to strike anything out of the bill that I see fit.

Mr. HALE. After you have raised the point of order yourself?

Mr. BLAIR. After I have raised the point of order on the committee amendment, most certainly. I do not propose to move to strike out the committee amendment. I raise the point of order so far as that amendment is concerned, but I give notice that in the subsequent consideration of the bill I shall move to insert something else instead of the words "30 per cent.," which will then remain part of the text which has been sent to us by the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is right in that proposition. The Chair will be compelled to hold that the amendment is out of order, which the Chair does not hesitate to hold.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to ask the Senator upon what rule he raises the point of order? It is simply striking out an amount.

Mr. BLAIR. That it is general legislation.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If simply striking out one amount and inserting another in an appropriation bill is out of order, then how would it be possible to consider any appropriation bill whatever, because all appropriation bills contain amounts more or less? If the Committee on Appropriations were to amend any amount, no matter what it is, salaries or otherwise, or if any Senator should wish to change in any form an amount, how could it be done unless one amount be stricken out and another inserted? How can an appropriation bill be considered, if simply striking out one amount and inserting another is general legislation and is out of order? It appears to me to be, I do not say far-fetched, but so far out of order that it is hardly a question with me. Suppose an appropriation bill comes here with an item for salary of a Senator, or for a clerk at $1,000—

Mr. HOAR. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the question to be the point of order raised by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HOAR. I thought the Chair had decided that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair had indicated his readiness to decide it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am attempting to address the Chair before the question of order is decided. I want to put it upon the general sense of the thing. I ask the question how it would be possible to consider any appropriation bill, much less this one—the legislative appropriation bill, for instance? A clerk's salary is made $1,000; some Senator moves to strike out $1,000 and insert $1,200, or to strike out $1,000 and insert $900. If changing an amount is general legislation how could such an amendment ever be made by the Senate? Under what rule, in what manner, could we consider appropriation bills? This is simply, as I understand, striking out "thirty" and inserting "twenty-five."

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The Senator would not compare this to the salary of an officer?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Certainly I would in striking out the figures.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. This is a very different case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The cases are in no sense parallel. The proviso proposes to fix by law a rule limiting the power to repair a certain character of vessels. The proviso as it comes from the House proposes to fix by law a rule limiting the repair of vessels. The committee amendment proposes to modify that. Therefore the Chair holds that the amendment is legislation. The proviso is legislation and the committee amendment proposes to modify the legislation as it came from the House in the proviso.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes, but the rule does not say "legislation;" it says "general legislation."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that this is general legislation.

Mr. BECK. The decision is perhaps law, but I desire once more to have a record made by the yeas and nays to show what we are deciding as law. I appeal from the decision of the Chair, and call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, the decision of the Chair being sustained, I ask how is it possible to consider an appropriation bill or any House bill if it is general legislation simply to change an amount connected with the bill? Here is a bill fixing the amount of percentage—

Mr. BLAIR. It is an amount not of appropriation under existing law, but it is an amount contained in a provision, which entire provision is new legislation. The whole thing is new legislation.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Of course it is new legislation, but not put in by the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator prefers, I can object to the entire proviso.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think not.

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly, because it is all new legislation on the theory of the Senator.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think that would be a much better objection than the Senator has made, for the one he has made on its merits, what is it? Here are provisions that $1,750,000 appropriated for the repair of vessels—

Mr. JONES, of Florida. On that point will the Senator permit me to interrupt him for a moment? The Committee on Appropriations of course have undertaken to legislate for the Navy, and I are now of the kind that would fall within the provisions of this proviso?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That has nothing to do with it.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It has a great deal to do with it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Nothing at all; and I say that the Senate Committee on Appropriations has not undertaken to legislate for the Navy. The Committee on Appropriations had referred to it the naval appropriation bill by the Senate with legislation in it from the House. It is a House bill, not a Senate bill. The Committee on Appropriations considered that the bill could be improved by amendments, and in several places they have made amendments, but in very few places have they made any additional legislation of any kind. Here is a proposition from the House appropriating $1,750,000 for the repair of a certain character of vessels, wooden vessels.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Those wooden vessels at present comprise all the serviceable ships in our Navy.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let it be so. That does not change the question. It may or may not be so for aught I know. I am not familiar with the Navy. I know very little about it.

As I have stated, here is $1,750,000 for the repair of vessels. The House has said where a wooden vessel is so far out of repair that it will cost more than 30 per cent. of the estimated cost of a new ship of the same size and material to repair it, it shall not be repaired. The Senate committee thought that that amount ought to be reduced, and thought that a vessel which would cost more than 25 per cent. of its actual value ought not to be repaired.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. What ought to be done with it?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That has nothing to do with this question.

Mr. BLAIR. They are to be sold under other provisions of the bill as old junk.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That may be the Senator's construction. The Committee on Appropriations have not rested on their own opinion or the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy, but they have made provision that an advisory board shall pass upon it and say whether or not it shall be repaired. They believed that was better than to leave it in the hands of any single man or any person; consequently on the next page you will find a further modification of this legislation. The committee thought that before a vessel was condemned or before it was decided what repairs should be made upon her an advisory board should pass upon it to see whether or not the vessel will cost more or less and whether she ought to be repaired.

Mr. BLAIR. A ship which is worth seventy-five cents on the dollar of the cost of a new ship is not to be repaired. If it is not to be repaired it is not to go to sea, for it is only to be repaired because it needs repairs in order that it may do service. What is to become of that ship? Other provisions of the bill provide for the disposal of whatever is not available for use in the Navy. What will the result be? Let me ask the Senator, as the entire Navy consists of thirty-eight efficient vessels, when they come to be worth less than seventy-five cents on the dollar will they be disposed of like other old junk and waste material under other provisions of the bill; and if to be disposed of who is to buy them? The American people do not want to buy their discarded Navy. Who else in this country wants a naval ship but the American people? Then who wants to buy that material? Simply the men who are to build the new Navy.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There are very many people in the country who believe these old vessels ought to go out of the country.

Mr. BECK. The ground of my appeal, I will state to the Senator from West Virginia by his permission, was not whether 25 per cent. was the true limit of the estimated cost of a new ship, or whether it should be 35 or 40 or 20; but the legislation is here, and the House has fixed it at 30 per cent., and what I deny is that the Senate has any right even to consider whether it shall be 25, 35, 40, 20, or any other percentage, because we are ruled down to 30 or nothing. The decision is of such a character that I want to have the country understand just what limit the Senate is putting upon itself by an absolutely absurd rule of the Senate, assuming the construction to be entirely right.

We had a case before the Committee on Appropriations this morning. A man by the name of Payne has invaded the Indian Territory two or three times—I do not know how many—and under the existing law he could only be imprisoned five days and fined as much as the court pleased; but then he could take the benefit of the insolvent debtor's law and get out in five days. That law ought to be amended and the man ought to be punished. There is no punishment at all practically. The House put in the sundry civil bill that he should be imprisoned ten years. The Senate say that is too long; we propose to make it five, and that is out of order.

Mr. BLAIR. That is quite interesting about the Indian Territory.

Mr. BECK. I have the floor and the Senator will sit down until I take my seat.

Mr. BLAIR. I am not under the necessity of sitting down in order to hear the Senator. I thought he had finished.

Mr. BECK. I have the floor.

Mr. BLAIR. I supposed the Senator was done.

Mr. BECK. I was not done.

Mr. BLAIR. I perceive the Senator is not done. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. BECK. Then do not do it if you do not wish to do it.

I was stating a case to illustrate the absurdity of such ruling, because I think the Senate ought to reverse its own decision and on a fuller vote the Senate in my opinion will reverse it, and here is a proper case made; not that the 25 per cent. is the true sum or that 30 per cent. is the true sum or 35 or 40 per cent.; but the Senate having this legislation before it which it cannot dispose of except by considering it either here or somewhere else, should have the right to say whether in its judgment 30 per cent. is the only amount and it cannot be altered.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, there seems to be great misapprehension in the minds of the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Kentucky in regard to the true character of this provision. They are arguing as though this was a question to reduce an amount, to limit or restrict a fine, to reduce a term of imprisonment, or to retrench. When you come to the merits of the question, it is no such proposition as that. What is the character of this proviso? Of course everybody knows that our principal ships of the Navy at present are wooden ships; some of our best are wooden ships; and while we all agree that naval warfare has so changed as to render necessary a different class of vessels from what we had twenty or thirty years ago, it is also admitted that this country is in a position to utilize for many years to come her best wooden ships in time of peace. If we propose to add to the Navy iron-clads and steel-clads to meet a condition of war, I am willing to go for their construction, but at the same time I am not willing to sweep out of existence by such a provision as this those wooden ships that have been so well adapted to cruising service in time of peace for a country situated as this is.

What is the character of this provision? The House goes on to say,

Provided, That no part of this sum shall be applied to the repairs of any wooden ship when the estimated cost of such repairs shall exceed 30 per cent. of the estimated cost of a new ship of the same size and like material.

I think that is a very unwise rule to adopt even at 30 per cent., for I imagine that nobody proposes to build wooden ships at this time, and it might be wise to repair a ship in the Navy when the estimated cost of such repair exceeded 50 per cent. of a new vessel. Thirty-three and one-third per cent. new for old I think is the underwriter's rule, and when the damage amounts to less than one-half in the case of a loss at sea the owner cannot abandon, because the presumption is that the vessel may be repaired with profit to the owner when the cost of repairing does not exceed one-half the value of the property.

Now, this 25 per cent. is not on the line of reduction at all. The House says that when the cost of repairs shall exceed 30 per cent. of the estimated cost of a new ship the vessel shall be abandoned, and, as the Senator from New Hampshire wisely said a moment ago, she will be put in a condition where she must be sold. The Senate, the retrenching body, as I will call it, comes in, and what does it do? It is on the line of economy. It says that 30 per cent. is too high, and it fixes it at 25, so that when the cost of repairing a vessel shall exceed 25 per cent. of a new ship the vessel shall be put aside.

Is that proposition at all analogous to the one put by the Senator from Kentucky of reducing imprisonment, or the one put by the Senator from West Virginia of reducing the pay of an officer? They must think at least that the humble members of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs are thick-headed sure enough if they undertake to see the proposition in that light.

I say it is unwise to put this limitation upon this bill at all. There ought to be no percentage. It is an unheard-of thing. We know very well that if it is the determination to condemn a ship under the proposition, such is the uncertainty of calculation attending works of this kind, that it is easy to find a board to condemn any ship in the Navy and put her aside. She may require a bowsprit or two or three planks. So the board may say that the repairs necessary to be made will cost 50 per cent. of the cost of a new ship, and the ship is put aside. I would not give that power to anybody.

Mr. LOGAN. I did not intend to-day to detain the Senate at all in discussing any portion of this bill, but it seems to me that the captiousness of certain Senators is remarkable. I desire to answer what the Senator from Florida said if I can. I have heard him and other Senators not far distant from where he sits continually talking about our Navy, the condition of our Navy, the condition of our ships of war, and that we ought to build up a Navy; and on the first effort that is made in this bill to put in a provision whereby proper vessels shall be built the committee is attacked, because it is economy and retrenchment. Any man who will stand up in this day of enlightenment and talk about wooden ships for the Navy I think will astonish the intelligence of this country.

The object of the House I suppose was that the wooden ships in the Navy, as they become impaired, should be sold or disposed of and the proceeds applied to building either steel or iron-clad or other naval vessels that were of more importance to the country. That is the object of the provision.

Now, then, a point of order is made on the word "twenty-five." The House provided that when the repairs should cost more than 30 per cent. of the value of the vessel it should not be repaired. The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate provided 25 per cent., with an advisory board, which advisory board shall make the examination and determine whether or not the vessel is capable of being used further; if not, then under the Secretary of the Navy the vessel may be disposed of. That is for the purposes of providing some means by which this character of vessels can be got rid of when they become impaired so that they are of no further naval use.

Suppose you estimate the cost of a wooden ship at $1,000,000. Will any man say to me that a wooden ship ought to be repaired for naval warfare when $250,000 is required to put that ship in order to put to sea as a seafaring vessel again? That is the proposition, that is the question; whether you will build a navy or whether you intend to prevent it.

Are we to be lectured at here day after day about building naval vessels, and when an attempt is made in the right direction to try to prepare our Navy for the exigencies of war then we are to be sneered at because we are the economical committee of the body, as the Senator from Florida says in a sneering way?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Oh, no. I want to say to the Senator that I never sneer.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well, if the Senator does not, why apply the term "economical committee" to any one committee more than another that does its duty? When a Senator points out a certain committee as the economical committee it is a sneer.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I differ with you.

Mr. LOGAN. We differ; that is all. If this is out of order, I suppose the whole proviso is out of order. Why is it out of order? Because it is new legislation of a general character. But it comes from the House, and therefore you cannot make the point of order on it; but if we change the words "30 per cent." to "25 per cent.," you can make the point of order on 25, because that is general legislation. In my judgment it is simply nonsense for any such rule or decision to be established in the Senate.

Suppose that this provision came from the House, saying that each ship provided for in this proviso shall cost two and a half millions of money; suppose that we were satisfied the ships could be built for a million and a half of dollars each, and we provided that they should be built for such an amount as could be properly expended after an examination by the advisory board, would anybody say that we were bound to comply with the proposition of the House, and pay two and a half million dollars for each ship or else the whole clause must go out of the bill? That is the proposition. It is simply absurd.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Allow me to interrupt the Senator on that point.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I should like to ask the Senator as a practical business man why this rule of percentage should be adopted in the language that it has been, 25 or 30 per cent. "of the estimated cost of a new ship of the same size and like material?" I should like the Senator to explain, if he can, what idea that gives of the value or utility of the vessel which may be necessary to be repaired.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator will excuse me if I do not enter into a detailed discussion with reference to ships. I was only speaking of this to illustrate the proposition that he maintains here of this being out of order. But I carry it a little further.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I did not raise the point of order.

Mr. LOGAN. I know the Senator did not raise the point of order, but he maintains it. Whether the 25 per cent. shall be agreed to or the 30 per cent., I do not care a snap. That has nothing to do with it. The committee do not care. That is not the proposition. But you say we cannot change the 30 per cent. to 25 per cent.; in other words, we cannot increase or reduce the percentage. You say a vessel ought not to be laid up unless she is damaged 50 per cent. I say, according to the theory you propound here, we cannot increase the 30 to 50 per cent., because it is out of order to do it. So I say it is illogical in every point of view. You maintain that a vessel may be damaged 50 per cent., and at the same time that you maintain it you maintain we cannot amend it so as to make—

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The Senator misapprehends me. I was speaking of the insurance rule that a person cannot abandon property damaged at sea or return it to the underwriter unless the damage exceeds one-half of the cost, because the presumption exists that she is worth the repair.

Mr. LOGAN. I took it from that statement that the Senator was trying to convince the Senate that this proposition was too low, and my argument is that if it is too low we cannot change it according to his theory for the reason that his theory says it is out of order. So you put yourself in the position that if the amount of damage is estimated too low you cannot increase it because to do so is out of order.

Now, here is a proposition on the next page of the bill for an advisory board, and the House provided for certain expenses $50,000. We examined it very carefully, and struck out the $50,000 and put in $11,000, because our estimate showed that was enough. They put in $50,000 where it was unnecessary. We changed that to $11,000 in the interest of economy, and on your theory that cannot be done. We have got to take the $50,000 whether we need it or not. That is your proposition. I say it is absurd and ridiculous to make an argument of that kind. Here is $50,000 appropriated for the expenses of a board, and we in our estimates understand it will not cost over $11,000, and we change it to $11,000 to save the Government nearly $40,000, and your idea is that that is out of order. We cannot reduce the expenses of the Government; if we do, a point of order will reach it, and you have got to stand it, no matter how many millions there are, and if you reduce it in the interest of economy you are out of order! What an idea!

Oh, what a happy condition of things we have now with this great logic, with this economy, with the judiciousness of this Naval Committee's opposition to these propositions, with their attack on every thing. You will find before you get through with this bill that your proposition will cost this Government more than $5,000,000; no, I will not say $5,000,000, but over $2,000,000; and I say that I can demonstrate that by maintaining your theory and propositions in the Senate, it will cost the Government over $2,000,000 for things that ought to be done.

So far as this 25 per cent., or 30 per cent., or 40 per cent. is concerned, I do not care a snap. That is a question that the Senate should determine as to the amount; but when we are told that we cannot change it but must take the amount that is in the bill anyhow, I cannot agree to that. I think the President of the Senate was right this morning in holding—and I withheld my vote for that reason—that a certain amendment proposed was out of order, separate and disconnected from any other proposition; but when it comes to holding an amendment in a proviso to a bill put into the House which is simply striking out one word and putting in another which is a reduction of expense, to be out of order, it is an absurdity.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, we have three elements of a great Navy: a corps of skillfully trained and efficient officers, some heroic traditions, and a great abundance of water; John Paul Jones, Bainbridge, Lawrence, and the other heroes of the war of 1812, and 21,000 miles of undefended sea-coast, upon which in case of invasion we could rely on the assistance of one hundred and forty vessels of war of which we are told that thirty-eight could possibly be rendered seagoing and effective in case of war!

It is alleged by those who favor the construction of a Navy that Congress has been parsimonious in matters of appropriation, and that the Navy has not received that attention from Congress which it deserves. It is a sufficient refutation of this statement to say that since the close of the war more than $300,000,000 have been appropriated by Congress and spent upon the Navy, for which we have only to show one hundred and forty vessels of all dimensions, of which thirty-eight could possibly be rendered efficient for sea. During the last six years nearly one hundred millions have been appropriated, and still we are told that Congress has been actuated by a feeling of hostility and animosity toward the Navy, so that it has not received the attention which was demanded by the country, and which, as it has been said, has made us the laughing-stock and jeer and derision of the civilized world.

I do not so read the lessons of history with regard to the American Navy. The reason why we have no navy is not because money has not been appropriated in sufficient quantities to have given us a navy that would have competed with that of Great Britain or France or Italy or any of the great naval powers of Europe. It is because the money that has been appropriated has been scandalously misappropriated and squandered.

I am called upon to make these observations in consequence of the pending amendment, which the Committee on Appropriations propose to amend by declaring that ships shall not be repaired unless the cost of repairing shall be 25 per cent. of the cost of constructing a vessel of similar size and material.

Mr. HALE. Shall not be repaired if the cost is more than 25 per cent.

Mr. INGALLS. Shall not be repaired if the cost is more than 25 per cent. the amendment of our committee being to substitute "twenty-five" for "thirty," the percentage named in the proviso of the House bill.

Any one who is familiar with the operations in regard to the iron-clad portion of our Navy for the last few years under which one vessel, as I remember, that cost nearly $2,000,000 was broken up and sold for less than $50,000, and under which contract the Government was called upon to pay for the expense of breaking up and taking the old material to pieces and putting it in the hands of the contractor, will see that there needs to be some limitation upon the power of those who have the control of the Navy to break up and sell old ships and to repair old ships, and I am in favor of putting into this bill some limitation that shall prevent the extraordinary waste and profusion and extravagance which have prevailed heretofore, in consequence of which for this vast appropriation of more than $300,000,000 we are able to show to-day but this beggarly account of one hundred and forty wretched, miserable vessels, of which only about one-fifth can by any possibility be rendered effective for sea.

Mr. President, I do not believe that there is in this country any very great demand for an immense navy. What do we want with a navy? The vast spaces of sea that spread between our coasts and those of any hostile power forbid the possibility of any invasion of our coast by any warlike nation of Europe. We have no foreign commerce to protect; we have no allies to champion. There is no probability that we shall have any great war with any foreign power within a brief space of time; and even if it were so, such is the condition of naval science that there is no fleet that could to-day be constructed that would not within the space of five years be rendered absolutely worthless in consequence of the improvement of gunnery.

Look at the Inflexible, the great English iron-clad and floating battery, that within the last few days has been engaged in the bombardment of Alexandria, an immense structure carrying four eighty-ton guns, whose projectiles weighed 1,750 pounds, that had a muzzle energy of a mile in four seconds when they were projected at the expenditure of three hundred and seventy pounds of powder, every explosion costing a thousand dollars. What possible structure can be built that will resist such projectiles as that?

The constant effort of modern science appears to be in the first place to construct a ship so armored that no projectile can penetrate it, and next to invent a gun that shall throw a projectile that no armor can resist; and thus far it has been about an even contest. Now, sir, as I said, the problem before us is not to resist foreign invasion or foreign war. The problem that we are to meet in connection with naval construction is sea-coast defense, and such is the curvature of the coast of the United States that a hostile fleet, assembling or rendezvousing at the Bahama Islands, is within four days' sailing distance of any commercial port on the Atlantic seacoast, from Portland to Saint Augustine, while if we are to assemble a fleet for the purpose of resisting such a demonstration, no concentration of force can be made within a space of less than ten days. So that if we are to have a navy for the purpose of protecting our coast, we must build one that shall be large enough to place at every important seaport, at every vulnerable commercial point, a force that shall be able to resist any force that can be brought against it by an attacking power.

Does anybody suppose that the American people propose to enter upon a system like that? Is it to be supposed that there is to be an expenditure that shall enable us to meet conditions like that? I do not believe that there is any desire on the part of the American people to enter into any such scheme as this, to attempt, by the expenditure of vast sums of money to resort to these old obsolete methods, and these antiquated systems of warfare that have been practically abandoned, and that can never be repeated.

I shall therefore vote in the direction of restraint upon any expenditure in the line indicated by the friends of a great navy, and if there is any method by which the scandal and extraordinary expenditures in the way of construction and repair that have been carried on during the last ten years can be prevented, I also shall very cordially vote for that.

Mr. BECK. I withdraw the appeal I took from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the appeal.

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon; I was not aware of that.

Mr. ALLISON. It can be withdrawn by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly; it can be withdrawn by unanimous consent.

Mr. HALE. I do not think anybody will object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the appeal is withdrawn.

Mr. BLAIR. Does that leave the point of order sustained?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So the Chair understands.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not concur in all that has been said by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.] I believe that it is proper and right to have a sufficient navy to protect our commercial interests and uphold the honor of this Government wherever it is necessary that it shall be done; but I do concur with him in the expression of the opinion that it is no fault of Congress in the appropriations made that our Navy to-day is in so deplorable a condition as has been described. We have appropriated within the last twenty years—

Mr. HOAR. Before the Senator proceeds will the Chair state the question?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I shall occupy but a moment or two.

Mr. HOAR. I only want to know what the question is.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I shall occupy but a few moments.

An aggregate of $695,266,593.93 that has been appropriated for naval purposes since 1860; and yet after the expenditure of that vast amount the Senator from Kansas tells us to-day that we have nothing left but the débris of a navy. What has become of the money appropriated? I believe myself, as was expressed by the Senator from Kansas, that the cause is the incompetent management of the funds appropriated by Congress.

Mr. PLUMB. Did the Senator extend his research to twelve or fourteen years preceding the war?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I did; but I have not the figures here; they will be found in the finance reports; but prior to 1860 there was never more than about $14,000,000 appropriated in any one year. I believe in 1858 there was about $14,000,000 appropriated, out of which, I think, we built some seven or eight or ten vessels for the Navy; but from the appropriations that have been made since 1860 what additions have been made to the Navy? It is true that during the war a large part of the money appropriated was used in extemporizing a navy to meet the exigencies of the occasion; but, leaving out the days of the war and commencing with 1869, with the incoming of the administration of President Grant, we have spent very near $300,000,000 for the Navy, and yet the Navy has continued to decline in all those years. Secretary Robeson in his report for 1876 undertook to maintain before the country that our Navy was in fine condition and would compare favorably with many of the navies of the world. After describing the vessels that we had in 1869, two hundred and three, he said:

Of the 203 vessels of 1869, there have been sold 46; broken up, 18; lost at sea, 5—69 vessels; thus reducing the number to 134 vessels. To which add the addition made to the Navy since 1869, of new vessels, 10; purchased vessels, 2; making the whole number on the register at the present time 146 vessels.

It does not compare, either in number or character of vessels, with the expensive establishments of those European nations whose mutual relations keep them always in armed array, whose contiguous coasts and deep harbors at home, and scattered colonies all over the world, seem to require that they should constantly rival each other, at whatever expense, in the size and power of their naval vessels and armaments; but for the defensive purposes of a peaceful people, without colonies, with a dangerous coast, and shallow harbors, separated by a vast ocean from warlike naval powers, our Navy is not without strength, and when its iron-clad fleet shall be completely repaired, a work requiring now but little time and expense, and its force supplemented by the comparatively cheap addition herein recommended, it will, I think, be found sufficient to resist any force which could be brought across the ocean to attack us; and powerful also for offensive operations upon the seas and among the islands which lie contiguous to our own shores.

The Secretary of the Navy at that time, Mr. ROBESON, asserted before the country that we had a very good Navy for our purposes, (an assertion which no one believes,) and yet to-day we hear from the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS.] that our naval armament fit for service, or that can be rendered fit for service, is some thirty-eight or forty ships of war, and that, too, after the vast expenditure to which he referred, an expenditure of nearly $300,000,000, and our Navy constantly going down. What encouragement is there for the Senate to vote money to be placed in incompetent hands to construct a navy? While I am perfectly willing and desirous to see this country with a proper navy to maintain its honor in every sea, I am unwilling, unless there is some plan devised by which the money appropriated by Congress shall be judiciously expended in the construction of vessels, to vote appropriations.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator a question. I think that proposition is good and I agree with him; but has he examined carefully this elaborate plan that was put on in the House, hedging in and surrounding and guarding the expenditure of any money to be spent by the Navy Department for new ships?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have read the bill over, and I find that the House of Representatives do undertake to put on some restrictions and some guards in that regard, but there is a larger amount of discretion left by the bill with the Secretary of the Navy than I am willing to invest him with as long as we put at the head of the Navy a mere politician. The experience of this country has demonstrated that all the gentlemen who have filled that position for the last fifteen years have been wanting in qualifications for the position and incompetent to deal with this question—men who have been placed in that position because of the fact that they were politicians, and not skilled in the naval service or acquainted with the naval wants of the country?

Mr. HALE. I wish the Senator when we come to that part of the bill would be ready to offer any amendments that will any further guard and make safe the expenditures of money. I want to see it done everywhere.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not profess to be sufficiently acquainted with the construction of naval ships to be able to frame, upon the consideration of a bill after it is called up, proper amendments to secure what ought to be done. That ought to be done by the committees charged in this body and in the other House with the consideration of the subject.

Mr. HALE. This provision was put on by the Naval Committee of the House after considering it all winter.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have no doubt it is an improvement upon the condition of affairs that has existed; but at this late hour of the session, when there is not sufficient time, unless we remain here longer than we ought to, to consider the proposition made by the committee of the House or of the Senate, we ought not to go into the expenditure of any vast amount of money for the purpose of building up a navy without placing its expenditure in competent hands. I came here at this session of Congress prepared to vote ten or twelve millions of dollars if necessary for the construction of naval vessels if the proper assurance could be made that the money so appropriated would be judiciously and wisely expended. I believe that this great country ought to have a navy, not for show, not for the purpose of competing on exhibition with the naval powers of Europe, but so that if the honor of this country was attacked or any insult offered to its flag in any sea, we should have a naval armament sufficient to resent the insult and vindicate the wounded honor of the country. But let me say here now while the heads of the Navy Department of this Government are selected because they are politicians and not because they are men acquainted with the wants of the Navy, you will never inspire sufficient confidence in the people of the country to justify an expenditure of any large amount for the building up of a navy.

This is about all I care to say. While I am in favor of maintaining a proper navy I utter the conviction of my mind when I say that the people of this country will never be willing to see a large amount of money taken out of the Treasury for the purpose of building ships of war until your Naval Department is controlled by men distinguished not as politicians but as possessing requisite knowledge of the matters pertaining to the Department over which they are called to preside.

Mr. HALE. Now, I hope the reading of the bill will go on.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine a question which relates to this matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no question before the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. The question before the Senate I believe is on the general bill, the naval appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly, but there is no specific question.

Mr. HOAR. I am going to put one. I rose for the very purpose of having a specific question before the Senate, if the Chair will pardon me. Should there not be annexed to this paragraph which the Senate is considering a provision which will authorize the Secretary of the Navy in his discretion to repair and bring home a vessel which may be damaged in foreign waters? A great many of our Government ships are floating in distant seas abroad on various errands. Now, suppose one of those is injured more than 25 per cent. by a storm, or a wreck, or a collision. This clause absolutely prohibits that; he cannot sell them without an act of Congress, as I understand; he has got to leave them in foreign waters. Now, if I am not mistaken, it is either 50 or 66 per cent. of damage which is required to authorize abandonment to the underwriters as a total loss in the ordinary law of marine insurance. It seems to me this is rather strict. I call the attention of the Senator from Maine to the point.

Mr. HALE. I see what is laboring in the mind of the Senator from Massachusetts. There might be a rare case of a ship damaged by a collision or running on to the rocks where the damage would be more than 25 per cent. of the value or cost; but such a case is so unlikely to occur that the provision put in by the House did not embody anything covering such an instance. What is sought to be remedied here is the abuse that everybody has complained of heretofore of letting naval ships run down and continue out of repair for years until they had got to be so low and so poor that in effect you were reconstructing them when you repaired them.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that. I am quite sure the whole Senate understand the purpose of the committee's amendment and approve it. I was about to suggest that there should be added after the word "material," in line 460:

Provided, Nothing herein contained shall deprive the Secretary of the authority to order repairs of ships damaged in foreign waters so far as may be necessary to bring them home.

Mr. HALE. I see no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) Does the Senator from Massachusetts move that amendment?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is this the place for general amendment to the text of the bill?

Mr. HALE. It is not.

Mr. HOAR. But this is so plain a matter that I thought it better to do it now than go back to it hereafter.

Mr. HALE. And for the sake of getting on with the bill I consented to it. I will not make any further explanation, but let the reading proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, if there be no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will proceed.

The Acting Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 463, after the word "authorize," to insert "at a total cost, when fully completed, not to exceed the amounts estimated by the late naval advisory board for such vessels;" and in line 466, after the word "having," to insert "as near as may be;" so as to read:

Any portion of said sum not required for the purposes aforesaid may be applied toward the construction of two steam cruising vessels of war, which are hereby authorized, at a total cost, when fully completed, not to exceed the amounts estimated by the late naval advisory board for such vessels, the same to be constructed of steel of domestic manufacture, having as near as may be a tensile strength of not less than 60,000 pounds to the square inch, and a ductility in eight inches of not less than 20 per cent.; said vessels to be provided with full sail-power and full steam-power.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE. I wish to offer an amendment. In line 466, after the word "manufacture," I move to insert the words:

Provided, It can be constructed at the cost of the foreign article less the tariff duties.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from North Carolina that the rule under which, by consent, the Senate is proceeding is that the committee amendments shall be first acted on, after which all amendments that are offered will be considered.

Mr. VANCE. Very well, sir; I was not aware of the rule.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator from Maine one question, by way of explanation? What is the meaning of "the late naval advisory board?"

Mr. HALE. That is a board that was appointed, and which is revived by this bill. It is a board that was appointed and performed its work in the last year and the year before.

Mr. BUTLER. I see on page 21 it is proposed to strike out the provision of the House and insert "naval advisory board." Is that the same board?

Mr. HALE. The same board. That board is revived by this bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Why call it "the late naval advisory board?"

Mr. HALE. Because the report was made by that board, whose functions ended; but for the sake of scrutiny and of safeguard and of managing and directing the expenditure of money that board is revived under the name of the naval advisory board.

Mr. BUTLER. May I inquire who composed that naval board?

Mr. HALE. I do not remember the personnel. I know some of the officers, but I cannot name them all. They were distinguished officers of the Navy.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 473, after the word "be," to insert "adapted to be;" and in line 481, after the word "be," to insert "adapted to be;" so as to read:

One of said vessels shall be of not less than 5,000 nor more than 6,000 tons displacement, and shall have the highest attainable speed, and shall be adapted to be armed with not more than four breech-loading rifled cannon, of high power, of not less than 8-inch caliber, or two of 10-inch caliber, and not more than twenty-one breech-loading rifled cannon, of high power, of not less than 6-inch caliber; one of said vessels shall be of not less than 4,300 nor more than 4,700 tons displacement, and shall have the highest attainable speed, and shall be adapted to be armed with four breech-loading rifled cannon, of high power, of not less than 8-inch caliber, or two of 10-inch caliber, and not more than fifteen breech-loading rifled cannon, of high power, of not less than 6-inch caliber.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 487, after the word "the," to strike out "naval board of advice and survey" and insert "naval advisory board;" so as to read:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby empowered and directed to organize a board of naval officers and experts for his advice and assistance, to be called the naval advisory board, to serve during the period required for the construction, armament, and trial of the vessels hereby authorized to be constructed, and no longer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 496, before the word "experts," to insert "as;" in the same line, after the word "in," to strike out "science and in the arts of ship-building, steam-engineering, and naval ordnance" and insert "naval or marine construction;" and in line 501, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "eleven;" so as to read:

Said board shall consist of five officers on the active list of the Navy in the line and the staff, to be detailed by the Secretary of the Navy, without reference to rank and with reference only to character, experience, knowledge, and skill, and two persons of established reputation and standing as experts in naval or marine construction, to be selected from civil life and employed for this sole duty by the Secretary of the Navy, and to be paid such sum out of the appropriation hereby made, not exceeding $11,000, as he may direct.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 506, after the word "armament," to insert "nor in any contract for the same;" so as to read:

Provided, however, That no person shall be a member of said board who has any interest, direct or indirect, in any invention, device, or process, patented or otherwise, to be used in the construction of said vessels, their engines, boilers, or armament, nor in any contract for the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 520, after the word "or," to strike out the word "any."

Mr. BAYARD. A direction has been given that it is the duty of this advisory board "to advise and assist the Secretary," and that they shall inspect the work, examine the material, and it goes on to say:

But said board shall have no power to make or enter into any contract, nor to direct or control any officer of the Navy, the chief of any bureau of the Navy, or any contractor.

I agree that that is all in accord because of the necessities of the case; but I propose to strike out, after the word "contractor," in line 520, to and including the word "Secretary," on line 521, the words "but shall in all things be subject to the order and direction of said Secretary."

It is not intended that they should be "subject to the order and direction of said Secretary." They are an advisory board, and while they may not control a contract or order officers the language there would make them the simple subordinates of the Secretary, whereas their duty is really to be independent of him as an advisory board. I move to strike out the words after the word "contractor," on line 520, to the word "Secretary," on line 521, as I have indicated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Delaware that under the rule that the Senate is acting upon by unanimous consent, the committee amendments are first considered, and then the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware will be in order.

Mr. BAYARD. It is purely a verbal error, and I supposed there would be no objection to it.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will withhold that until we get through I do not see any objection to it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There is no objection whatever. Why not have it done now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment in line 520, to strike out the word "any."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand there is no objection on the part of the committee to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HALE. I would rather not break in on the rule we have followed.

Mr. BAYARD. Let it stand over.

Mr. HALE. Let it stand over, and it can easily be considered hereafter.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 533, after the word "exceed," to strike out "one" and insert "five;" so as to read:

Neither of the vessels hereby authorized to be built shall be contracted for or commenced until full and complete detail drawings and specifications thereof, in all its parts, including the hull, engines, and boilers, shall have been provided or adopted by the Navy Department, and shall have been approved, in writing, by said board, or by a majority of the members thereof, and by the Secretary of the Navy; and after said drawings and specifications have been provided, adopted, and approved as aforesaid, and the work has been commenced or a contract made for it, they shall not be changed in any respect when the cost of such change shall in the construction exceed $500, except upon the approval of said board, or a majority of the members thereof, in writing, and upon the written order of the Secretary of the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 552.

Mr. BAYARD. I desire to call attention to the words in line 552. The notice called "proper notice" ought to be "by publication for a given time." I merely draw the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to that point now, that notice of the contracts ought to be public notice for a certain length of time in order that there may be proper competition.

Mr. BECK. There is a general law now requiring not less than a month's notice in all that class of cases, I think.

Mr. BAYARD. I am not going to offer an amendment to disturb the order in which the Senator in charge of the bill desires it to be considered, but I merely make the suggestion now that I shall offer an amendment at the proper time requiring that this notice shall be given by publication for a given period.

Mr. HALE. We have, at the suggestion of the Secretary I may say, made that so that the notice shall be not less than sixty days.

Mr. BAYARD. That is where?

Mr. HALE. On the top of the next page; and if anything more is needed to be inserted as to its being public notice I certainly have no objection to that going in. What we desire is that the notice shall be full and ample in every way.

Mr. BAYARD. There ought to be proper notice by publication.

Mr. HALE. When the bill is read through, that can be arranged. The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 560, after the word "not," to strike out "exceeding" and insert "less than;" so as to read:

Before any of the vessels hereby authorized shall be contracted for or commenced, the Secretary of the Navy shall, by proper notice, invite all engineers and mechanics of established reputation, and all reputable manufacturers of vessels, steam-engines, boilers, and ordnance having or controlling regular establishments and being engaged in the business, all officers of the Navy, and especially all naval constructors, steam-engineers, and ordnance officers of the Navy having plans, models, or designs of any vessels of the classes hereby authorized, or of any part thereof, within any given period not less than sixty days, to submit the same to said board.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "said," in line 573, to strike out "board of advice and survey" and insert "naval advisory board;" so as to read:

Provided, That said naval advisory board herein provided for shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, prepare plans, drawings, and specifications for vessels, their machinery and armament, recommended by the late naval advisory board not herein authorized to be built.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Steam-Engineering," in the clause making appropriations "for repairs, completion, and preservation of machinery and boilers in vessels on the stocks and in ordinary," in line 592, after the word "exceed," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to read:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be applied to the repair of engines and machinery of wooden ships where the estimated cost of such repair shall exceed 25 per cent. of the estimated cost of new engines and machinery of the same character and power.

Mr. BLAIR. I raise the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. HALE. Let that take the same course the other did.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order raised by the Senator from New Hampshire; it is exactly the same that was ruled on some time ago.

Mr. BLAIR. This applies to machinery with still greater force than to an old vessel. I desire at the proper time to move a similar amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Let me ask right there, so that I may understand the rule, would it be in order to amend "thirty" by inserting "thirty-five?"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not hesitate to say that it would not be.

Mr. ALLISON. I want the Chair to speak without hesitation. I only wanted to call attention to the fact that we must take these provisions of the House as they stand and reject or adopt them as a whole, which it seems to me is about as absurd a proposition as could well be expressed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has ruled and continues to rule that where a proposition from the House is purely one of general legislation, any modification of a proposition to legislate generally is general legislation, and is therefore, under Rule 29, out of order.

Mr. BLAIR. I desire now to make a parliamentary inquiry. I think the ruling of the Chair is very distinctly understood. I have supposed—otherwise there is no remedy and none can be devised—that it would be in order, this amendment being rejected by the raising of the point of order and the text remaining then precisely as it comes to us from the House, to move to strike out the entire House proviso as an entirety. That is to say, as an illustration in this case, commencing in line 590, with the word "provided," and striking out all down to and including the word "power," in line 594. It is a distinct provision in the House bill, and the committee amendment having been eliminated by the raising of the point of order nothing is in that provision but the language of the House, and the motion to strike it out as a whole I suppose must be in order, and I should like an intimation of the opinion of the Chair on that point.

Mr. COCKRELL. It certainly would not be in order under the decision of the Chair. That is changing and amending the legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In answer to the parliamentary inquiry of the Senator from New Hampshire, the Chair will say that where any proposition contained in this bill as it comes from the House is purely legislative in its character, a motion to strike out the whole of it would be in order. A motion to modify it or change its terms would be general legislation.

Mr. BLAIR. Then in this instance a motion may be made to strike out this proviso:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be applied to the repair of engines and machinery of wooden ships where the estimated cost of such repair shall exceed 30 per cent. of the estimated cost of new engines and machinery of the same character and power.

That being a simple proviso, entire in itself, would it be in order to make a motion to strike it out?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If it be a simple proviso wholly independent of other legislative propositions, not connected with them, it certainly would be in order to move to strike it out, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will let the reading of the bill be proceeded with, and raise that question at the proper time. The Senator can bring that up when the reading is through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it would perhaps be better to raise these questions of order when the point is reached where they apply.

Mr. BECK. I desire not at this moment to offer an amendment but to give notice of a proposed amendment and to ask to have it printed—perhaps the bill may not be passed to-night—to strike out "$1,000,000," in line 595, and in lieu thereof insert "$400,000;" and to strike out, in line 601, after the word "and," all down to and including line 621, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That no further steps shall be taken or contracts entered into or approved for the repair or completion of any of the four iron-clads aforesaid until the further order of Congress. And the naval advisory board created by this section is directed to report in detail by the 1st day of December, 1882, as to the wisdom and expediency of undertaking and completing the engines, armor, and armament of said iron-clads, and whether a change in the original plan or plans should be made, together with the cost of the completion of each according to plans recommended, if the completion of any of them is recommended.

I desire to have that printed, so that it may be looked at carefully, my object being neither to affirm nor to deny the validity of any existing contracts, nor to pass upon the question whether they were legal or illegal, whether they were judicious or injudicious, whether the Puritan will sink when she is launched or whether she will float; but as we have created an advisory board and the time is short and December will soon come, I want to have the advice of that board before any further step is taken in regard to these four iron-clads. We have paid for all the work done upon them. They are encumbering the yards of the contractors. We have to pay for keeping them there, or certainly we ought to. I was there once and examined them. We ought to launch them. They are ours; they are paid for; and we ought to take them out of the way of these men and hold onto them until we see whether we ought to finish them according to the original plan or change the plan, or whether we ought to recognize the old contracts or disapprove them. It is but a short time until December, and as we are creating a naval advisory board we ought to get their advice on all these subjects before we proceed any further.

Mr. BUTLER. Why $400,000?

Mr. BECK. Because it will require between $300,000 and $400,000; I think $300,000 perhaps would do; but $400,000 will be ample to finish the armor and turrets of the Miantonomoh, launch these four ships, and put them in condition to be taken care of.

Mr. BUTLER. Is that what the $400,000 is for?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir; to finish the Miantonomoh, now ready for her turret and armament, and to launch the four monitors and place them in our own waters, have them painted up and preserved, and remove them away from the yards where they are now perhaps lying at our expense, and where they may be damaged by staying longer. We all agree that they ought to be taken out of where they are. They can be finished in the water as well as they can in the yards. I desire to give an ample sum to finish the Miantonomoh and take these four ships out of the yards, and in the mean time bridge over the difficulty we have had, about which a good deal has been said, and on which I do not propose to say anything as to the way the contracts were made, as to whether they could be done cheaper, as to whether we should change the plans according to new information.

We are now creating a new board, and I think the Secretary, Congress, and everybody is well satisfied that we should take a little time to know more about this business before we proceed any further.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to present an amendment on the subject of ordnance to be printed. I ask that it be printed, and in connection with it I desire to call the attention of the Senate to some tables which appear in the remarks of Hon. Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, in a speech he made in the House on June 28 and 29, which they will find a very remarkable collation of facts and statistics necessary to give information on this subject.

Mr. HALE. A very valuable speech.

Mr. BAYARD. I wish to submit to the discretion of the Senator in charge of the bill an amendment to the amendment of the committee beginning at line 602. I refer to it now as a matter of convenience, and it is irrespective of the amendment suggested by the Senator from Kentucky but not yet offered. At line 602 the Committee on Appropriations have proposed, striking out certain preceding words, to insert a clause relating to the four iron-clad steamers the Monadnock, Puritan, Amphitrite, and Terror, to provide for the launching to the best advantage of these vessels, "under the Bureau of Steam-Engineering, subject to the conditions hereinafter provided," and for "beginning and continuing to completion of work upon the engines and machinery of such vessels as he," that is the Secretary of the Navy, "may, on examination, think most expedient and best for the interests of the service."

The Senate will perceive on the following page that the naval advisory board is, after all, the board to whose counsel the Senate proposes to look as to whether they shall embark upon a system of naval construction or not. I desire, and will put the question now if it does not disturb the consideration of the bill in the mode agreeable to the Senator from Maine, that on line 605 we strike out the words "of such;" so that the amendment will read:

Under the Bureau of Steam-Engineering, subject to the conditions hereinafter provided, to the beginning and continuing to completion of work upon the engines and machinery of said vessels.

And then strike out:

As he may on examination think most expedient and best for the interests of the service.

I may as well now say what I mean to say on this subject. It so happens that one of these proposed double-turreted monitors is being built by some constituents of mine. I have seen this iron vessel on several occasions; it is not distant more than three-quarters of a mile from the hill-top on which I live. I know a good deal about the condition of this vessel, and I know a great deal more about the character of the people who have constructed her so far.

A good deal has been said in another place, and a good deal published in respect of the contract for building these vessels, or rather I will confine my remarks to the building this one ship, the Amphitrite. I believe those contracts are at an end, that they were arrested in 1877 by Mr. Thompson, of Indiana, then Secretary of the Navy, almost immediately upon his coming into office. The contracts were abandoned under his notification, and the contractors were, all of them, paid a quantum meruit for the work and material which they had put upon the ships, and so far as that is concerned they are at quits with the Government. They have still a claim against the Government, arising from the occupation of the sites in their yards by the hulls of these ships for the last six years. The people who are building this vessel, the Amphitrite, are known by the name of the Harlan & Hollingsworth Company. They are constituents of mine; they have held and still hold to me the relation of counsel and client, professionally.

Their character both as workmen and as citizens is a matter in which I have an honest pride; they have been assailed most gratuitously, most ignorantly, and most unjustly. I hold in my hand, from a paper published in Delaware yesterday, the description of the launching of a vessel of 3,500 tons by this firm from the very shipyard and right alongside of where the Amphitrite lies, and she is referred to because she was covered over and became a convenient place for spectators to witness the launch. The vessel they launched will carry 9,000 bales of cotton, a perfect modern ship for merchant service, as good as any that Great Britain can turn out. The firm they built her for are men they have dealt with for twenty years, and this is the thirty-first vessel they have built for those men. There never has been a word, a quarrel, a ripple of discontent, or litigation of any sort. They have none with anybody, because they are capable, honest mechanics; they know what they are about; they are perfectly competent to fulfill their engagement, whether they make it with the Government of the United States or whether they make it with a private individual. They are able to build any man-of-war whose lines can be devised by the advisory board in this country or out of it. They are able to give security for every contract they enter into. They have built men-of-war and furnished them to the Government perfect and equipped in all respects, not a word being said about them.

Now, I only ask that Congress shall take the steps to move that vessel away from that yard, to put the vessel in such degree of completion as shall enable her to be launched and moved, but that that shall not rest with the discretion merely of the Secretary of the Navy. I do not propose to leave him the discretion to move such of these four vessels as he sees fit. I wish that vessel moved out and the people simply paid for what they have done. They are not beggars; they are not lobbyists; they have no secret agencies or influences to impress upon anybody, but I simply want them dealt with just as honest citizens ought to be dealt with by their Government.

Therefore I do not propose so far as I can help it that there shall be any doubt in regard to the completion of this double-turreted monitor devised by Government constructors, built by them on Government application, so far as she has been finished, and I do not propose that there shall be any more doubt about or mere discretion resting upon it. Take the vessel away, and let the money now applied be applied under the control of the advisory board to complete the vessel, either as to machinery or otherwise, as far as may be necessary. When the Senator from Kentucky offers $400,000, I will say simply that will not do; we have had two or three reports on these ships, and my impression is that to finish these vessels fit for use, to arm them, to put on their turrets and give them modern machinery, will cost about $3,000,000. And then you will get the four ships for less than Italy pays for one. Whether the plan on which the vessels were proposed to be built was wise or unwise I do not mean to say; I have some impressions of my own on the subject, but they are not in point now.

I would like, with the approval of the committee, to strike out, on page 25, line 605, the words "of such," and then, after the word "vessels," to strike out the words "as he may on examination think most expedient and best for the interests of the service," leaving it to the advisory board to settle the question.

Mr. HALE. I have been much interested in the eulogium of the Senator from Delaware upon his clients and constituents, who certainly, so far as they are known to me, are known as a very honorable and excellent association or firm of gentlemen.

Let us look at this bill for a moment and see whether his friends are not cared for here, for I take it he would not wish that they should be specially cared for more than others.

Mr. BAYARD. No. All I want is certainty.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will go back to the word "that," in line 594, and follow me as I read, he will see whether the launching is provided for:

That $1,000,000 of the above amount shall be applied by the Secretary of the Navy to the following objects, namely: under the Bureau of Construction and Repair, to building and fitting the turrets and pilot-house of the iron-clad steamer Miantonomoh; and to the launching to the best advantage of the iron-clad steamers Monadnock, Puritan, Amphitrite, and Terror.

There the sentence and the meaning ceases. The launching of all these, including the Amphitrite at the yard of his friends, is absolutely provided for and is not left discretionary.

Mr. BAYARD. Now go on.

Mr. HALE. I agree with the Senator that all these vessels ought to be launched. We have paid the bills upon them; they are cumbering the yards of the contractors; they are giving rise each year to claims on the part of these contractors for their yards being occupied, and we ought to take them away, and this provides that they shall be taken away. Now it goes on to a new phase.

And under the Bureau of Steam Engineering—

Shifting the concern where the money shall be expended, and taking up a new subject-matter—

And under the Bureau of Steam Engineering, subject to the conditions herein after provided, to the beginning and continuing to completion of work upon the engines and machinery of such of said vessels as he may—

This does not touch the launching; that is provided for absolutely. The Amphitrite is taken away from his friend's yard, and then we go into a new domain, and that is a much-vexed domain as the Senator knows, whether after taking these vessels away from the contractors, taking them into our possession all of them, we shall begin any new work, and there, following the language, the Senator will find that the committee has tried to guard it and hedge it and surround it and control it in every possible way, for we provide—

And under the Bureau of Steam Engineering, subject to the conditions herein after provided, to the beginning and continuing to completion of work upon the engines and machinery of such of said vessels as he may, on examination, think most expedient and best for the interests of the service; and that any part of the appropriation for said bureau not used as above specified may be applied toward the construction of engines and machinery of the two new cruising vessels provided for in this act: Provided, That all plans for the engines, armor, and armament of the said four last-mentioned iron-clad vessels—

The Amphitrite, Monadnock, Puritan, and Terror, not to touch the question of launching, but for—

All plans for the engines, armor, and armament of the said four last-mentioned iron-clad vessels shall be submitted to the naval advisory board created by this act, for its approval or disapproval—

Not one step can be taken after these vessels are launched excepting by the approval of this board—

And said board, with the same powers, shall also consider and advise as to the wisdom and expediency of undertaking and completing said engines, armor, and armament.

The object of the committee upon this subject that has given rise to much discussion, to very considerable feeling and much heart-burning, was first to take away all these vessels, as the Senator desires, from the yards of the contractors. Then the whole question whether anything more shall be done upon them in the way of armament or engines or machinery shall be submitted to this board, and they shall decide not only what shall be done, but shall also be consulted, and shall advise and decide whether anything shall be done.

I do not think myself—and I have been through a considerable experience on these subjects-matter when I was a member of the other branch—it would be an advisable thing for any head of the Navy Department to set himself in contact with this subject and take it and grapple with it and undertake anything upon it excepting upon the very best advice that he could get. I would not advise him after these ships are taken from the yards to have a stroke of a hammer or an ounce of iron plate or a dollar of expense put on one of them until this board has decided, first, that something should be done, and, second, what should be done, and then I would treat them all alike.

Mr. BAYARD. I think the Senator's advice would be exceedingly wholesome and I think the Secretary would do very well to follow it. I think this advisory board is the most sensible thing in connection with the Navy that I have heard of since I have been a member of the Senate and I hope good will come from it. If the discretion and the judgment of the advisory board controlled this and not the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, I should assent to it.

Mr. HALE. After this exposition, incomplete as it may have been on my part, does not the Senator now think that the question of the launching of all these vessels is taken care of?

Mr. BAYARD. I think it may be; but I think that undoubtedly there is an inconsistency, a palpable inconsistency between the language which it is proposed to exclude from the bill and the proviso on page 26. In one case you give the discretion to the advisory board and in the other you expressly give it to the Secretary. I propose to take out the discretion of the individual and leave it to the control of the advisory board to say how these four ships shall be finished. We may probably by the aid of this board make something useful out of these four double-turreted monitors. I suspect they will be found little more than floating batteries for harbor defense.

I have not the slightest idea that they will be sea-going ships or cruisers, but they may be made very useful for harbor defense by putting proper turrets on them and giving them proper guns, whenever we have the guns; but I submit to the Senator from Maine that in lines 605 and 606 he is vesting the sole discretion in this matter in the Secretary of the Navy, and then on page 26 proposing to give it to the advisory board.

Mr. HALE. Suppose on line 605, after the word "may," I put in, "such vessels as he may, with the advice and approval of the naval advisory board, as hereinafter provided."

Mr. BAYARD. Very well. You have that in the bill before. Why do you want to put it in again? Are you vesting discretion in one sentence in a single officer and in the next adding a proviso vesting it in the advisory board? I am sure the Senator agrees with me.

Mr. HALE. We are after the same thing, I can see.

Mr. BAYARD. I think if we strike out the words "of such," on line 605, and then strike out the words "as he may on examination think most expedient and best," we leave the thing where we wish to leave it; first, that there is to be an absolute launching of the vessels and getting them out of the way, and next there is to be such expenditure as the advisory board shall approve.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BAYARD. Very well.

Mr. HALE. Then it will read:

Under the Bureau of Steam Engineering, subject to the conditions hereinafter provided, to the beginning and continuing to completion of work upon the engines and machinery of such vessels: Provided, That all plans for the engines, armor, and armament of the said four last-mentioned iron-clad vessels shall be submitted to the naval advisory board created by this act, for its approval or disapproval, and said board, with the same power, shall also consider and advise as to the wisdom and expediency of undertaking and completing said engines, armor, and armament.

This last proviso was intended to guard everything, and I think it does.

Mr. ALLISON. But if the Senator from Maine will allow me, the cost of fitting the turrets of the Miantonomoh will be about $200,000, as I remember, and the cost of the launching of these four vessels will be about $100,000; that leaves $700,000 of this million to be applied to the completion or construction of the machinery.

Mr. BECK. No; my understanding is that $300,000, certainly $400,000, will finish the Miantonomoh and launch the four.

Mr. ALLISON. That is just what I said.

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon.

Mr. ALLISON. That there will be about $700,000 of this appropriation left. Now there must be a discretion somewhere, I do not care where, to say which one of these vessels shall be finished.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly; with the naval board.

Mr. ALLISON. But the provision is that this money shall be used in the machinery "of such vessels."

Mr. HALE. Precisely.

Mr. ALLISON. Then he must go on.

Mr. HALE. I do not hold any such thing.

Mr. ALLISON. I must differ with my friend. Is it worth while to begin the construction and the machinery of some one or two and not push them to completion; or must we commence pari passu on all the vessels, with the machinery?

Mr. HALE. I do not understand that the provision if left in that way would oblige work on all to go right on, and that for every quarter of a dollar spent on one we must spend a quarter of a dollar on another, and so on.

Mr. ALLISON. Then the Senator from Delaware does not accomplish his purpose.

Mr. HALE. I do not think he does; I do not think he changes it at all.

Mr. ALLISON. I think somebody ought to have discretion to say on which one of these vessels the money shall be applied.

Mr. HALE. The board will settle that.

Mr. BAYARD. The board will say as to that.

Mr. ALLISON. Is the Senator satisfied with that?

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. The great point was that his friend's vessel should not be left in his yard.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand, and that is clearly provided for.

Mr. HALE. It is, and I do not think this changes it at all.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think we should strike out "of such." That is what I object to.

Mr. BECK. This is perhaps one of the most important portions of this bill. It has cost more time than anything else here and elsewhere, particularly elsewhere. I differ with the majority of the committee and advised them that I did differ somewhat. I believe the Miantonomoh ought to be finished from the proof we have. I believe all four of these iron-clads ought to be launched and taken out of the contractors' yards. We have paid for them and they are ours. But there are many other questions remaining. The provision of the committee leaves it in the power of the Secretary of the Navy if he sees fit to go on and recognize the old contracts of March 3, 1877, believed to be among the last acts of the administration of that Secretary. I have them here. I do not care to put them on the record, as they are long; but here they are. There are a good many questions as to the validity of these contracts, and they have been challenged in a variety of ways.

Mr. HALE. As the Senator knows full well that nobody wants to do anything that recognizes those contracts, and we are seeking to guard and control everything, let me ask the Senator does he think it worth while to enter into a discussion of these old contracts?

Mr. BECK. No, sir.

Mr. HALE. It is an endless sea; it is a sea without a shore.

Mr. BECK. Here they are; I will not refer to them; but as it is now after five o'clock I would rather say in committee than on the floor of the Senate why I want this advisory board to pass upon the whole question before we proceed any further, and then the Secretary, who is himself a new man in the place, can have advice from them, and in December, after that board examines all about these ships, and after he himself is satisfied what is best to do, we can act. If they determine to go on we can appropriate for them; but what I fear is that the amendment as now proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, if this board agree to go on regardless of price, will allow these old contracts to be taken up and carried out. Of course these men cannot be required to carry them out. We have postponed the work so long that nobody would compel them to go on. Great changes perhaps would have to be made.

The amendment I have offered was simply to postpone any further action except to finish the Miantonomoh and launch these four ships, and give us until December to obtain the report of this board; allow the Secretary to see it and tell us what it is, and then we can act intelligently about the amount necessary to carry out the recommendations. I should like that no action should be taken until the morning, so that further consultation may be had about it. If there is any executive business, it being now quarter past five—

Mr. HALE. Let us go on and read through the bill. There are portions of it to which there will be no objection.

Mr. BECK. And pass over this informally until morning.

Mr. HALE. Pass over this informally until morning.

Mr. BECK. I shall be glad to do that.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to offer an amendment intended to be an additional section to the bill. I know it will be subject to an objection, but I hope the Senate will allow it to be received. It is:

And be it further enacted, That all laws and parts of laws authorizing prize-money to the Navy, or any of its officers or men, for any capture or destruction of any vessel, ship, or any other property of any character whatever, are hereby repealed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received, lie on the table, and be printed. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with. The Chair will ask the Senator from Maine where he will have the Secretary commence the reading?

Mr. HALE. Commence reading on line 622.

The reading of the bill was resumed at line 622. The Committee on Appropriations proposed after line 621 to insert:

For the purchase of one testing-machine, for making tests of plate-iron, &c., $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Marine Corps," after line 787, to insert:

For the purchase of forage, $4,680: Provided, That no commutation for forage shall be paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 42, after the word "published," to insert the word "in."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 13 of section 2.

Mr. BUTLER. I beg to call the attention of the Senator from Maine now to an amendment I shall offer just where the Secretary has been reading, after the reading of the bill is completed. I shall move to strike out all after the word "and," in line 13, down to and including the word "Treasury," in line 18, and to substitute the following:

And the Secretary of the Navy shall report the same to Congress at its next session.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator will find that at the end of the section the committee has added a similar provision.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that perfectly well, but that is after the sale has been made of this old material. I want the report to Congress before the sale is made.

Mr. HALE. What the Senator wants is a report of what is unsalable before it is sold.

Mr. BUTLER. Precisely.

Mr. HALE. The Senator will offer that amendment to-morrow morning?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed to line 35 of section 2.

Mr. BUTLER. I beg to give notice that at that point I shall offer an amendment, after the word "register," to strike out all down to and including the word "used," in line 97, on page 38, and insert "and report the same to Congress;" so that the Secretary of the Navy shall report to Congress before any condemnation or sale of condemned vessels.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "sold," in line 95 of section 2, to insert "and the Secretary shall make full report to Congress of the funds so used;" so as to read:

In case any vessel now in process of construction in any navy-yard is found to be unworthy of being completed, and shall be condemned under the provisions of this act, which cannot properly be sold, and it becomes necessary to remove the same, the cost of such removal shall be paid out of the net proceeds derived from the sale of other vessels hereby authorized to be sold, and the Secretary shall make full report to Congress of the funds so used.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the words "section 3," in line 1, to strike out "officers of the Navy shall, whenever the Secretary of the Navy may deem it advisable, be required to perform such duties at the navy-yards and stations as have hitherto been performed by civil employes paid from the appropriations for the civil establishment. And no," and insert "no;" in line 10, after the word "employment," to insert "and also the duration of such service, beyond which time it shall not continue;" and in line 14, after the word "may," to strike out "direct" and insert "deem required by due economy and the public interests;" so as to make the section read:

No officer of the Navy whose pay is appropriated for in this bill shall be employed on any shore duty unless the Secretary of the Navy shall determine that the employment of an officer on such duty is required by the public interests, and shall so state in the order of employment, and also the duration of such service, beyond which time it shall not continue; and all other officers, when not at sea, shall be placed on leave of absence, or waiting orders, or on furlough, as the Secretary of the Navy may deem required by due economy and the public interests.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. I desire to give notice that I shall move to amend, in line 13, by striking out the words "on furlough."

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 4, line 4, after the words "grades of" to strike out "not more than;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. After all vacancies in the lower grades of the line and staff corps of the Navy and Marine Corps shall have been filled, nothing herein shall be construed to prevent the promotion into the appropriate corps and grades of ten of the remaining graduates of the year, at the conclusion of their six years' course, who may stand highest in the order of merit as determined by the academic board of the Naval Academy.

Mr. HALE. That section is taken care of in another part of the bill. I ask that it be stricken out. It was put in by mistake.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine, striking out the last section of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Now, as the bill has been read through, there are a few informal amendments from the committee to which no objection will be made that I will put in in the morning, and I give notice that I shall call the bill up as early as possible to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I see that a portion of section 3, which provides that officers of the Navy, if the Secretary may deem it advisable, shall be required to perform such duties at the navy-yards and stations as have been performed hitherto by civil employes, has been stricken out by the committee. I do not think they ought to be made to perform the duties of civil employes at the navy-yards and stations, but it seems to me they might perform some duties.

Mr. HALE. We thought it was so difficult a thing to settle as to what they could be employed in and what they could not, agreeing fully with the Senator that there are certain things they clearly could not, we deemed it best not to mix it up with the question; so we struck it out.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the concurrent resolution of the House of June 26, 1882, to print 15,000 copies of the report of the Director of the Mint on the annual production of gold and silver in the United States.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing that the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House and of the Senate purchase for use in the Rotunda of the Capitol the thirty-two elastic settees now in said Rotunda, at a sum not exceeding $7 each.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 720) to fix the compensation of the master armorer at the national armory in Springfield, Massachusetts; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 274) to continue the provisions of a joint resolution entitled "A joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government."

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 60) to grant the right of way for a railroad and telegraph line through the lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians to the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. No. 602) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Hyacinthe Robert Agnel, deceased;

A bill (S. No. 790) for the relief of Joseph Hertford;

A bill (S. No. 838) to grant the right of way for railroad purposes through the lands of the United States powder depot near Dover, New Jersey;

A bill (S. No. 1582) to amend the statutes in relation to copyright;

A bill (S. No. 1819) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Elizabeth C. Custer;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 81) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the Saint Lawrence River; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 83) relating to the memorial cards to accompany the memorial address on the life and character of the late James A. Garfield.

PUNISHMENT OF COUNTERFEITING.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, it was Ordered, That the bill (S. No. 1000) to prevent and punish the counterfeiting within the United States of notes, bonds, or other securities of foreign governments be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SAUNDERS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 720) to fix the compensation of the master armorer at the national armory in Springfield, Massachusetts, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ELASTIC SETTEES IN THE ROTUNDA.

The following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That the Sergeants-at-Arms of the House and of the Senate purchase for use in the Rotunda of the Capitol the thirty-two elastic settees now in said Rotunda, at a sum not exceeding $7 each, one-half of the amount to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives and one-half out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 274) to continue the provisions of a joint resolution entitled "A joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government" was read twice by its title.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the joint resolution may be put on its passage. It is absolutely essential that it should be passed, and it ought to be passed to-day if possible. It extends the time to the 3d of August.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I do not object to the joint resolution; I think it will have to pass; but I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether he thinks the time is extended far enough, whether he is sure we shall be ready to adjourn then, or whether another such measure will be necessary?

Mr. ALLISON. I cannot prophesy with reference to that. I only know that we cannot get through before that time.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. BECK. Does that embrace the War Department employes as well?

Mr. ALLISON. It embraces all.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGISLATION ON APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. HAWLEY. I offer an amendment to the rules for reference to the Committee on Rules.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend Rule 29 by adding thereto:

"But provisions for general legislation coming from the House of Representatives as part of a general appropriation bill shall be subject to any amendment germane and relevant to the subject-matter of such proposed general legislation, with the further limitations of this rule."

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to offer a resolution of amendment on the same subject.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to point out to my friend from Connecticut that if the proposed amendment is not referred to the Committee on Rules now but he simply offers it, to-morrow it will be in order to pass it, if there should be a majority favoring it, under the rule.

Mr. HALE. The Senator will not try to do that of course, without the committee considering it, at this late stage of the session.

Mr. HOAR. The Senate would then have entire power over the subject.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know that I care to pursue the course suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The proposed amendment will be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That Rule 20 be amended as follows: Insert after the word "bill," in the second line, the words "except to items or clauses of general legislation contained in such bills as passed by the House."

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, July 23, 1882.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill of the Senate No. 602 for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Hyacinthe Robert Agnel, deceased.

The message also announced that the Senate further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1052) in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and asked a further conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; also, that the Senate had appointed Messrs. BAYARD, WINDOM, and SHERMAN, as managers at said conference on the part of the Senate.

PORTS OF DELIVERY, MISSOURI.

Mr. VAN HORN. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 740, to establish ports of delivery at Kansas City and Saint Joseph, in the State of Missouri, and put the same upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That Kansas City and Saint Joseph, in the State of Missouri, be, and the same are hereby, constituted ports of delivery; and that the privileges of immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise conferred by the act of June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, extended to said ports; and there shall be appointed a surveyor of customs for each of said ports, to reside at the port for which he shall be appointed, who shall receive a salary to be determined in amount by the Secretary of the Treasury, not exceeding $1,000 per annum.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN HORN. Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate bill, has been considered and reported favorably from the Committee on Commerce, and is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury. I will only say that the large importing business of the two cities named in the bill render the establishment of ports of delivery a necessity. And particularly since the opening of railway communication with Mexico that necessity has become imperative, as foreign commerce has now commenced to flow in at the back door of the nation, so to speak; or, in other words, we have both an interior and a maritime front.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, the report of the Committee on Commerce is explicit and convincing in the indorsement of this measure. It is a Senate bill, and, as I am advised, received a very generous support when considered at the other end of the Capitol.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the two cities asking this legislation are entitled to be heard. My honorable colleague, [Mr. VAN HORN,] who has had a large experience in public life as a legislator and journalist, is amply prepared to enter upon the discussion of this bill should it be necessary. I simply wish to say that the city of Saint Joseph, which I have the honor to represent, a city of 40,000 inhabitants and one of the growing cities of the productive Missouri Valley, is of great commercial importance. I hope the bill will pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill. The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and being read the third time, was passed.

Mr. VAN HORN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FREE NAVIGATION, NAVIGABLE WATERS, UNITED STATES.

Mr. BUCKNER. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to take up Senate bill No. 1392, to provide for the removal of obstructions to the free navigation of the navigable waters of the United States and put it upon its passage. This bill is upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. PAGE. I reserve my right to object until after I hear the bill read.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly, objection can be made after the bill is read. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve the right to object until I hear an explanation of this bill.

Mr. BUCKNER. It has been considered by the Committee on Commerce of this House, and unanimously reported by them. It is a bill of very great importance, providing as it does for the free navigation of the navigable waters of this country, and especially has a bearing and importance upon the navigable waters of the West. I hope it will be passed.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Tennessee objects.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Yes, I object. It is too much power to confer on any one man in this country.

MASTER ARMORER AT SPRINGFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I ask that by unanimous consent the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 720) to fix the compensation of the master armorer at the national armory in Springfield, Massachusetts, and that it be brought before the House for present consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in addition to the compensation now allowed and paid to the master armorer at the national armory in Springfield, Massachusetts, there shall be paid to him further compensation at the rate of $1,000 per annum during such time as he shall perform the duties of master machinist at said armory in addition to those of master armorer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to reserve the right to object until the House is fully informed of the nature of this proposition.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I will be glad to make a statement in explanation: this is the unanimous report of the Committee on Military Affairs, and is recommended by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Ordnance. The United States has in its employment at the Springfield armory a gentleman of long experience there and whose services are very valuable. His experience is of great benefit to the Government. Prior to a year ago he held the position of master machinist. On the death of the master armorer he was assigned to the duties also of master armorer; so that he is now called upon to perform the duties of both offices, those of the master machinist and those of the master armorer.

The House will understand those are positions of great responsibility. Under the law the salary of each position is $1,500 a year. The Chief of Ordnance says that the services of this gentleman could not be had by any private establishment for less than $5,000 a year; in other words, his services outside the armory would be worth that much in consequence of his experience and his qualifications for the duties he discharges.

This gentleman, Mr. Porter, is not willing to occupy those two positions and have those responsibilities at a salary of $1,500, and if the extra compensation, without increasing either of the two salaries, is paid to him the Government has the benefit of his experience and services and actually is saving the $500 a year which would be paid if two men were employed to perform the duties of the two offices. There is no question about the facts, and we have the statement of the superior officers as to the qualifications and the entirely satisfactory character of this officer's performance of his duties.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I desire to confirm from my personal knowledge all that has been said by the gentleman from Massachusetts. And I wish to add further that in any private establishment for the manufacture of arms the services of this gentleman would be regarded as exceedingly cheap at any figure less than $5,000 a year.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. There is no question about it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to say a word. I do not consent to this proposition on the ground on which the gentleman from New York seeks to put it. I am not willing that it shall be understood that this salary is increased on the ground mentioned by that gentleman. I can only assent to it as a matter of economy, as I understand it. But I wish to ask my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] this question, whether there is not reason to apprehend that in placing this salary at $2,500—the amount of the two salaries put together—this may be made use of in the future as a precedent for increasing the salaries in other arsenals of the country? Is there not danger of that? We know that salaries are generally made to go up by taking some particular case and increasing the salary in that instance, and then making all the other salaries for that grade correspond.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I am quite in accord with the gentleman from Indiana as to what he is now seeking to guard against. I agree with him precisely as to the general policy. But I want to say this is the only arsenal where arms are manufactured by the Government; and in the next place this gentleman is the only master armorer in this country. Therefore there is no other officer of the same grade whose case is to be met in the same way. Besides, this bill does not increase the salary at all. It merely provides that since this gentleman is burdened with these responsibilities, which are great, he, in consequence of his ability to serve the Government in the faithful and competent way in which he does serve it, shall have additional compensation during such time only as he shall perform the two sets of duties.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to ask my friend from Massachusetts one other question. He is quite sure, I hope, that when this other office comes to be filled the additional salary now to be paid for one of these offices will not remain as a permanent increase.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I drew the bill designedly so as to prevent that. I did not want to increase the compensation and would not do it, because I think that would not be wise. But I do think it is no more than just to the man who holds these positions, and that it is also in the interest of the Government that this should be done to retain his services, because with the addition of this $1,000 the compensation is certainly not more than sufficient to cover his efficient services at the armory.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have great faith in the knowledge of the gentleman from Massachusetts about this matter and in his thrift in such affairs—

Mr. HAZELTON. And his good moral character. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. And I am therefore not inclined to object. But as a general proposition I do earnestly protest against any measure of this kind which might possibly result in a permanent increase of salary.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I only want to say that I am satisfied the gentleman from Indiana has been won over by the merits of the proposition and not by any advocacy of mine.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COX, of New York. I ask unanimous consent—

Mr. McKENZIE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. COX, of New York. I think the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McKENZIE] will withdraw that demand.

Mr. McKENZIE. I do not withdraw it. I insist upon it.

CREEK ORPHAN FUND.

Mr. HASKELL. I desire to call up at this time the message from the Senate announcing non-concurrence in the amendments of the House to the bill of the Senate No. 125, to reimburse the Creek orphan fund, and to move that the House insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment as the conferees on the part of the House of Mr. DEERING of Iowa, Mr. HASKELL of Kansas, and Mr. WELLBORN of Texas.

JAPANESE INDEMNITY FUND.

The SPEAKER also announced as the conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 1052, in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund, Mr. WILLIAMS of Wisconsin, Mr. RICE of Massachusetts, and Mr. DEUSTER of Wisconsin.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEIRCE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. No. 972) creating the Oregon Short-Line Railway Company a corporation in the Territories of Utah, Idaho, and Wyoming, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. No. 1819) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Elizabeth C. Custer.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY NEXT.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope that motion will be agreed to.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 75, noes 34.

Mr. UPSON. No quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HISCOCK and Mr. UPSON were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 112, noes 34.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. UPSON called for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and there were 12 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative not being one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion of Mr. HISCOCK was accordingly agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TEMPORARY PROVISION FOR EXPENDITURES OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. HISCOCK, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 274) to continue the provision of a joint resolution entitled "A joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government;" which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the provisions of the joint resolution entitled "A joint resolution to continue the provisions of a joint resolution approved June 30, 1882, entitled "A joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government," approved July 20, 1882," be, and the same are hereby, extended and continued in full force and effect to and including the 3d day of August, 1882, and the provisions of a joint resolution entitled "A joint resolution authorizing the payment temporarily of certain employees of the War Department, approved July 12, 1882."

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was upon the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. McKENZIE. Upon that question I ask a vote by division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 13.

Mr. McKENZIE. No quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HISCOCK and Mr. McKENZIE were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 126, noes 4.

So (no further count being called for) the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EVENING SESSION FOR PENSION BILLS.

Mr. BROWNE. Inasmuch as the House has determined to adjourn from to-day until Monday next, I ask that the special order providing for a session to-night for the consideration of bills from the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions may be vacated, and that a similar order be made for a night session on Monday next.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to submit some reports from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am disposed, as soon as a little business is done by unanimous consent, if there is any such, to move that the House adjourn.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask consent to make some reports from the Committee on Military Affairs.

There was no objection.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON, ETC.

Mr. BAYNE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, by unanimous consent, reported back with favorable recommendations the following bills; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 6815) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish condemned cannon for the soldiers' monument at Utica, New York.

A bill (H. R. No. 6817) to donate four condemned cannon to Henry Wilson Post No. 68, Grand Army of the Republic, Slaterville, New York, for monumental purposes in the cemetery at that place;

A bill (H. R. No. 6818) donating condemned cannon for monumental and other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6826) to authorize the Secretary of War to turn over to Williams Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Mystic, Connecticut, four condemned cannon and four cannon-balls; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6829) to authorize the Secretary of War to donate to the Monumental Association of Pickaway County, Ohio, five condemned cast-iron cannon and five cannon-balls.

Mr. BAYNE also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 6821) donating condemned cannon to the Monumental Association of Allegheny County, Pennsylvania; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McKENZIE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. PAGE. I ask unanimous consent to have passed a bill reported from the Committee on Commerce, known as the tonnage bill. I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. McKENZIE. I demand the regular order.

Mr. TUCKER. What is the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The regular order will be proceedings under the Pound rule for one hour.

Mr. RANDALL. I understood that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] moved to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman merely gave notice of his intention to submit such motion.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the motion to adjourn will not be made now, for the reason that we are anxious to receive from the Senate a notification of the appointment of a conference committee on the legislative appropriation bill. Certainly we ought not to adjourn until the Senate has had time to take such action.

Mr. TUCKER. I would like to add that I believe the House has not considered the Private Calendar during the last three months, and I see no reason why we should not go on with it to-day.

ADVERSE REPORTS FROM THE COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

Mr. VAN HORN, from the Committee on Printing, reported back adversely the following joint resolutions, &c.; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 2) to provide for the printing of 5,000 copies of the reports on Zoology;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 53) to provide for the printing or purchase of copies of the work entitled Lamphere's United States Government;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 157) to provide for the printing of 100,000 copies of the address of Hon. James G. Blaine in honor of the memory of James Abram Garfield, late President of the United States;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 168) to print the report of the board of medical experts, and appropriating money therefor;

Concurrent resolution providing for publishing 150,000 copies of Helper's Three Americas Railway; and Petition of citizens of Otsego County, New York, asking that Congress publish its proceedings in newspaper form weekly, to be sent free to every family in the United States.

EMPLOYÉS OF GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

Mr. VAN HORN also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 3254, a bill (H. R. No. 6844) to fix the compensation of certain employés in the Government Printing Office, and repealing all laws in conflict therewith; which was read a first and second time, placed on the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SOCIETY OF THE RED CROSS.

Mr. VAN HORN, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution (S. R. No. 73) providing for the publication at the Government Printing Office of certain information in aid of the Society of the Red Cross.

Mr. VAN HORN. I ask that this resolution be put on its passage.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, in the printing and publication of necessary information concerning the Society of the Red Cross, for the amelioration of the sufferings of soldiers in time of war, under the recent accession of the United States to the Geneva convention for the organization of said societies, and giving a brief history of such organization and the results thereof.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRODUCTION OF GOLD AND SILVER.

Mr. VAN HORN. I am directed to report from the Committee on Printing two more resolutions which will finish up our business for this session. The committee have directed me to report back, with a recommendation of concurrence in the Senate amendments, the resolution of the House for printing the report of the Director of the Mint in reference to the annual production of gold and silver.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring therein,) That 15,000 copies of the report of the Director of the Mint on the annual production of gold and silver in the United States be printed; 8,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 3,000 for the use of the Senate, and 4,000 for the use of the Director of the Mint.

The following amendments of the Senate were read and concurred in:

Strike out "15,000" and insert "9,000"

Strike out "8,000" and insert "4,000."

Strike out "3,000" and insert "2,000."

Strike out "4,000" and insert "3,000."

FLAGS OF MARITIME NATIONS.

Mr. VAN HORN, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the following resolution of the Senate; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That there be printed from the plates now in the possession of the Bureau of Navigation, Navy Department, 3,000 copies of The Flags of Maritime Nations; of which 800 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 1,200 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for the use of the Navy Department, to be used on board of vessels of the Navy, and for sale at the cost of paper and printing, in accordance with section 432 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. VAN HORN moved to reconsider the various votes upon agreeing to the reports of the Committee on Printing; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RECORD FOR LEGATIONS ABROAD.

Mr. VAN HORN, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 275) to supply the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to American legations and consulates; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

NIGHT WATCHMAN FOR FOLDING-ROOM.

Mr. URNER, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, authorized to employ a night watchman for duty at the folding-room at 217 East Capitol street, at a salary of $75 per month, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Do I understand this resolution is before the House?

The SPEAKER. It is a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does it now come from the Committee on Accounts?

The SPEAKER. It was referred to the Committee on Accounts, and is now reported back favorably.

Mr. URNER. I wish to say in explanation of the resolution that the House some time ago adopted a resolution, reported from the Committee on Ventilation, directing the renting of the house No. 217 East Capitol street for the use of the folding-room. There are about $20,000 worth of public property, as we are informed, stored in that house. They have now no watchman, and the property is only protected by lock and key. The interests of the Government require, as the Doorkeeper states, the employment of a night watchman.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. URNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAPERS OF COMMISSIONERS OF CLAIMS.

Mr. URNER also, from the same committee, reported back the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House cause to have prepared an alphabetical list of the papers received from the late commissioners of claims, which shall contain such action as was had thereupon; that the person designated to perform the service shall receive the same rate of pay as now allowed to committee clerks of the House not receiving annual compensation, and that the expense thereof shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. URNER. That is the resolution which was referred to the Committee on Accounts, but it is reported back with an amendment. I ask that the report be read, which embodies the amendment recommended by the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the resolution as the Committee on Accounts desire to have it passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House cause to have prepared an alphabetical list of the papers received from the late commissioners of claims, which shall contain such action as was had thereupon; that the persons, not exceeding two in number, designated to perform the service shall receive the same rate of pay as now allowed to committee clerks of the House not receiving annual compensation; the work to be completed on or before the 1st day of December, 1882, and that the expense thereof shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman from Maryland will allow me a moment.

Mr. URNER. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. If I understand this resolution it applies only to claims before the Southern claims commission. Am I correct in that?

Mr. URNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Speaker, the duty of arranging these matters belongs properly to the Committee on War Claims. It is a service which devolves on the two clerks of that committee. That committee has now two clerks, one at $2,000 a year and the other at $1,600 a year, and I am sufficiently familiar with that committee to know that this work of preparing this index of these Southern claims should be performed by those two clerks of the War Claims Committee. It is a duty which properly belongs to them and can be performed by them without any inconvenience whatever. They are on the annual roll and are familiar with the reports of the Southern claims commission, so that they are particularly competent to the discharge of this duty.

Now, I regret the Committee on Accounts has seen fit to ask for the employment of two clerks to discharge this duty when we have two clerks already employed by the War Claims Committee on the annual roll whose duty it is to do this very work. There is no reason why other persons should be employed to perform it. It naturally and legitimately belongs to these committee clerks. It is a subject with which they are familiar. If necessary the work should be under the direction of the chairman of that committee. I do not see any reason why the Government should be put to additional expense in this matter.

Mr. URNER. The statement made by the gentleman from Indiana is calculated to produce an erroneous impression in regard to this matter. These papers are not subject to the Committee on War Claims at all. They are papers in the files of the Clerk's office, and are now packed away in boxes.

The Clerk took several members of the Committee on Accounts through these rooms for the purpose of showing the condition in which these papers are preserved and the character of the work to be done, and we have been furnished with a memorandum, which I will print with my remarks for the information of the House. The clerk of the Committee on War Claims has, of course, charge only of the papers filed with that committee; but the papers to which I now refer are those which are in the room of the file clerk of the House, under the control of the chief clerk, and they are filed in this room on the west side of the building, subject only to the control of the file clerk. The clerks of the Committee on War Claims have therefore no right whatever to take charge of these papers or to do anything with reference to them, as they do not come under their control. The facts of the matter are that a great many bills are presented here for claims which originated during the war. Some of these bills have been settled in part by the Southern claims commission and some rejected; but all of the papers are filed away and properly labeled in this room. The total number of claims filed before the Southern claims commission was 22,298, aggregating over $60,000,000. The commission was in existence nine years, and made ten reports to Congress, nine annual and one final report. Of the total number of claims presented, the Southern claims commission allowed in whole or in part 7,413; 9,578 were wholly rejected; 5,250 were barred for non-prosecution, and 57 were withdrawn or dismissed. All of the papers, however, referring to these claims are on file in that room.

The memorandum furnished the committee by the clerk is as follows:

Memorandum as to the necessity of having a list of claims prepared for the use of the House as proposed in the resolution before the Committee on Accounts.

As the committee is doubtless aware, large numbers of claims for property taken for the use of the Government during the war have been and are now being presented to Congress for adjudication. Many of these claims have once been acted upon either by Congress or some of the Departments of the Government, but notwithstanding this they are still presented to Congress either for additional allowances or for a reversal of the action of Congress where it is against them.

For instance, there were filed before the late Southern claims commission 22,298 claims, aggregating over $60,000,000; the commission was in existence nine years and made ten reports to Congress—nine annual and one final. Of these 22,298 claims before the commission, 7,413 were allowed in whole or in part, 9,578 were wholly disallowed, 5,250 were barred for non-prosecution, and 57 were withdrawn or dismissed. The papers constituting all these claims, except those in which allowances were made or those withdrawn or dismissed, are now, with but a very few exceptions, on the files of Congress. As they are filed and recorded in exactly the same order in which they were received from the commission at those stated periods it is extremely difficult readily to produce these papers when called for to be used in connection with claims revived by the same claimants or their Representatives before Congress or elsewhere.

The object of the resolution before the committee is to provide for the necessary expense which will be incurred in preparing such a list.

It is believed that the small expenditure proposed will eventually save the Government a large sum of money by enabling Congress to utilize the information contained in the ten reports of the Southern claims commission by the preparation of a full index, such as is proposed in the resolution.

Now, when any of these claims are revived and the bills are referred to the Committee on War Claims, these files of papers are referred to, as we are informed, for information, and the custodian of the papers has to search through this vast mass of documents in order to obtain the facts in the case. It is necessary, therefore, for the Clerk of this House, through his deputy, to go through these books and papers and search for the claim and ascertain what action has been taken upon it; and it requires time and an immense amount of labor, and sometimes, under the necessity for haste in connection with the matter, it is absolutely physically impossible to find the papers in time so that the Government may be protected against the payment of claims which have already been settled by the Southern claims commission. Now, they have submitted a plan of the work as to how they propose to have these papers all indexed, so that at any time in future easy reference can be had to any of them, and no claim can be paid twice, either through ignorance or inadvertence.

The committee regard this plan as something which will afford exceedingly valuable information to the Government, and which it should possess, not only for convenience in searching for papers among these files, but also to guard the Government against the possibility of loss in the payment of claims already adjudicated.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, to my friend from Maryland that I am rather familiar with the action of the Committee on War Claims upon these papers and their mode of reaching the consideration of such claims. Whenever occasion requires reference to these papers, as the subject properly comes under the jurisdiction of the Committee on War Claims, they have access to the files. At the time the Southern claims commission was in existence of course these papers were all subject to its jurisdiction; but now they come properly before the Committee on War Claims of the House and Senate; and one of the objects of the creation of the Committee on War Claims in 1872 was to take up this mass of material which came from the Southern claims commission and go on with the examination and care and custody of such papers as should from time to time come to the House from that commission.

But the point I wish to make in this connection is this: that no clerk whom we can possibly create by the action of this proposed measure can ever approach in intimate knowledge of the subject-matter of these papers the clerks of the Committee on War Claims, who have been connected with the business for a number of years; and therefore it seems to me that if for no other reason the papers should be left as they are under the control of that committee.

Mr. URNER. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. URNER. I simply desire to ask my friend from Indiana whether the clerks of the Committee on War Claims have any control whatever of the papers in that room, which are now in the custody of the file clerk; and whether they can go in there for the purpose of taking the papers out for examination?

Mr. HOLMAN. Does my friend from Maryland ask that question seriously, as though the power of the House was so limited that it could not confer the power to examine these papers upon one clerk instead of another? It is just as easy to confer this authority and power upon the clerk of the Committee on War Claims as it is upon the Clerk of the House or any other clerk whom we may see fit to appoint; and if he will change the phraseology of this resolution a little he will find that it will accomplish that purpose. You can impose the duty upon any employé of the House, and there is no one who is more intimately associated with the papers and more familiar with them than the clerk of this Committee on War Claims. He has proper charge of the subject-matter, and we are paying annual and liberal salaries for the custody of these papers now, and the performance of this duty. I see no necessity, therefore, for any additional employés at a considerable expense simply to do the work which can be done better under the present system by the clerks of the Committee on War Claims. Let them prepare the index. I object to increasing the number of the employés of the Government more than the public service requires.

Mr. URNER. May I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. URNER. It is this: When a bill is prepared and referred to the Committee on War Claims of the House, having reference to any of these claims which have been adjudicated by the Southern claims commission, is it not the practice of the Committee on War Claims to send for the papers and inquire what has been done in the case by the Southern claims commission?

Mr. HOLMAN. They can send right to the files, as my friend himself goes to the files when he wants any information to be found there. Here is a file clerk having control of these papers and every one has access to them. Does my friend imagine that the clerk of the Committee on War Claims goes to the Clerk of the House to obtain these papers? He goes directly to the file clerk. There is no intermediate process. This is a public office.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman from Maryland allow me to ask him whether the clerk of the Committee on War Claims is not an annual clerk?

Mr. URNER. Of course he is an annual clerk.

Mr. HOLMAN. Both the clerks are.

Mr. RANDALL. Why not have him and his assistant do this work? Why should you pile up employés in this way?

Mr. URNER. This is not part of the duty of the clerk of the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. RANDALL. I think it is his duty.

Mr. URNER. This does not belong to the Committee on War Claims. It is subject to the control of the House of Representatives. These papers are under the control of Dr. Finch, who has had charge of them for fifteen years and is more familiar with them than any one else.

Mr. RANDALL. I know Dr. Finch is one of the most efficient clerks of this House; and I believe if you leave it under his care and have these two annual clerks of the Committee on War Claims do this work it would be well done, without any additional employés. At the proper time I will move to amend the proposition in that way.

Mr. URNER. I submit we have not any right to impose on the clerks of the Committee on War Claims any duty except those that legitimately belong to them under the law. I ask for the previous question on the adoption of the substitute for the resolution.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman might as well say we have not the right to pay those clerks during the recess when they are doing nothing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland calls for the previous question on the substitute reported by the Committee on Accounts for the resolution referred to them.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for a division.

The question being taken, there were—ayes, 19, noes 35.

So (further count not being called for) the previous question was not ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is recognized.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend the proposition so that this work shall be done by the clerks of the Committee on War Claims. I am willing the work should be done, but I think it should be done by employés of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow this resolution to go to the Committee on War Claims, the committee which has had the duty of examining these claims from the beginning, and is more familiar with the subject than any other committee can be. If in order, I move that the resolution and substitute be referred to the Committee on War Claims, with authority to report at any time.

Mr. URNER. I desire to ask a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. URNER. Is it in order for me to withdraw this resolution?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it should be acted upon in some way or other.

The SPEAKER. It may be withdrawn by unanimous consent. If there be no objection the gentleman from Maryland withdraws the report.

Mr. RANDALL. There is objection. I move to amend the substitute so that it will read as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the clerk and assistant clerk of the Committee on War Claims, under the direction of the file clerk of the House, are directed to prepare an alphabetical list of the papers received from the late commissioners of claims, which shall contain such action as was had thereupon, the work to be completed on or before the first day of December, 1882.

Mr. URNER. I move to recommit this whole matter to the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] submits an amendment. The gentleman from Maryland moves to recommit the resolution with the pending amendment to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman will allow this to go the proper committee, the Committee on War Claims.

The question being taken, the motion to recommit to the Committee on Accounts was agreed to.

DANIEL DONOVAN.

Mr. URNER also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 5614) for payment to Daniel Donovan for additional labor and services rendered to the District of Columbia, and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same and that it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

BEAUFORT C. LEE.

Mr. URNER also, from the same committee, reported back the resolution for the relief of Beaufort C. Lee; and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

SETTEES IN ROTUNDA.

Mr. URNER also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the Sergeants-at-Arms of the House and of the Senate purchase for the use of the Rotunda of the Capitol the thirty-two elastic settees now in said Rotunda, at a sum not exceeding $7 each, one-half of the amount to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives and one-half out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I did not exactly catch the object of the resolution from the reading of it.

Mr. URNER. It is a concurrent resolution to authorize the purchase of the settees in the Rotunda. It is asked for by the Architect of the Capitol.

The resolution was agreed to.

MINNIE LYLES.

Mr. URNER also, from the same committee, reported back the resolution for payment out of the contingent fund of the House to Minnie Lyles, widow of Alfred Lyles, late employé of this House, a sum equal to his pay for three months and the proper funeral expenses, and moved that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. URNER moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION AND NATIONAL MUSEUM.

Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee on Printing, reported back with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution (H. R. No. 144) authorizing the Public Printer to print reports of the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Public Printer be, and he hereby is, instructed to print and stereotype, from time to time, the regular number of 1,900 copies of any matter furnished him by the secretary of the Smithsonian Institution relative to the operations, researches, and explorations of the institution and the National Museum, to be capable of being distributed in parts, and the whole to form annual volumes in quarto or octavo, as may be required, with suitable illustrations, to be made under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing; the extra edition of said works to consist of 5,000 copies, of which 2,500 shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 for the use of the Senate, and 1,500 for the use of the Smithsonian Institution, for distribution to public libraries and for exchange, the returns for which to be placed in the Library of Congress.

The question was upon ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] whether he thinks it is good policy to make this permanent appropriation for the publication of the works of this institution without any further action of Congress? And does he deem it proper to extend the same principle to any other department of the Government?

Mr. SPRINGER. These publications of the Smithsonian Institution have become so well understood and reduced to such a system that it is deemed advisable to regulate their printing by general law in order that there may be uniformity in the volumes printed and in the manner of their distribution.

I have here a communication from the secretary of the Smithsonian Institution which I erroneously presented to the House on the 20th of June last in connection with another matter. It relates, however, to this joint resolution, but was by mistake printed heretofore in the RECORD in reference to another subject. If the gentleman desires it, I will have it read now, or it may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope it will be read. I understood that the gentleman was opposed to these indiscriminate publications.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am when they are inconsiderately made, but when they are reduced to a system I think the publications should be made permanent.

Mr. HOLMAN. The same argument would apply to all publications.

The SPEAKER. The communication will be read.

The following communication was read in part, and the whole of it ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION,
Washington, D. C., March 1, 1882.

SIR: I beg to make the following statement in explanation of a resolution offered in the House a few days since in reference to the printing by Congress of certain volumes for the service of the Smithsonian Institution and the National Museum.

Since the Smithsonian Institution began its labors it has printed quite a number of important works of great scientific and practical value. These consist of papers and reports on the recent progress and present condition of our knowledge upon various scientific subjects, such as chemical technology, meteorology, general natural history, astronomy, geography, American antiquities, &c., and constitute a series eagerly sought after as standard works by libraries throughout the United States. The edition printed is usually 1,500 copies, which are distributed—

1. To the principal libraries of the United States which rank in proportion to the number of volumes already in their possession and the position they hold within a certain district;

2. To colleges and academies; and

3. To scientific, technical, and industrial societies publishing transactions and furnishing copies of these in return.

A few special presentations are also made gratuitously to persons engaged in certain researches, covered by the original investigations relative to the subjects involved. Besides, with few exceptions, all the libraries in the various Congressional districts which receive the Government publications through the Interior Department are on our books. Our exchange of publications with societies covers the whole civilized world; and by this method the most valuable collection extant of transactions of societies and journals of all kinds has been concentrated in Washington. Its magnitude may be estimated from the fact that it now embraces nearly one hundred thousand volumes, in the pages of which are presented all the original announcements of discovery in theoretical and applied science, data being thus furnished for magazine articles, reviews, and text-books. While a library possessing these original sources of information from all parts of the world is admirably adapted for enabling inventors and students to keep pace with the progress of discovery in all countries, it also saves them an expenditure of time in unwittingly prosecuting investigations already elaborated and published. Comparatively few of these books received as exchanges can be purchased, the vast majority of them being obtainable in no other way than through a system of exchange such as that which has been carried on by the Smithsonian for many years.

Thus the publishing fund is converted into books which are bartered for other books of a similar character, the result being a collection of works to buy even a portion of which would require a sum much larger than the fund used in publishing.

The special plea for this application is—

1. The scientific and educational value of the Smithsonian and National Museum publications;

2. Their gratuitous distribution to the public libraries which have been established as recipients of Government publications;

3. The fact that the whole of the library accumulated by the Smithsonian Institution in the manner above described is now a part of the Congressional Library, constituting one of its most important factors; and

4. That all the additional receipts of books, through exchange or otherwise, are sent at once to the Library of Congress, and are immediately incorporated therein.

The publications of the Smithsonian consist of an annual volume of the quarto series entitled "Smithsonian Contributions to Knowledge," of which twenty-three have appeared; also an annual volume of "Miscellaneous Collections," (octavo,) of which the same number have been issued; and the "Proceedings of the National Museum," of which four volumes are ready, together with the "Bulletins of the National Museum," whereof one only has thus far been issued, and several parts which appear separately.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SPENCER T. BAIRD, Secretary.

Hon. R. T. VAN HORN,

Chairman of Joint Committee on Printing, House of Representatives.

Mr. HISCOCK. How did this joint resolution come before the House?

The SPEAKER. It was reported regularly from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that motion now.

Mr. TUCKER. I hope the House will not adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 63, noes 51.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. ALDRICH called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Oh, no; it is too hot for that.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays, and there were thirty-five in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 99, nays 63, not voting 124, as follows:

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. No. 60) to grant a right of way for a railroad and telegraph line through the lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians to the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, and for other purposes;

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 81) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the Saint Lawrence River;

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 83) relating to the memorial cards to accompany the memorial address on the life and character of the late James A. Garfield;

A bill (S. No. 602) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Hyacinthe Robert Agnel, deceased;

A bill (S. No. 790) for the relief of Joseph Hertford;

A bill (S. No. 838) to grant the right of way for railroad purposes through the lands of the United States powder depot near Dover, New Jersey;

A bill (S. No. 1435) for the relief of Albert Elsberg, administrator of Gustave Elsberg, deceased; and

A bill (S. No. 1582) to amend the statutes in relation to copyright.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MOORE, by unanimous consent, obtained indefinite leave of absence, on account of sickness.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD remarks on general subjects. [See Appendix.]

LAND GRANTS TO RAILROADS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STRAIT] asks a change of reference of the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, in response to a House resolution of June 6, 1882, concerning alleged excessive certification of lands to certain railroad companies. This letter was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. If there be no objection, that committee will be discharged from its consideration and the communication will be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

SEWELL COULSON AND OTHERS.

Mr. PEELE, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Claims with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 4431) for the payment of Sewell Coulson and Porter, Harrison & Fishback for legal services; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CARRIAGE AND STORAGE OF DANGEROUS ARTICLES.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Commerce with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 6774) to amend section 4472 of the Revised Statutes, relative to the carriage and use as stores of certain dangerous articles; which was placed on the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced; and accordingly (at twelve o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday next.

PETITIONS.

The following petitions were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CAMPBELL: The petition of 1,408 civil, mechanical, and mining engineers, machinists, ship-builders, and other constructors in 28 different States and Territories, and insurance companies of Massachusetts representing a capital of $300,000,000, and similar corporations of other States, for the passage of House bill No. 4726, providing for the appointment of a commission for testing iron, steel, and other manufacturing materials—to the Committee on Manufactures.

By Mr. CASSIDY: The petition of M. P. H. Lowe, a veteran of the Mexican war, relative to the treatment by the Government of soldiers engaged in the Mexican war—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CULBERSON: The petition of Frank C. Armstrong, for the removal of political disabilities—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GEORGE R. DAVIS: The petition of George Scoville, accompanied by a letter signed by Judge Drummond and other judicial officers, praying that the Department of Justice shall audit and pay claims for legal services of counsel for defense in the Guiteau trial in like manner as now authorized as to special counsel for the Government—to the same committee.

By Mr. FISHER: The petition of John Dougherty and others, for establishment of national observatory and school of mines on Jack's Mountain, Pennsylvania—to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. HENDERSON: The petition of Mrs. Hannah J. Coffee and other ladies of Rock Island County, Illinois, for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to enfranchise women—to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

By Mr. THOMAS UPDEGRAFF: The petition of the Iowa State board of health and of S. F. Andrews, for an appropriation for the support and maintenance of the National Board of Health—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. VANCE: The petition of William Pickens, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHITE: The petition of John W. Mullins, of London, Kentucky, for an appropriation to be expended under the direction of the Postmaster-General to examine improved methods of canceling stamps and mailing letters—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, July 29, 1882.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, in answer to a resolution of the 22d instant, transmitting a statement of the sums of money paid to the Ponca Indians since 1871, and under what treaty stipulation; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. INGALLS presented a petition of citizens of Marshall County, Kansas, praying for the passage of an act granting a pension to Beverly Post, who was a soldier in the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WALKER. I present a memorial of the Choctaw Indians, showing the results of certain former efforts to allot Indian lands in severalty, which I ask to have printed and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not usual to print memorials.

Mr. WALKER. Then let it be referred without printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BUTLER presented the petition of Frank C. Armstrong, late captain Second United States Dragoons, praying for the removal of his political disabilities; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented the petition of Mary A. Hughes, of Louisville, Kentucky, widow of Franklin M. Hughes, late captain Company E, Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FERRY presented a petition of members of Garfield Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Coloma, Michigan, praying for the passage of the House bill for the increase of pensions to those who have lost an arm or a leg or suffered disability equivalent thereto in the service of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORT OF CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to which was referred a concurrent resolution for printing 7,500 additional copies of the report of Chief Signal Officer for the use of the Signal Office, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That there be printed 7,500 additional copies of the report of the Chief Signal Officer for the use of the Signal Office.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senate passed a resolution printing 2,500 copies. The Secretary of War and the Chief Signal Officer asked for 10,000. We cut it down to 2,500 on the ground of economy, but there is a letter from the Secretary of War recommending the original number, and a letter from the Chief Signal Officer, which, I think, is very conclusive, showing the absolute necessity of it to carry on the operations of the Signal Office. The cost of it will be $9,000.

The resolution was agreed to.

AMERICAN FORESTRY CONVENTION.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That the proceedings of the American forestry convention held at Cincinnati in April, 1877, be printed, under the direction of the Commissioner of Agriculture, and that 5,000 additional copies be printed, of which 1,300 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,600 copies for the use of the House, and 1,100 copies for the use of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CONGER. I reported the other day from the Committee on Commerce a bill to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] does not object to any further postponement of the bill, and I should like very much to have it considered this morning.

Mr. GEORGE. Some time ago I introduced a resolution which now lies on the table—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no further morning business the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] has the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. I want to call up that resolution this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no further morning business the morning hour is closed, and the Senator from Michigan asks to call up the bill (H. R. No. 6722) to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea.

Mr. HALE. How long a time does the Senator think the bill will occupy?

Mr. CONGER. I do not know that it will take any longer than to read it. As I remarked the other morning when I called it up, it is the same bill which passed the two Houses and which the President vetoed because of a misdescription in the bill of the deck and of the amount of space allotted to passengers by reason of a misdescription.

Mr. HALE. I do not want to interfere with the bill if it can go through easily. At the same time everybody sees that it is almost a necessity that we finish the naval appropriation bill to-day.

Mr. CONGER. I do not desire to antagonize that at all; but it is very essential that this bill should be passed. It has passed the House—

Mr. HALE. I see the force of that; I think it ought to go through. Suppose the naval appropriation bill be taken up as the order, and then I will yield to the Senator from Michigan if his bill will not take much time.

Mr. CONGER. I have no objection to that course.

Mr. INGALLS. I regard it as of the highest importance to the public service that the appropriation bill should be proceeded with. There will be ample opportunity for the consideration of measures from the House when the appropriation bills are in conference. I shall object to the consideration of the bill called up by the Senator from Michigan or any other bill; and if the Senator from Maine sees fit to allow his bill to be laid aside it will be by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. CONGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill for the carriage of passengers by sea, notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator will get along better with his measure if he does not do that.

Mr. CONGER. I might be in a position where I could not make the motion, where I should be at the mercy of other members of the Senate. I wish to test the view of Senators upon the proposition.

Mr. HOAR. The bill has passed the House, I understand, and every provision in it the Senate has once given its assent to. There were additional provisions misdescribing or misusing the present term and description of ships, as I understand, on which the President vetoed the bill, and this bill strikes out that objectionable matter.

Mr. CONGER. The error which gave rise to all the trouble was describing what used to be called "the uppermost deck," which was the main deck in the old mode of describing decks; and now there is an additional deck called the uppermost deck. It is to restore the words "main deck."

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from Kansas will be willing to leave this thing as it was running along, I think the naval appropriation bill will be less embarrassed than by any other course.

Mr. CONGER. I want to say to Senators that the time we occupy in saying whether the Senate will consider a bill is sufficient ordinarily for its passage.

Mr. HALE. It might and might not. If the naval bill be taken up, as the Senator and I agreed, and I then yield to him, trusting to him that his bill will not take much time, both bills will get along faster.

Mr. CONGER. If the Senate does not desire to pass this bill, which the whole country and every interest in the country is demanding, it can be shown by a vote very readily. I insist on testing the sense of the Senate on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan moves to postpone the regular order, which is the consideration of the Calendar under the Anthony rule, with a view to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. ALLISON. Pending that motion I wish to report the sundry civil appropriation bill from the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive the report.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CONGER. Why is it not possible some time in the Senate to have a motion entertained made by an obscure member of the Senate, but made in regular order, I believe?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was putting the motion when the Senator from Iowa presented the report on the sundry civil bill. The question is on postponing the regular order.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan now moves to proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated.

Mr. SHERMAN. As I understand, that does not preclude the Senator from Maine from calling up the naval bill at twelve o'clock, or moving to take it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour is ended when the morning business is over.

Mr. INGALLS. Now, let us understand the effect of the motion. The morning business having ended the morning hour has expired. If this bill is taken up, until what time does its consideration extend without any further action on the part of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Until two o'clock.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senator from Maine if he does not propose to take up the naval bill?

Mr. HALE. I should be very glad to take up the naval bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Then let us vote this motion down.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan to take up the bill to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish the Senate would appreciate the importance of this bill. I most heartily concur with the Senator from Michigan. It is one of very great importance, and it is due to our sense of humanity and justice that we should consider the bill. A comparatively trifling change has been made in it which does not touch the merits of the bill, but is a mere technical change. The general merits of the bill no one in the world can deny.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to understand why the bill cannot be taken up when the appropriation bills are disposed of. There will be plenty of time then. We all know that the appropriation bills have to go into conference committee, and these other bills can be disposed of while the appropriation bills are in conference. There are two appropriation bills now pending. The sundry civil bill has just been reported by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and there will be a day or two after the passage by the Senate of the appropriation bills before we can adjourn, because the two Houses will have to agree upon them. Why cannot all these bills be taken up during that time?

Mr. HAWLEY. It would have been impossible to have had as much debate on the whole bill as we have had now on taking it up.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then why do Senators move to take up other bills when appropriation bills are pending?

Mr. CONGER. I move to take this up because of the continual recurrence of wrongs done to immigrants who approach our shores, who come to our ports, which are a burning shame to the American people. The law which protects the immigrants having been declared by the Supreme Court not to apply to steamships, the steamship companies are permitted to treat immigrants in whatever mean and dastardly manner they propose, and the newspapers are full of that.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Has the Senator any knowledge of how long the bill will take?

Mr. CONGER. I think it would have been read through and passed before this bill if there had not been some little objection either to the principle of the bill or to its being taken up now. What I desire is to have the yeas and nays, and see who it is among Senators here who desire to postpone the passage of a law demanded by the humanity and by the judgment of the whole American people. The Senate may do as they please with it. I will do my duty and ask that it be taken up.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Has not a similar bill been vetoed by the President?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir; because the President—

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then it is not very well to say that it is such a burning shame not to take up the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. This is the identical bill, and the technical objections the President was obliged to make have all been obviated.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator from Michigan, as he and I have very near once to an agreement, and by this time might have got the bill out of the way, will the Senator agree—

Mr. CONGER. Let me answer first the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. HALE. Let me put this proposition: Will the Senator agree that if we consent to have this bill taken up he will not take any more time than until twelve o'clock.

Mr. CONGER. The Senator from Michigan will agree, as he always does, not to obtrude his own views on the Senate even on this bill, in which he feels great interest, and allow the Senate to pass it on the discussion of other members. I have no desire to say a word about it, so that the bill can be passed and become a law.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator agree at twelve o'clock if debate arises that he will withdraw the bill and make no test question after that time?

Mr. CONGER. I see no necessity for that. This is in the morning hour, this is before the time for taking up appropriation bills any way. Now, why can it not be taken up and passed?

Mr. HALE. The Senator will not agree to what I suggested?

Mr. CONGER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the proposition.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McMILLAN. I just wish to say, in view of the remarks of the Senator from West Virginia, that this bill has been reported once and passed by the Senate and House of Representatives, the only difficulty being a technical misdescription of one of the decks of vessels, which required the President to veto the bill. That has been remedied and corrected here, and there is no necessity for a word of discussion upon the merits of the bill. I hope it will be taken up, and passed without discussion.

Mr. HALE. I hope that the call for the yeas and nays will be withdrawn, so as to save the time and let the Senate go on with the bill, I giving notice that as soon as it is finished I shall call up the naval appropriation bill, or at twelve o'clock at any rate will move to lay it aside and take up the naval appropriation bill. We shall save time by not calling the yeas and nays.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to give notice that as soon as the consideration of this bill is through I shall call up the resolution in regard to pensioning soldiers of the Mexican war which is now lying on the table, offered by me some days ago, and I shall ask for a vote on it.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to make some reports from the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent the Chair will receive morning business, although that order has been passed.

Mr. BLAIR. We have several reports; and it is very necessary they should be printed in order that the Senate may act on them at this session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator had better withhold the reports until we get through with the matter now before the Senate. The Senator from Maine has suggested that the call for the yeas and nays be withdrawn and that the Senate agree to take up the bill by unanimous consent. Is that conceded?

Mr. CONGER. Why cannot the yeas and nays be called?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They are ordered. The Senator from Maine made that suggestion.

Mr. CONGER. I did not hear what the suggestion was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine made the suggestion that the call be withdrawn.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from Michigan wants the yeas and nays, let us have them and vote down the motion, and stick to the appropriation bill. He has rejected every proposition I have made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll will be called on the motion of the Senator from Michigan to proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WALKER, (when Mr. GARLAND's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. GARLAND] is paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 25, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—25.

So the motion was agreed to.

PASSENGERS BY SEA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 6722) to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HALE and Mr. GEORGE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I move now to take up the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to call up a bill which came from the House?

Mr. HALE. Let me get the naval appropriation bill taken up, and then for any formal matter I will yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] wished to take up a resolution. He did not address the Chair as soon as the Senator from Maine, although he rose first.

Mr. HALE. The Chair will remember that I gave notice first that I should make this motion. I do not want, now that it is so important the naval bill should be got through, to have anything else come up that will take any time.

Mr. INGALLS. Everything will take time that is taken up.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not think the resolution will take any time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine insist on his motion?

Mr. HALE. I must insist on taking up the naval appropriation bill, and then in regard to formal matter, if any Senator wants to make a report or anything of that kind, of course I shall not interfere with that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The naval appropriation bill is before the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask that the naval appropriation bill be laid aside temporarily, with a view of taking up a resolution I offered several days ago instructing the Committee on Pensions to report a bill pensioning the soldiers who served in the Mexican war and who are in such indigent circumstances that they derive their subsistence by manual labor and only by that. I understood when the general pension bill was being discussed and when an amendment was offered looking to the pensioning of the soldiers of the Mexican war there was a very general expression of the wish to give a pension to those of them who are indigent. I have drawn this resolution with a view of meeting that sentiment on the part of the Senate. It is not what I believe is due to the soldiers of the Mexican war, but I hope the Senate will consent to take up the resolution and act on it and pass it.

Mr. HALE. I cannot yield to that, for several Senators have just notified me that when the resolution of the Senator from Mississippi comes up they wish to debate it at some length; so that it would evidently take up at least the day. I know that under those circumstances the Senator himself would not wish to take it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A single objection carries it over.

Mr. GEORGE. Have I a right to make a motion now to take up the resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has a right to move to set aside the naval appropriation bill and take the sense of the Senate upon that motion with a view to taking up the resolution.

Mr. GEORGE. I believe it my public duty to make that motion.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will not make that motion. Of course it is in his discretion, if he chooses, but we have the naval appropriation bill up now, and I am sure the Senate desires to go on with it.

Mr. GEORGE. If I could be assured that I should have another opportunity during the present session of the Senate to make the motion, I would not press it now. With the understanding that I shall have such an opportunity, I will waive it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the Senator that after the appropriation bills are passed, of course there must be considerable time. It is for the Senate to decide what it will do.

Mr. MAXEY. I am very much in favor of the resolution of the Senator from Mississippi, but I believe the appropriation bills ought to be passed, and while they are in conference we shall have some time and then we can act upon the resolution.

Mr. GEORGE. According to that suggestion I waive the motion for the present consideration of the resolution.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Maine to a bill which I ask his consent to take up at this time, laying aside informally the appropriation bill. I wish to have taken up the bill (H. R. No. 6677) to regulate immigration. I do not desire to antagonize the naval appropriation bill, but this is a bill of such importance, it being in the same line with the bill which has just passed the Senate, that I am very anxious it should be taken up and passed. I think it will give rise to no discussion. If the Senator from Maine will give way for that purpose I should be very glad to have it taken up. I appeal to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. The Senator's bill may be read, and if it gives rise to no discussion and passes at once, I shall yield to it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 6677) to regulate immigration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OMAHA INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I ask that Senate bill No. 1255, received from the House of Representatives, be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 1255) to provide for the sale of a part of the reservation of the Omaha tribe of Indians in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute therefor.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Without reading the amendment, I wish to move that the Senate do not concur in the amendment of the House; and to expedite business I will move that a committee of conference be appointed.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am not sure that that motion ought to be agreed to by any manner of means. I am inclined to think the House has improved the bill. I suppose it is a matter of mere form to agree to a conference committee.

Mr. DAWES. Without doubt the House improved the bill, but there seems to be a necessity for some verbal alteration.

Mr. HALE. If the bill can go to a conference at once I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. HAWLEY. I refrain from objecting partly on the intimation of the Senator from Massachusetts that the bill is about right.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore being authorized to appoint the committee, Mr. SAUNDERS, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. PENDLETON were appointed the conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the resolution of the Senate of the 19th instant for the printing of 3,000 copies of the Flags of Maritime Nations from the plates now in the possession of the Bureau of Navigation, Navy Department.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WINDOM. In accordance with the notice of the Senator from Maine that he will yield for merely formal matter, I wish to make a report from the Committee on Foreign Relations. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to ask that the message which I send to the Chair, being a report of the Secretary of State in regard to the claims of Benjamin Weil and the La Abra Silver Mining Company against Mexico, be printed in confidence for the use of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Which order will be made, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6317) granting an increase of pension to James Bennett, reported it without amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6521) granting a pension to Mrs. Adeline A. Turner, reported it without amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2078) granting a pension to Mrs. Adeline A. Turner, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that the bill be postponed indefinitely; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3414) granting a pension to Sarah J. Cameron, reported it with an amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3733) granting a pension to Mary E. Taylor, reported it without amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6624) granting an increase of pension to Eliza F. Porter, reported it without amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3601) for the relief of Martha A. Jones, reported it without amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3717) granting a pension to Alvin Walker, reported it without amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. VAN WYCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 5985) granting a pension to Martha Jane Douglas, reported it without amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CHILCOTT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2966) granting a pension to Annie W. Osborne, reported it without amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

WIDOW OF H. H. GARNETT.

Mr. WINDOM. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 270) for the relief of Sarah J. S. Garnett, widow of Henry H. Garnett, late minister to Liberia, to report it back without amendment. The joint resolution is only six lines long and it is exactly like two others we have passed, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It provides for the payment to Sarah J. S. Garnett, widow of Dr. Henry H. Garnett, late minister of the United States to Liberia, one year's salary as minister, in addition to all legal allowances, deducting the amount of salary received by him since the date of his appointment.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES F. CULLEN.

Mr. BLAIR. I call the attention of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JACKSON] to the bill (H. R. No. 5158) for the relief of James F. Cullen. In that case there is a majority and minority report from the Committee on Pensions. Since the case was placed on the Calendar additional evidence has been placed in the hands of the committee which has been examined by them, and further action has been taken by the committee, so that what was the minority report is now the report of the majority, while the majority report has become the minority report, and both the majority and minority desire to submit additional views, that they may be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order allowing that will be made if there be no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. No. 126) to reimburse the Creek orphan fund disagreed to by the Senate, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. N. C. DEERING of Iowa, Mr. D. C. HASKELL of Kansas, and Mr. OLIN WELBORN of Texas, the conferees on the part of the House.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, (by request,) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2168) providing pay, bounty, &c., for the militia of the State of West Virginia who actually performed service for the United States Government during the late war; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 25th instant approved and signed the act (S. No. 2084) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe; and on the 27th instant the act (S. No. 329) to authorize the preparation and publication of a classified, analytical, and descriptive catalogue of all Government publications from July 4, 1776, to March 4, 1881, and an act (S. No. 679) for the relief of William A. Gavett.

The message also announced that the President had on the 28th instant approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

An act (S. No. 469) to provide for the sale of certain Kickapoo Indian lands in Kansas;

An act (S. No. 698) relating to lands in Colorado lately occupied by the Uncompahgre and White River Ute Indians;

An act (S. No. 1620) to authorize the construction of a street-railway and wagon-road bridge over the Rio Grande River between the city of El Paso, Texas, and Paso del Norte, Mexico;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 17) relating to the refunding of certain internal-revenue taxes illegally assessed against and collected from the Detroit House of Correction in the State of Michigan;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 75) allowing the widow of General Stephen A. Hurlbut, late minister to Peru, one year's salary; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 77) allowing the widow of General Judson Kilpatrick, late minister to Chili, one year's salary.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. Now I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The naval appropriation bill is the regular order.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. I offer the following amendment from the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was one portion of the bill passed over informally yesterday.

Mr. HALE. That can be taken up after this amendment. On line 17, page 2, after the word "promotion," I move to insert:

Who shall, after fifteen years' service, be entitled to receive as annual pay, when at sea, $2,100; when on shore duty, $1,800, and when on leave or waiting orders, $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Now with the leave of the Senate let us go to the part informally passed over last evening; that is on page 25.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 596, after the word "namely," the Committee on Appropriations propose to strike out the word

"to" and insert "under the Bureau of Construction and Repair, to;" so as to read:

That $1,000,000 of the above amount shall be applied by the Secretary of the Navy to the following objects, namely: Under the Bureau of Construction and Repair, to building and fitting the turrets and pilot-house of the iron-clad steamer Miantonomah.

Mr. HALE. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "Miantonomah," in line 599, to insert the word "and."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. Is the amendment I offered being considered now?

Mr. HALE. No; we are only now considering that part touching the launching of these ships, to which nobody objects. After this amendment is passed we come then to that portion of the bill that the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Delaware perhaps wish to be heard upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Six hundred and one is the line.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senate will remember that last evening I suggested, and if I did not then I will offer now to strike out the words "of such," in line 601.

Mr. HALE. We have not reached that yet. We are only on that part relating to the launching now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. We are down to line 601.

Mr. HALE. Has the amendment in line 599 been acted on?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. If that is passed it is all right. The Senator from Delaware can now send up his amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. I gave it to the Secretary last night. I ask him to read it.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 605, it is proposed to strike out the words "of such;" and in the same line, after the word "vessels," to strike out "as he may, on examination, think most expedient and best for the interests of the service;" so as to make the clause read:

Under the Bureau of Steam-Engineering, subject to the conditions hereinafter provided, to the beginning and continuing to completion of work upon the engines and machinery of said vessels, and that any part of the appropriation for said bureau not used as above specified, may be applied toward the construction of engines and machinery of the two new cruising vessels provided for in this act.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. Before departing from this subject I should like to ascertain from the Senator from Maine having this bill in charge in what condition the steamers Miantonomah, Monadnock, Puritan, Amphitrite, and Terror now are?

Mr. HALE. The Monadnock, the Puritan, Amphitrite, and Terror now lie in the yards of the several contractors.

Mr. INGALLS. What yards are they?

Mr. HALE. One yard is at Chester, of Mr. Roach; one of Harlan & Hollingsworth, at Wilmington, and one of Cramps, in Philadelphia.

Mr. BECK. The Terror is at Cramps's, the Puritan at Roach's, and the Amphitrite at Wilmington.

Mr. HALE. And the Monadnock is in California.

Mr. INGALLS. But what amount of money has been expended on each of them since the sale to these contractors of the material in the old vessels of the same names?

Mr. HALE. I can get the figures showing the whole amount in detail. I can state in gross here, without hunting up the figures, that their condition is this: the hulls have been completed—

Mr. INGALLS. How much has been expended since the sale of the original vessels?

Mr. HALE. I will get the figures if the Senator wants them of that particular time. I cannot tell him now just what has been expended on these vessels in detail between one date and another. I only here can say that they have been completed so far as the hulls are concerned, and are ready now if it is deemed advisable to put further work upon them; but there has been nothing done beyond that.

Mr. INGALLS. When was the last work done on these hulls? Has anything been done since 1877?

Mr. HALE. Four years ago.

Mr. INGALLS. Since 1877?

Mr. HALE. In 1877. They have lain there ever since.

Mr. INGALLS. Has there been any report from any board of naval survey showing that they are in a condition that renders it possible that they can ever be made serviceable for sea?

Mr. HALE. There have been different reports made upon them, some reports in one direction and some reports varying. It is a question to be settled for the future as to the advisability of putting more money upon them. I should advise any Secretary to proceed with the greatest care and circumspection, considering two questions; first and fundamentally the question that he must clear away before he goes to anything else is whether he will do anything upon them. That is the first question. That is the brushing of the road, and I would advise any Secretary, as I said, to proceed with care and circumspection under the advice of a board before he settles that, and then if that is settled in favor of further work being put upon these hulls, and it is found when they are launched that they float well, that they can be taken around and indicate seagoing qualities, then

I would consider the question with equal care and circumspection as to just what shall be done. But that is all in the future, and the Senator knows, as he has examined this, that we have tried to guard and limit it in every possible way.

Mr. INGALLS. Well, Mr. President, I doubt very much whether the matter is sufficiently guarded. I do not want, if possible, to have the history of the past with regard to the construction and reconstruction of these ships repeated. I believe that at the close of the war all these vessels that are named were upon the stocks in a condition of greater or less completion. Up to the time when this system was adopted which has resulted so disastrously, the Puritan had cost nearly $2,000,000; the Amphitrite had cost nearly $1,200,000; the Terror had cost over $1,000,000; and the Miantonomah had cost about $1,300,000. The Puritan was sold for a little in excess of $43,000 to Mr. John Roach. The Amphitrite, which cost nearly $1,200,000, was sold to a firm of favored contractors for a little in excess of $28,000. The Terror, which cost over a million dollars, was sold for about $32,000; and the Miantonomah, which cost in excess of $1,300,000, was sold to John Roach for a little in excess of $27,000.

Mr. BAYARD. Will the Senator please state to whom the Amphitrite was sold?

Mr. INGALLS. The Amphitrite, as I am advised, was sold to Harlan, Hollingsworth & Co. for the exact sum of $28,782. So that these four ships, which had cost in money up to that time the sum of $5,457,789, brought as old iron and useless material the sum of $132,439, and out of this paltry and petty sum was taken the cost of the demolition of the vessels, so that this net material which cost nearly five million and a half brought in all to the Government, after the expenses were deducted, the sum of $78,000.

Now, Mr. President, I am not willing that anything shall be left to the discretion of any executive officer of this Government that shall permit the repetition of such extraordinary operations as these, and that we shall thereafter be told, when expenditures grossing five and a half million dollars have netted but $78,000, that there has been parsimony on the part of Congress in dealing with the American Navy.

Mr. VANCE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? I wish to know if those were sales passing absolutely the property of the Government to the purchaser?

Mr. INGALLS. So I understand.

Mr. VANCE. Then I should like to ask the chairman of the committee that has the bill in charge by what right we undertake to appropriate money to fit out these ships or exercise any ownership over them at all?

Mr. INGALLS. I know nothing about the matter. I am not the chairman of the committee.

Mr. VANCE. I directed my inquiry to the chairman.

Mr. INGALLS. But the history of these vessels is neither fortunate nor fragrant, and it is not becoming that there should be any opening left by which the operations in regard to the reconstruction of these vessels can by any possibility be repeated, and before I vote the expenditure of any money for rebuilding these vessels which have already been once upon the register and have met with this unfortunate destiny I should like to have the Senator in charge of the bill explain what provisions there are that render the repetition of these extraordinary operations impossible.

Mr. HALE. I will explain to the Senator.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator allow me to offer my amendment now, of which I gave notice, so that the question can be before us?

Mr. HALE. Let me just here explain to the Senator from Kansas. Nothing is easier than for the Senator from Kansas to glance at a subject for a few minutes and then find fault with all its provisions and details. It is the easiest thing in the world to go back to the old history of the Navy Department and to array figures of the great cost of Government ships that finally when broken up and sold realized very little money; but I can tell the Senator from Kansas that if the Navy Department to-day should present to him a dozen old ships that cost ranging from half a million to a million and a half of dollars he would find them elephants on his hands; he could not afford to break them up and take them away as gifts.

Mr. INGALLS. These were not old ships.

Mr. HALE. What were not old ships?

Mr. INGALLS. The Miantonomah, Puritan, Amphitrite, and Terror. They were uncompleted ships.

Mr. HALE. But these are ships that have been in process of construction through all these years. Of course that did not apply to those ships.

Mr. INGALLS. They rotted on the stocks in process of construction.

Mr. HALE. Like many other ships that were started during the war, and continued along for years and years. I have in the list that I hold in my hand the record of thousands of ships that were started, and hundreds of thousands of dollars, and in some cases more than a million, spent on them in the yards, and they were never launched, and were found to be good for nothing, and nobody could have afforded to take them as a gift. There is nothing in that. We were spending money in the Navy Department for years at the rate of over $100,000,000. Every scheme and suggestion that human ingenuity or device could suggest was tried. They tried all sorts of inventions, and the Navy Department gave money without stint, and scores and scores of these experiments were found to be good for nothing, and vessels were never launched where there had been more than a million dollars spent on them. That is not the question here.

Mr. FRYE. Were they not compelled from lack of material, in very many of the vessels, to use white oak instead of live oak?

Mr. HALE. That is one instance. The Senator is quite correct.

Mr. FRYE. White oak will not last anywhere over six or seven years.

Mr. HALE. In many cases, under the pressure of getting a ship to completion, they were obliged to use incomplete timber, and the result was that the vessel was never able to float. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Were the four ships mentioned in this bill, some of which were described by the Senator from Kansas, ever sold? Did the Government ever sell the four ships mentioned in this bill for the sum of money specified by the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HALE. I have no recollection that these ships were sold.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The wooden ships bearing the same names were sold. These are iron ships, I understand.

Mr. HALE. I was called out for a moment. Did the Senator from Kansas claim that these particular ships that we are now repairing were sold? I did not hear that. Of course they were not.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] did not make that statement, but the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] propounded an inquiry in which he appeared to assume that that was the fact.

Mr. BUTLER. I understood the Senator from Kansas to make exactly that statement.

Mr. INGALLS. What statement?

Mr. BUTLER. That they had been sold.

Mr. INGALLS. The material of which they were composed was sold to the contractors.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Of the old ships bearing these names?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, and there were two of the largest ships bearing the same name; and took the $78,000 realized from the sale of these vessels and commenced by a strange kind of hocus-pocus the construction of other vessels bearing the same name without authority of law.

Mr. HALE. That was a thing that has been done time and again for the last forty years. As long ago as 1844 and 1845 four or five new ships were made in that way. It is not a regular way; there is no doubt about that. It is a thing that I hope will never be done hereafter. It is one of the things that this bill seeks to prevent by limiting the extent of repairs, as they are called, put upon old ships. For years further back than the service of any man in this body goes the Navy Department has been in the habit of doing just that thing of taking the old name and putting upon it in effect a new ship and setting her afloat in the Navy. She is to all intents and purposes a new ship. I say it ought not to be done; it is irregular; but there is no fraud in it if the money is properly expended. The new ship is there, and if the name is not objectionable she is sailing under the old name.

Mr. VANCE. It ought to be "junior," so as to distinguish it from the old ship of the same name.

Mr. HALE. These ships are entirely new.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. These identical ships have not been sold.

Mr. HALE. These identical ships have not been sold from the time the first dollar was expended on them. I did not hear any Senator make that charge.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to ask the Senator from Maine a question for information. I wish to know whether there has been any act of Congress, either upon an appropriation bill or elsewhere, in which we have ratified the building of these particular ships in their present form?

Mr. HALE. We have made appropriations from time to time.

Mr. MORGAN. So that they have been recognized in the law as ships to which we could appropriate money?

Mr. HALE. Nothing further than as to the hulls.

Mr. MORGAN. That is a recognition of the ship as being built under the authority of the Government.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BECK. What amendment is now pending, I desire to ask?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

Mr. BECK. I thought that was adopted.

Mr. BAYARD. It was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. Then the only amendment I know of is the amendment I offered yesterday, which I now desire to have pending.

Mr. HALE. Let the Senator's amendment be reported.

Mr. BAYARD. Is the amendment I offered adopted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir; the Chair is so informed.

Mr. BECK. Let my amendment be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed in line 595 to strike out the words "one million dollars" and insert the words "four hundred thousand dollars;" and in line 601 to strike out all after the word "and," down to and including line 621, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

That no further steps shall be taken or contracts entered into or approved for the repairs or completion of any of the four iron-clads aforesaid until the further order of Congress; and the naval advisory board created by this act is directed to report in detail by the 1st day of December, 1882, as to the wisdom and expediency of undertaking and completing the engines, armor, and armaments of said iron-clads, and whether any changes in the original plan or plans should be made, together with the cost of the completion of each according to the plans recommended, if the completion of any of them is recommended.

Mr. BECK. It will be observed that in the amendment I offer I first seek to strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$400,000," because the Secretary of the Navy and all the officers tell us that $400,000 (indeed I think $300,000 or $350,000 certainly) is amply sufficient to finish the Miantonomoh. I desire now to modify the amendment I have offered as follows. The printed amendment is on Senators' tables and they can follow it. In line 595, after the word "amount," I propose to insert "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. HALE. What does the Senator insert in lieu of $1,000,000?

Mr. BECK. Four hundred thousand dollars, and after the word "amount," in the same line, insert "so much thereof as may be necessary may be applied by the Secretary." I modify to that extent for this reason, that it may not require $400,000 to do what I propose; indeed $300,000 was suggested as being ample, and $350,000 was spoken of; but I want to insure the result of finishing the Miantonomoh perfectly, and launching these four ships and taking them out of the private yards of the gentlemen who now have them in their yards and putting them in good condition, painting them and preserving them in our own waters. Whatever sum is necessary to do that I desire to appropriate, because we are liable to expense as long as they remain in the yards. Then I propose to strike out the remainder of the clause and provide—

That no further steps shall be taken or contracts entered into or approved for the repairs or completion—

The word "repairs" has been used in regard to these vessels as well as "completion" in many of the contracts—of any of the four iron-clads aforesaid until the further order of Congress; and the naval advisory board created by this act is directed to report in detail by the 1st day of December, 1882, as to the wisdom and expediency of undertaking and completing the engines, armor, and armaments of said iron-clads.

I desire to stop any further proceedings under the contracts of March 3, 1877, until Congress has determined certain questions with regard to them, first whether they are valid, next whether they are proper, next whether or not essential changes ought not to be made in order to have the ships what they ought to be; and it was because I did not propose to revive any of the old quarrels and scandals in regard to these old contracts that I desired to suspend them until December, when we may ascertain the facts.

In 1877 the first report of Secretary Thompson in regard to these ships reads thus:

There were contracts made by the Department March 3, 1877, for work to be done by this bureau for the completion and fitting the iron-clads Puritan, Monadnock, Amphitrite, and Terror, amounting to $2,103,642. There being at that time no money available in payment of these contracts, a provision was inserted in them that no payments should be made under them until appropriations applicable to the purpose were made by Congress. I deemed it my duty also to suspend these contracts, inasmuch as I regarded them as not authorized by law, and to submit to Congress to decide whether they shall be recognized or canceled, and if these vessels are to be completed in what manner it shall be done.

From that day to this no appropriation has ever been made authorizing those ships to be completed or recognizing these contracts in any shape or form. No appropriation has been made to carry them out; no submission has been made to Congress in any form that Congress has acted upon. Report after report has been made, some partially approving them, some condemning them; and they stand to-day condemned by the Secretary of the Navy who came into power on the 5th day of March, 1877, as being illegal contracts and not being fit to be finished. Mr. Thompson goes on to say:

Finding no present appropriation applicable to that purpose, I do not regard the Department as possessing any discretionary power in reference to them except to see that the interest the Government has in them is properly protected. If the amount covered by these contracts is to be charged against the Bureau of Construction and Repair, then the whole amount of its actual and conditional indebtedness will be $3,539,798.23.

Somewhere in this report, or some other report that I have had, he says the Government did pay for what was due upon the past work, so that they are ours, free from all incumbrance for any past liability.

Mr. INGALLS. No work has been done or material furnished since 1877.

Mr. BECK. None has been applied to the ships. What the contractors may have on hand ready I do not know.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to ask the Senator if these contracts were made by direction of Congress.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is this amendment in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is to strike out and insert.

Mr. ANTHONY. I thought there was a legislative provision in it as I heard it read.

Mr. BECK. There was no point of order made.

Mr. ANTHONY. There has been no opportunity to make one because the Senator has been on the floor ever since he offered the amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to call his attention to one point? Do I understand him to say there has been no money appropriated for the repair of these vessels?

Mr. BECK. To carry out the contracts since that time.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I hold in my hand a letter from the Secretary of the Navy stating the amount of repairs made necessary.

Mr. BECK. Made when?

Mr. SAULSBURY. April 7, 1882, showing that on the Miantonomoh there was spent in 1877 and 1878 for repairs $2,168.05.

Mr. BECK. There have been some little bills paid.

Mr. SAULSBURY. In 1879 and 1880, $74,910.84 was expended. The whole cost of repairing that vessel has been $498,534.94.

Mr. HALE. Is the Senator from Delaware referring to the letter of the Secretary of the Navy of May 24?

Mr. SAULSBURY. April 7, 1882. There was some expenditure on all these vessels.

Mr. BECK. I suppose there has been something put on them, to paint them, to keep them from rusting, and prevent them floating away.

Mr. SAULSBURY. There have been several thousand dollars spent on the Monadnock.

Mr. BECK. I do not want to argue these questions or criticize any action in regard to them. I had these contracts before me yesterday, and if it is desired before the debate closes I shall have them read and laid before the Senate; they are very long and there are some remarkable things about them. You will find the order was first made for carrying on this work March 2, 1877, and the contracts were made March 3, the next day, amounting to a very large sum. The contract for the Puritan alone with Mr. Roach was for about $997,642, in two items, as I understand it, and the contract in regard to the Terror, Amphitrite, and Monadnock were each for about $348,000 for side armor, and for changes in side armor $50,000, making $398,000; a total of about $2,191,000. I speak in general terms. When you come to examine the contracts it will be observed, as I said, that the order was first issued on the 2d day of March, 1877. They were all closed up or purport to be on the 3d, when letters purporting to be written in New York, Philadelphia, and elsewhere on the 3d were received and answered from the Department on the same day. I am satisfied that it was impossible for our officials within office hours to have received those communications; altogether it was a very remarkable performance.

The main question I want to call the attention of the Senator from Maine to is this: after providing for the launching of all these ships, as my amendment does, after providing for the finishing of the Miantonomoh, as we are constituting a naval advisory board, and as December will soon be upon us and Congress meets then, and there are very many questions to be determined about these ships, and it has been charged in reports that the Puritan would not float if launched, and as other charges have been made, I think we had better defer all further action until Congress understands all the facts and passes upon the question. There can be no great injury, very little delay, and unless my amendment is adopted I believe that these old contracts of March 3, 1877, may be affirmed and we shall be decided between now and December.

We called the Secretary of the Navy before us and the question was put to him, "Will you, if this House bill becomes a law, submit these contracts to the Attorney-General and have the question of their legality decided upon?" The answer was, "I do not know whether I shall or not. I shall have to carefully examine, and if I think they are legal contracts I will take the responsibility myself, if I believe at the same time they ought to be carried out."

Now, I deny the right of the Secretary of the Navy in the present condition of these contracts to decide that question. I do not propose to leave it to him as the bill as it comes from the committee will leave it to him. However honest he may be, however anxious he may be to carry forward the good of the public service, the finishing of these four monitors, the legality of the contract for which is doubtful, and there are very many things that ought to be looked into, which should pass the revision of the board we have provided, and then be submitted to us and let us determine. I would not allow this discretion to the Secretary of the Navy when he avows that he will if he sees fit, without consulting the Attorney-General, go on under these contracts and will secure the building of these ships.

Mr. FARLEY. Allow me to ask the Senator a question. Does he believe that the $400,000 he proposes to appropriate for the purpose of launching these four vessels and making the necessary preparation for that purpose will be ample for that?

Mr. BECK. The chairman of the committee, the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] yesterday thought his recollection was that $350,000 was ample. We all agree that $490,000 is ample; there is no doubt about that. The only question is whether it ought not to be $350,000. We have put in now $400,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, so as to prevent all confusion.

What I want to get at from the chairman of the committee is what objection there is to my amendment to postpone until December, when a report can be had of the action under these contracts, and whether I have not stated substantially the Secretary's views in regard to what he considers his duty and his power to go on in the mean time if, after investigation, he shall think these contracts ought to be ratified. I have great faith in the wisdom and the capacity of the Secretary, but I do not want these contracts acted on until Congress declares after full hearing what ought to be done. That is the only difference between my amendment and the action of the committee.

Mr. HALE. I will try to answer the Senator from Kentucky and will try to state as briefly as possible the judgment of the committee which I represent upon this matter and then leave it to the Senate to decide how this question shall be settled and how far we shall go in appropriating money now or hereafter.

One thing, Mr. President, is lucky, and that is that these ships, the Miantonomoh, the Amphitrite, the Terror, the Monadnock, and the Puritan come before the Senate now disembarassed from all these old questions. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] shakes his head. I do not say that any Senator may not go back and array the old figures and present old facts here and may not find objectionable things in the history of naval vessels heretofore.

Mr. INGALLS. And desire not to have them repeated.

Mr. HALE. And desire not to have them repeated; but all the same I repeat that these five ships come to us now utterly disembarassed of all these old questions for this reason: for five years there has not been a stroke of work done upon them by the Government; they have been there in the yards of the contractors, and Congress has been as silent upon them as it has been upon the ark of Noah. During all that time there has not been any claim that any contract is existing or outstanding upon these vessels pushed before Congress, whatever any contractor may to himself have believed or lie in wait ready afterward to assert.

The vessels also are disembarassed in this, that they come before Congress in a condition where it may well be decided whether anything shall be done, or nothing shall be done. They are at such a point that you may begin and expend money and in no way be involved or embarrassed with previous expenditure on these hulls. They stand clean and clear, and simple before Congress, and the question is whether we shall put any more money onto these hulls, and in deciding that no man need go into the past.

The Senator from Kentucky says that his object is to free them from any possibility of being controlled as to future expenditures by the contracts of March 3, 1877. I agree with him in his object. I do not want to see any Secretary of the Navy embarrassed by those contracts. I do not want him put in an attitude where Congress will by any act seem to recognize or annul these contracts; and the committee has endeavored by this proviso to cure that. Now let me read it:

Provided, That all plans for the engines, armor, and armament of the said four last-mentioned iron-clad vessels—

Namely, the Amphitrite, the Terror, the Puritan, and Monadnock, for the Miantonomoh raises no question—shall be submitted to the naval advisory board, created by this act, for its approval or disapproval, and said board, with the same powers—

That is, of approval or disapproval—shall also consider and advise as to the wisdom and expediency of undertaking and completing said engines, armor, and armament.

Under that provision the Secretary of the Navy cannot move in the direction of spending one dollar, or of deciding a plan to spend one dollar, or of deciding that he will decide a plan upon which he shall spend one dollar, until the naval advisory board has considered it and approved it and he acts on its advice. If that is not a safeguard, if a dollar can be expended in any way without that, then I misread the provision, and that has been the object of this all the way through.

The Senator refers to the attitude of the Secretary of the Navy with regard to these old contracts, and is afraid that if anything is allowed to be done between now and December we may find these old contracts foisted upon us. Now, to begin with, these old contracts were made at a time and under such prices that nobody who made the contracts could afford to carry them out, and they do not stand impending over us. But in addition to all that the Secretary cannot move an inch under these contracts unless the naval advisory board direct and approve of his doing so.

The Senator found fault with the Secretary of the Navy because when asked if he would submit the question whether the Government was bound by these old contracts to the Attorney-General he declined to say that he would do so. Let me ask the Senator from Kentucky himself whether he would have been better satisfied himself if the Secretary of the Navy had replied, "I will turn this whole subject over to the Attorney-General of the United States and will do precisely as he advises about it?" Would the Senator from Kentucky, I ask him, prefer that this question whether the Government is bound by these old contracts be settled by the Attorney-General of the United States rather than by the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. BECK. I will answer that very frankly. My object being to have all the information laid before Congress, I desire that Congress should pass upon it before any work is done. I stated before the apprehension that I have. I believe the Secretary of the Navy is a very good lawyer and a very good man. Ordinarily it would be better to have the advice of the Attorney-General. I do not know the Attorney-General as well as I do the Secretary of the Navy, and I do not know that his opinion is of any more value. In the ordinary course of things the Attorney-General's opinion ought to be of value in a legal question; but I do not want the Secretary of the Navy or the Attorney-General in the next two weeks, if you please, to summon a board of five officers, tell them these contracts are binding, and say, "We want you to tell us what is the best shape to put them in," and go on and bind Congress. I want the board to tell us first what ought to be done.

Mr. HALE. I understand what the Senator from Kentucky is seeking to get at, that nothing shall be done until a report is made to Congress; and he brought up the attitude the Secretary of the Navy has taken in answer to a question put by him. The Secretary of the Navy did not advance that proposition; but on being asked whether he would submit this question as to these old contracts to the Attorney-General and be bound by his opinion, the contractors being all or nearly all Pennsylvania parties, the Secretary of the Navy was bound to reply in one way or the other, and I know in my own mind the Secretary stood better with his answer, and I think he did with the Senator from Kentucky, that in a matter of that kind where the responsibility was upon him, where his reputation to be made in the Department was involved, he would not consent to turn it over to the Attorney-General even to be decided. I think he was right in that. If I had been in his place, let me say to the Senator from Kentucky, I would have made the same reply, and I think the Senator from Kentucky would, too.

Mr. BECK. The Senator must not understand me as finding any fault with the attitude of the Secretary. I think I asked him the question myself, and we agreed as to the answer. I do not care to say anything about whether they were Pennsylvania men, the Attorney-General being a Pennsylvania man. But the Senate understands the difference in the propositions. I do not want anything done until Congress is advised. I do not want any executive officer to decide whether these contracts are legal or whether they are not legal. I do not want men who have maintained these contracts to come out and say, "All that has been said against these contracts is set aside by the action of Congress," and I do not want those who have made charges against the former Secretary to say, "All you pretend about the legality of these contracts is condemned by the action of Congress."

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think these contractors could claim their contracts had been in any way approved or sustained under the provision the committee reports?

Mr. BECK. They will think so. Whether the courts would think so or not I do not know.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think the provision the committee has inserted obliging the Secretary to consult this board before he moves an inch, not only as to plans but as to whether he shall move an inch, would be pleasing to the contractors?

Mr. BECK. My impression is that the amendment of the committee, after we talked over that matter, relieves a good deal any apprehension I should have had as to the rights of the contractors. I do not believe they have any rights; and I think the committee and the Senator from Maine endeavored fairly (whether successfully or not) to prevent them from having any claim by reason of anything contained in this bill.

Mr. HALE. I certainly have, and it seems to me I have succeeded.

Mr. BECK. I doubt it. The only point is whether we had not better have the advisory board look at the whole question between now and December and report to us the whole situation, and then we can appropriate whatever is necessary after we know all the facts.

Mr. HALE. If the Senate concludes to adopt the view taken by the Senator from Kentucky, and provide that nothing shall be done until a report is made to Congress, we shall have then no additional light that we have not now. It will be simply a postponement, with nothing to be done upon these ships that have cost us already $3,528,580.58.

Mr. INGALLS. Since the reconstruction began?

Mr. HALE. Yes, if you call it reconstruction on these new ships; they are new ships. That is what has been spent upon them. It is postponing for one year more any work upon them. The amendment of the committee I have modified at the suggestion of the Senator from Delaware, so that if at any portion of it it seemed that the Secretary had a discretion not controlled by this board, that should be taken away, and he is satisfied with that; and neither can the Secretary spend a dollar upon any plan, or decide upon any plan or that he will make any plan, until this board have advised and approved any course in that direction. It is the question, and that is all it amounts to, whether we shall delay in this condition for another year any work or expense upon these valuable ships, which for their purposes for harbor defense, as the board of examiners have unitedly reported, are the best ships that can be afloat in the world; that is the question. If it is thought advisable to postpone all work for a year, we shall when we come here at the short session next winter be confronted with the same questions and with no additional light. But that is for the Senate to decide. It is not for the Senator from Kentucky nor for me to be bigoted in this matter, or to seek in any pride of opinion to have our way. I do not think he does; I know that I do not.

But with the Senate understanding the subject fully, with all the safeguards that have been thrown around it, I am willing that the vote shall be taken whether this shall be postponed under what the Senator calls additional safeguards for another year; but according to my judgment it is clear that finding these embarrassed ships upon our hands, taking them as we have decided to do, and to which nobody objects, from the yards of the contractors, and finding them ready for work to be done upon them under safeguards that have been thrown around them by the committee amendment, the sooner we utilize and make these ships of some purpose and effect to us, if trouble does arise, the better for us.

Mr. INGALLS. Can the Senator from Maine inform the Senate what is the estimated cost of rendering these vessels ready for martial purposes and traversing the sea?

Mr. HALE. Yes; it will be over $3,000,000 upon the five.

Mr. INGALLS. So we have expended already five and a half millions and three and a half millions, making nine millions, and require an additional expenditure of three millions more, which would make twelve millions.

Mr. HALE. We have only spent $3,528,580.

Mr. INGALLS. But we spent $5,400,000 in the first instance.

Mr. HALE. But that has nothing to do with this matter. That has been explained over and over again. These vessels have been built from the bottom.

Mr. INGALLS. Twice.

Mr. HALE. A good deal more than the Senator from Kansas ever builds a speech that he makes. They have been built right from the bottom, and now they stand before us—

Mr. INGALLS. So I understand. There were two Miantonomohs on the register at the same time, one being in the process of dislocation and demolition and the other in process of construction around a plank or spike. That I understand thoroughly. But that does not change the fact that the aggregate expenditure for these four vessels so standing on the Navy Register up to this time has been $9,000,000, and the Senator informs us that the estimated expenditure to render them available for purposes of harbor defense is $3,000,000 more, which makes $12,000,000.

Mr. HALE. I do not pretend to state it with accuracy, but it will be something about that.

Mr. INGALLS. It will not be any less than that; I think there is no question on that point; and if they are to be again demolished and dislocated and distributed and again rebuilt around a plank or a spike or a knot-hole, no one can tell how far the expenditure will proceed.

Now, what I am anxious to ascertain is whether or not if this expenditure of $1,000,000 is now appropriated by Congress, which is to be inevitably followed by an appropriation of two millions in another year to complete these vessels, because we shall then be met by the argument that unless the money is appropriated what we have spent is thrown away, we are going to procure anything that will be beneficial for the purposes for which these ships are desired. I am advised by those who pretend to be skilled in these matters that these second editions of these four vessels were constructed without a drawing or without a plan; that they were built haphazard from day to day, erected rib after rib and plank after plank without any preliminary studies or drawing or models, and that they stand to-day the most extraordinary specimens of naval architecture in the world, and that those best competent to judge hesitate to say that if they were completed they would even float much less carry armor and armament. Therefore, Mr. President, I should like to have, in some way, this expenditure withheld until Congress itself can say whether, in view of all the circumstances, it is advisable to make an aggregate expenditure of $12,000,000 for four vessels that will be worth nothing when they are done.

Mr. BECK. The House bill and the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations even now do not in my opinion authorize any change of plan or anything else except to go on and to continue and complete these vessels, either under the contracts of 1877, or in the same general line in the slipshod, loose way alluded to by the Senator from Kansas. When you read the amendment you will find it says "to the beginning and continuing to completion of work upon the engines and machinery of said vessels."

Mr. HALE. How could the Senator get any more fundamentally at the bottom at the initiation of this new work than by that clause: "to the beginning and continuing to the completion?" I put in that word "beginning" in order to meet this very difficulty that the Senator raises that there should be nothing below, that there should be nothing before, that it should be an initial proceeding, that it should be a beginning. What better could I do?

Mr. BECK. There being nothing done now begun to be carried on, this provision is as to the engines and boilers. The Senator from Delaware said a few moments ago that Harlan and Hollingsworth have the boilers of the Amphitrite ready now; they are ready to be put in, they are now waiting, and this appropriation orders it to be done. It is to go on, in other words, on the old plan, and the old plan seems to be exactly what the Senator from Kansas has stated.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think a plan would be good for anything unless it was approved by the advisory board?

Mr. BECK. The plan for the engines, armor, and armament would have to be submitted to the board, and approved by them first; but here is just the difficulty: these vessels were all built in that slipshod way that the Senator from Kansas has spoken of, the hulls built by one man, the machinery by another, the guns by another, the rooms for the men by another. Commander Evans appeared before some very distinguished gentlemen, and they asked him certain questions. Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, put the questions. I will not say where this occurred, but I will read from the examination:

The CHAIRMAN. Is not that the system that must be adopted in order to build these ships successfully?

Commander EVANS. It seems to me so. The way that the work has gone on in the Navy heretofore has been, to say the least of it, ridiculous. The old plan was this: when a ship was to be built the constructors would build her hull; when that was done, and the engineers came to look at it, they would say: "Hallo, there is no room here for the engines." So they would put her down a foot more in the water; and then when the ordnance officer came along he would say the hatches were too close to the water-ways, so that the guns couldn't be mounted; then the equipment officer would complain that he couldn't swing men enough to fight the guns, and so on. I think it is time that system was stopped.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think it is possible to make any progress until we have a head to this business; one executive and a board of advisers at the head?

Commander EVANS. I think that to build these ships successfully you must have a board to do it, and the plans must be prepared by that board. The plans of the engines must be given to the engineer to build; and the plan of the hull to the constructor, and so on throughout each department of the ship. You must say to each, "There are your plans; do not vary an inch one way or the other;" and then, if the parts do not fit when the ship is finished, you had better hang some of these people.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you not know that in the Navy in the past there has been a strong hostility to an advisory board of this character?

Commander EVANS. No, sir; not in the Navy, I think. There has been, though, in the Navy Department. The bureau officers, naturally, will always be opposed to anything that cuts their power or authority.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you not think that it existed among the line officers as well as the staff?

Commander EVANS. No, sir; I think not. I never heard a line officer express that feeling in my life. On the contrary, I have heard a great many of the line officers pray for the day when we would have a board organized. You see the line officer is the man who suffers most from the evils we have been speaking of. The line officer finds himself sent to sea in ships that cannot fight and that are utterly uneconomical. I have had some experience in one of them myself, the Delaware, in China. That vessel rolled thirty-seven degrees each way, and if you had cast a gun loose it would have taken charge of the whole concern.

The CHAIRMAN. Where is that ship now?

Commander EVANS. She is now the hospital ship at New York.

The CHAIRMAN. And worthless for any naval purpose?

Commander EVANS. Utterly so. She was commenced in the latter part of the war and finished just about the close of the war. Her tonnage was about 3,200 tons. She went to China on one cruise, and that is about all she has ever done.

I inquired about the Delaware, which cost over a million dollars, and I think we got about $30,000 for her. She only made one cruise to China and was abandoned. What I want to secure is that this board shall submit their report to Congress and tell us all about it, and then let us question the Secretary of the Navy and the board and act on the best information we can get. I know how we can use these vessels, and I know a very good use for them. I would take two or three of them to League Island, a place where there never ought to be a navy-yard, where there is little but mud and fog and malaria and abomination, and I would sink them there, (if we are going to keep it,) so as to make a foundation for something. That is the easiest way to get clear of them, unless they are better than I think they are.

Mr. BUTLER. According to the Senator from Kansas, I think they would sink as soon as they struck water, and if his statement be correct it would be unsafe to attempt to launch them.

Mr. FARLEY. I wish to ask the Senator a question. One of the vessels mentioned in this bill, the Monadnock, has been tested, so far as her floating qualities are concerned. She was taken from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, and the question I wish to propound to the Senator from Kentucky is, would the $400,000 that he proposes as an amendment be sufficient to launch these four vessels and make the necessary repairs upon them and fit them for use? I understand the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to say that the estimate is less than $400,000 for launching these four vessels mentioned. The bill appropriates $2,200,000, of which $1,000,000 is to be applied to launching them and completing the Miantonomoh. The Monadnock's floating qualities, I say, have been established. As to the other vessels, I know nothing about them.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from California must recollect that the Monadnock was taken around there with only her hull finished.

Mr. FARLEY. Yes. She has been lying on the dock at Mare Island ever since.

Mr. BECK. And will float as she now lies, but when you add a good many hundred tons of machinery, and the coal necessary to drive her along, and put an eighty-ton gun in her turret, you treble the weight on her in her present condition. The point is not that these vessels will not float as hulls, but whether you can finish them into fighting ships and make them float. I am inclined to believe they will all float except the Puritan.

Mr. FARLEY. There was a board appointed by Secretary Thompson during his administration of the Navy Department for the purpose of examining the Monadnock and these other vessels. There were two reports, one made in favor of repairing and finishing the Monadnock, and one against it.

Mr. BECK. Why not wait until the new board is created and has reported to us?

Mr. FARLEY. It will only be four or five months until some action can be taken upon it if we wait for the report. I have no particular objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky if the amount of $400,000 is sufficient, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and the Senator from Kentucky, and the Senator from Maine, I think, all admit that it will be sufficient for the purpose of making the necessary repairs upon and launching these vessels.

Mr. MORGAN. I prefer the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky because the amendment requires that this examination shall be made by the board and reported to Congress before any further definite action is taken. Until I heard the discussion between the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Maine, I had no doubt at all that the language in this bill requiring the launching of these ships was mandatory; but the Senator from Kentucky seems to concede what the Senator from Maine insists on, that it is merely directory, and that it is subject to the action and advisement of the board of advice. The language is as follows:

That $1,000,000 of the above amount shall be applied by the Secretary of the Navy to the following objects.

It goes on to enumerate them—

To building and fitting the turrets and pilot-house of the iron-clad steamer Miantonomoh; and to the launching to the best advantage of the iron-clad steamers Monadnock, Puritan, Amphitrite, and Terror.

That language is unexceptionably mandatory. The Secretary of the Navy is not only authorized but he is required to expend not exceeding $1,000,000 of this money for the purposes I have read from the text of the bill, and the additional purposes expressed in the succeeding part of it. I do not see how the Secretary of the Navy could possibly refuse to expend this money for the launching of these four ships and for the fitting of turrets and pilot-house on the iron-clad steamer Miantonomoh under this language.

Now, let us look at the qualifications. It will be seen in the proviso that the qualifications that are affixed to his power relate not to the launching of these four iron-clads, nor do they relate to the putting on of the pilot-house and turrets on the Miantonomoh.

Mr. HALE. It is admitted by everybody that that is to be done.

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky contemplates the launching of the four ships. All agree they ought to be launched.

Mr. MORGAN. But I understand the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky requires all this matter to be brought to the attention of Congress before anything is done.

Mr. ALLISON. No; his amendment provides for the completion of the Miantonomoh and the launching of the other four ships.

Mr. BECK. That is right.

Mr. MORGAN. And that requires the question of putting in engines and armament to come before Congress.

Mr. HALE. As the other four ships?

Mr. MORGAN. If it is agreed all around that these four ships are to be launched, and it is agreed that the Miantonomoh is to be completed to the extent of putting a turret and pilot-house on her, then I do not see any necessity for the Senator's amendment at all; the question of going further, then, is a question which certainly is brought within the advisement, to say the least, of the board of advice. I was mistaken in the scope of the Senator's amendment, having heard it read only from the desk.

Mr. BECK. The Miantonomoh is complete except her guns, and if we finish her now and put her guns on and she works successfully we shall know that between now and next winter, and that will be some additional assurance to us as to whether we ought to go on with the other four that have nothing but hulls yet.

Mr. MORGAN. Misunderstanding the Senator's amendment and supposing there was really a necessity for it, I intended to support it; but I do not intend to do so now.

Mr. HALE. I hope we may have a vote upon this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. VOORHEES in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.]

Mr. HALE. Before the question is put on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky to strike out, the text should be perfected. I think the vote has not been yet taken on the committee's proviso:

Provided, That all plans for the engines, armor, and armament of the said four last-mentioned iron-clads, &c.

That should be adopted.

Mr. BECK. That vote may as well be taken first.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 609, before the word "two," the Committee on Appropriations propose to insert the word "the," and in line 610, after the word "act," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That all plans for the completion of the armor and armament of the said iron-clad vessels provided for in this bill shall be submitted to the board of advice and survey created by this act, for its approval or disapproval.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Provided, That all plans for the engines, armor, and armament of the said four last-mentioned iron-clad vessels shall be submitted to the naval advisory board created by this act, for its approval or disapproval, and said board, with the same powers, shall also consider and advise as to the wisdom and expediency of undertaking and completing said engines, armor, and armament.

Mr. HAWLEY. Before the question is put on that, I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator in charge of the bill that he should put in also the word "hulls."

Mr. HALE. I think that is right, because in any question as to what should be done in the future with these the board would examine any plans there are of the hulls also. After the word "the" and before "engines," in line 615, I move to insert "hulls."

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope that will not be done there.

Mr. HALE. The Senator does not want this shall be submitted to the board for their approval, for that is a thing of the past. It is only that they may be laid before the board when it shall be considering the question of what it shall do as to machinery and armament, but the Senator would not want them to pass upon the question of approving these because that opens the old question about the hulls, and we do not want to open that.

Mr. HAWLEY. If a certain addition to these hulls enables the vessels to float, and without it they will not, we had better put on the addition. That is one of the disputes about the hulls, whether they will satisfactorily float or not; and I feel like disclosing the alleged fact that there are no plans, and never have been, for these hulls.

Mr. HALE. Well, it will do no harm any way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. Does not this leave it to the Secretary of the Navy after all? He is not bound to adopt the action of the naval advisory board as the amendment stands.

Mr. HALE. He may do nothing.

Mr. ALLISON. If he does anything, he is bound to do as the board tells him.

Mr. HOAR. Does it read so? The provision is that the money "shall be applied by the Secretary of the Navy to the following objects."

Mr. HALE. Subject to the conditions specified.

Mr. HOAR. "As he may, on examination, think most expedient and best."

Mr. HALE. That has been struck out.

Mr. HOAR. What has been struck out?

Mr. HALE. What you are reading now, "as he may, on examination, think most expedient and best," &c. That has been stricken out at the suggestion of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] to meet the very point. In lines 605 and 606 and part of line 607 the words "as he may, on examination, think most expedient and best for the interests of the service" have been stricken out, and the whole thing is left to be subject to the approval of the board.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.]

Mr. HALE. I suggest that the Senator take the vote on the proviso in the amendment first before he takes it on the amount of money.

Mr. BECK. That is right, because if my amendment is not agreed to it would not be perhaps proper to strike down the amount from a million to four hundred thousand dollars. I regard this as simply settling the question whether or not in the next few months the old contracts of 1877 shall all be adopted and work begun accordingly.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will not vote under that apprehension. I do not consider it in any way at all an indorsement of those old contracts.

Mr. INGALLS. Let me ask the Senator from Maine if it is his purpose and the purpose of the committee, in having this advisory board established, to provide that unless they concur in a certain method of expenditure the Secretary of the Navy shall not act?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. INGALLS. Then let me ask him where in the amendment of the committee that is expressed? In the words in italics from line 614 down to 622, the powers of this advisory board are defined to be to "consider and advise as to the wisdom and expediency of undertaking and completing said engines, armor, and armament." If the Senator will point out to me any language either in the bill as it came from the House or in the amendments of the committee that prevents the Secretary of the Navy from doing just exactly as he pleases whether this advisory board suggests one way or the other, I should be glad to have him do so.

Mr. HALE. The thing the Secretary of the Navy is to do, if he does anything, is to spend money. He cannot move an inch without money; he has got to get that money from Congress, and this bill provides—

That $1,000,000 of the above amount shall be applied by the Secretary of the Navy to the following objects—

There is a limitation of the appropriation of the million dollars—Under the Bureau of Construction and Repair, to building and fitting the turrets and pilot-house of the iron-clad steamer Miantonomoh; and to the launching to the best advantage of the iron-clad steamers Monadnock, Puritan, Amphitrite, and Terror.

He can spend that money upon them, and upon them alone. "Shall be applied by the Secretary of the Navy to the following objects." Does it help it any for the language of the statute to be "and it must be applied to the following objects?" Is that any stronger in law than the words "to be applied to the following objects?"

Mr. INGALLS. I think the Senator hardly conceives the point I wanted to call his attention to.

Mr. HALE. I have not quite got to that yet. "To be applied to the following objects." Can anything be more explicit than that?

Mr. INGALLS. So far, so good.

Mr. HALE. There is no objection to completing the Miantonomoh and to the launching of these other ships now. Now it says:

Under the Bureau of Steam-Engineering—

That is, shall be applied under the Bureau of Steam-Engineering to these objects—subject to the conditions hereinafter provided, to the beginning and continuing to completion of work upon the engines and machinery of said vessels.

Then the next clause giving the discretion is struck out.

Mr. INGALLS. Now, show us the conditions that limit the authority of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. HALE. It is:

Provided, That all plans for the engines, armor, and armament of the said four last-mentioned iron-clad vessels—

Which are the vessels that it is said before this money shall be applied to—

All plans for the engines, armor, and armament of the said four last-mentioned iron-clad vessels—

Which we have described—

shall be submitted to the naval advisory board created by this act, for its approval or disapproval.

Can he move an inch unless they approve?

Mr. INGALLS. If that is all the Senator has to say, will he advise me where there is any limitation of the power of the Secretary to do as he pleases if this naval advisory board disapprove of the plans for the construction of the armament?

Mr. HALE. Well, I must say that if the Senator, I do not care how suspicious he is, after such a board is created, and after it is explicitly declared that what is done shall be subject to their approval, believes that any Secretary would, if that board disapproved, still go on and spend the money, he must have a very vast idea of the responsibility that a Secretary would take.

Mr. INGALLS. I speak from considerable experience of the past doings of Secretaries of the Navy.

Mr. HALE. That is no analogy. There has never been an attempt heretofore or a condition where the Secretary of the Navy has been surrounded by any such restrictions as we have put around him.

Mr. HOAR. I raised this question first and yielded to the answer of the Senator from Maine, that the language had been changed, and did not pursue it any further; but I think the Senator will see himself that although this is a very narrow verbal criticism, yet it is a perfectly sound verbal criticism which the Senator from Kansas makes. Just look at the language as the Senator now interprets it. It is this in substance: the Secretary of the Navy shall apply a sum of money to—what? To, among other things, doing so and so about "such of said vessels as he may on examination think most expedient and best for the interests of the service."

Mr. HALE. That is struck out.

Mr. HOAR. That is struck out but this remains:

To the beginning and continuing to completion of work upon the engines and machinery of said vessels.

Mr. HALE. Subject to conditions.

Mr. HOAR. I know. What is the condition? The condition is that he shall first hear the advice of an advisory board.

Mr. HALE. More than that.

Mr. HOAR. That is the point. It does not seem to me that there is more than that. It seems to me that the law still not merely vests in the Secretary a discretion, but it imposes on him a mandate to do this thing, and he has to do it according to his opinion just as if it said "after consulting the most approved authority on naval architecture" or anything else. The advisory board does not limit the Secretary of the Navy. The Senator thinks his language accomplishes a certain result which the Senator from Kansas thinks ought to be accomplished. Therefore it is not worth while for me to waste time by discussing whether we are right or wrong. If instead of saying that the plans still be subject to the board's approval or disapproval we say "shall first be approved by" the board, we reach the point.

Mr. HALE. I will say "shall be submitted to and shall be subject to the approval or disapproval of the advisory board."

Mr. HOAR. That will do.

Mr. HALE. I am entirely willing to do that. I would have put it in myself before if I thought it had been needed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that modification will be inserted.

Mr. HALE. I want the Secretary to be subject to their approval; I do not want him to move an inch without it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.]

Mr. MORGAN. What part of the amendment are we voting upon, the entire amendment or the lower clause?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All except the amount.

The yeas and nays were taken.

Mr. WALKER, (when Mr. GARLAND's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. GARLAND] is paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

Mr. VANCE, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MITCHELL,] who is absent from the city. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. VOORHEES, (when his name was called.) I am paired on this with the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. LAMAR.] I would vote "yea," and I am advised by friends of the Senator from Mississippi that he would vote "nay," if present.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. SAWYER. I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. CAMDEN.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FERRY. In the absence of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY,] I am paired with him. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—33.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] moves also in line 595 to insert "$400,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary," in lieu of "$1,000,000."

Mr. BECK. I suppose there will be no objection to that now.

Mr. HALE. No; that naturally follows.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, in line 595 "$1,000,000" will be stricken out and "$400,000" inserted, and also the words, "or so much thereof as may be necessary;" so as to read:

That $400,000 of the above amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be applied by the Secretary of the Navy to the following objects.

Mr. ALLISON. The aggregate amount ought to be reduced $600,000.

Mr. HALE. The $2,200,000 should be $1,600,000. That is the amendment I propose now. In line 589 I move to strike out "$2,200,000," and insert "$1,600,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be agreed to if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to call attention to a correction of a letter which should be made in the name "Miantonomah." It should be "Miantonomoh." It is so in the history of Connecticut.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made.

Mr. HALE. I wish to add at the end of the provision which has just been adopted certain words which were stricken out, that the Senate will not object to. Beginning in line 607, I move to restore the words:

And that any part of the appropriation for said bureau not used as above specified may be applied toward the construction of engines and machinery of the two new cruising vessels provided for in this act.

Mr. BECK. That can be added.

Mr. HALE. That was stricken out with the rest, and should come in with the clause just put in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment restoring those words.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Mr. President—

Mr. ROLLINS. Are the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations disposed of?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROLLINS. I have an amendment to offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California shall be recognized.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I now offer the amendment of which I gave notice, to strike out after the word "dollars," in line 130, down to and including the word "Statutes," in line 152. The matter from line 130 to 140 has been stricken out, so that my amendment will commence after the word "hereafter," in line 140.

Mr. BUTLER. The first part went out on a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, beginning with the word "all," in line 140, down to and including the word "statutes," in line 152, in the following words:

All promotions to the grade of rear-admiral on the active list shall be made from the grades of commodore and captain, and no more promotions to the grade of commodore shall be made after July 1, 1883: Provided, however, That no commodore now in the service shall be reduced in rank or deprived of his commission by reason of this act: And provided further, That no officer shall be promoted under the provisions of this act unless his mental, moral, and professional fitness shall have been established according to the provisions of sections 1496 and 1497 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. BAYARD. The words "by selection," in line 142, went out on a point of order.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I propose to insert in lieu of that matter what I send to the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The matter proposed to be inserted will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

A commission consisting of nine members, to wit: two Senators, to be designated by the President pro tempore of the Senate; three Representatives in Congress, to be designated by the Speaker of the House; the Secretary of the Navy; and three officers of the Navy, to be designated by the President of the United States, is hereby constituted and appointed a board or commission to consider all matters relating to the proper reduction of the official list of the Navy and the adjustment of the several grades and corps thereof, said commission to make report thereon to Congress at its next session. The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to detail an officer to act as secretary, and to employ such clerks and stenographers as may be necessary; and said commission shall have power to send for persons and papers.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Mr. President, this is the same amendment which I offered yesterday. The object of it is to remand all that relates to the subject of the reorganization of the Navy to a mixed commission, to consist of two Senators and three members of the House of Representatives, to be selected by the respective presiding officers of the Houses, and three officers of the Navy, to be selected by the President of the United States, and the Secretary of the Navy, who shall form a board or commission to take into consideration all subjects relating to the reorganization of the personnel of the Navy and to report to Congress at the next session.

It is evident from the debate which has taken place upon this bill that the Senate is not prepared to adopt the provisions which came from the House, stripped as they are of all amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations for the reorganization of the personnel of the Navy. The particular provision which I have moved to strike out provides that—

All promotions to the grade of rear-admiral on the active list shall be made by selection—

Mr. LOGAN. The words "by selection" were stricken out yesterday on a point of order.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The words "by selection" were stricken out. The provision is that—

All promotion to the grade of rear-admiral on the active list shall be made from the grades of commodore and captain, and no more promotions to the grade of commodore shall be made after July 1, 1883.

This is a radical change in the organization of the Navy by dropping out one of the ranks of the Navy. So I might go through these provisions. Another part of the bill provides for the reduction of the numbers of several of the grades in the Navy; it provides for the reduction of lieutenants of the Navy; and in fact in nearly all the grades there is a reduction, in some greater and in others less. This brings up questions of the greatest moment to the Navy as to its efficiency and as regards its personnel.

I do not think that at this late hour in the session the Senate is prepared to go into this matter. It has not the time to devote to a proper discussion and to consider this subject in all its bearings, its effect upon the Navy and the naval establishment.

If reorganization is necessary the proper way perhaps to arrive at a correct conclusion in respect to it would be first to take into consideration the number of officers which we have now in the Navy of the several grades. The first question which would arise would be whether we have too many of one grade and two few of another, or whether we have too many of all grades. That could only be determined by considering how many ships of the Navy we have now in commission; how many which are not in commission might be put in commission; what the policy of the Government should be in respect to repairing vessels and putting them in commission. After those charged with the investigation of this subject should come to a conclusion upon these topics, we might then see whether we had officers enough to properly officer the ships or whether we had too many, and then provide for their proper reduction.

Another subject which should properly be considered would be as to the policy of the Government in building new vessels; how many new vessels the Government would probably build; how many it ought to build; how many it needs, if it needs any, and then how many officers it would take to properly officer those vessels. In making the reduction in the different grades the effect it will have upon the esprit du corps and efficiency of the Navy ought to be considered, comparing the numbers of one grade with those of another, as it might affect the question of promotion.

The bill provides for a very sweeping reorganization of the Navy. In my judgment the effect of it will be, if adopted, to drive out most of the enterprising and worthy young officers of the Navy, who will see that by these provisions promotion for a great number of years is impossible for them. They will quit a service in which they have no hope of advancement and go into private pursuits, and you will have very few left of the best men in the younger officers of the Navy, and only those without ambition, without hope of advancement, mere drones in the service, who would go along and perform what duty may be assigned to them as best they might, taking the best care of themselves, and waiting for promotion.

I do not care to go into a long discussion, but I think the Senate is attempting to grapple here with a great subject at a time when it is not prepared to do it. We have heard from the Committee on Appropriations that if the provisions sent to us by the House are stricken out and a conference committee is raised to consider these questions we shall have trouble with the House of Representatives. I think the best compromise that can be offered, and the best thing which we can give to our conferees to stand upon, is this proposition for a commission to take charge of the subject, investigate it thoroughly, and give us their opinion at the next session of Congress.

It is said that these reductions are in the line of economy. It is only three or four months until the next session of Congress will begin, at most in six months the subject can be acted upon by Congress, and this bill really does not work any economy so far as the pay of the Navy is concerned for that length of time. The appropriations for the pay of the Navy are about the same that they were last year, and cannot be affected by the proposed reduction in the personnel of the Navy, because reductions will not take place until long after the next session of Congress.

I do not desire to take up the time in a discussion of the matter, but I submit this proposition for the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. This strikes me as partaking of the nature of legislation, and therefore under the rules I object to it on the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is well taken upon the proposition to insert. The question recurs on the motion to strike out.

Mr. MILLER, of California. There is no objection to striking out what I propose, I take it. For the very same reasons I insist on the motion to strike out.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the motion to strike out? Let us hear what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The matter will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the following, beginning in line 140:

All promotions to the grade of rear-admiral on the active list shall be made from the grades of commodore and captain, and no more promotions to the grade of commodore shall be made after July 1, 1883: Provided, however, That no commodore now in the service shall be reduced in rank or deprived of his commission by reason of this act: And provided further, That no officer shall be promoted under the provisions of this act unless his mental, moral, and professional fitness shall have been established according to the provisions of sections 1496 and 1497 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. LOGAN. That provision was agreed to by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What was agreed to by the Senate is of course open to amendment by the Senate. The whole bill was read over. For instance, the words "by selection," in line 142, were stricken out. The text remains as it came from the House, and that of course may be amended at any time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I am very sorry that the point of order was made upon the Senator from California, for his proposition met my hearty concurrence, and I believe would have given the best solution possible of all the difficulties attending this bill, which in my judgment instead of being called a bill to reorganize the Navy, would be better called a bill to destroy the Navy.

The particular part which it has been moved to strike out proposes to abolish the grade of commodore entirely. Another clause of the bill proposes to reduce the lieutenants of the Navy from two hundred and eighty to two hundred. I maintain that there is nothing so injurious to the service, nothing so unjust to the officers of the service, as these two propositions.

I have made a calculation as to how long, if this bill becomes a law, it will require for the junior officers, the subordinate ones in the Navy, to arrive at a captaincy. I find that the master of a vessel will be forty years of age when he is promoted to a lieutenantcy, an ensign will have to be forty-four years of age, while those who are now midshipmen, before they reach the rank of lieutenant, will be forty-eight years of age. That is the average. I know a lieutenant, just in the midst of the line of lieutenants, who when he reaches a captaincy will be fifty-nine years of age, almost ready to go upon the retired list. I know a young ensign who is very distinguished, upon whom I made the calculation under existing laws that he will be promoted to a lieutenantcy in two years. If the bill becomes a law it will be fourteen years before he is promoted.

What sort of efficiency to the Navy will that give? Your entire list will be furnished from the list of captains. Does not any man see that all the enterprising, bold, and ambitious young officers of the Navy will resign? Shall no man be a captain before he is fifty or sixty? Shall no captain be promoted before he is old enough to be placed on the retired list by force of law? It is utterly ruinous to the discipline and to the efficiency of the Navy. If this bill becomes a law we will have a set of mediocre men in our Navy, and we will not have gallant, toplofty young fellows at all; they will all quit it in disgust, and they ought to quit it in disgust.

I assert that in my judgment, whatever may be said to the contrary, we have not to-day one single officer too many. Look at the various duties they accomplish. Look at your Naval Academy; who instructs your cadets there? Look at your training-ships; who instructs them there? Look at your navy-yards; who commands them? Look in your bureaus, assisting the Secretary of the Navy; who has charge of them? All are details from the Navy. I venture to assert that if a war should spring up to-day we would not have officers enough if we intended to increase our naval establishment to proper proportions for defense or aggression.

Mr. LOGAN. We have more than we had during the war.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We have fewer than we had in 1866.

Mr. LOGAN. We have more to-day.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I say we have fewer. The policy of the Government has been not to keep up in time of peace a great military or naval establishment, but to keep a nucleus of educated and competent officers ready to take command of such an army and of such a navy as we could improvise in time of public necessity. If a war should spring up to-day and we should increase our naval establishment to anything like the proportion to correspond with the greatness and wealth and power of this mighty nation, with 25,000 miles of exposed sea-coast, we should have to call upon citizens for volunteers, as we did in the late war. It is perfectly apparent to my mind.

Sir, one other question as to the commodores. Day before yesterday, in some remarks of mine upon that subject, I spoke of its being an ancient rank, an illustrious one, as connected with the history and the glory of our Navy. My friend from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN,] with his usual modesty and graciousness of manner, in the most positive and emphatic terms asserted that we had no grade of commodore before 1862. He said Decatur, and Perry, and Truxton, and Barrow, and Rodgers, and a whole host of glorious heroes were never commodores at all, that they were merely captains. He said that the law of 1862 created that grade. The Senator is usually correct in his facts; he is one of the committee who reported this bill, and I thought possibly I might be mistaken. I had not the means at hand then to show him the fact, but this morning I went into the Library and I procured a book on this subject in which the various acts of Congress are explained, and I shall presently show the Senator from Illinois that the title of commodore is as old as the Republic itself. It was a Revolutionary title, it was connected with the war of 1812, and I will show that it was created in 1776. I read the act of Congress November 15, 1776. Here are the recitals:

That the rank of the naval officers be, to the rank of officers in the land service, as follows:

Admiral as a general;
Vice-admiral as a lieutenant-general;
Rear-admiral as a major-general;
Commodore as a brigadier-general;
Captain of a ship of forty guns and upward, as a colonel;
Captain of a ship of twenty to forty guns as a lieutenant-colonel;
Captain of a ship of ten to twenty guns as a major;
Lieutenant in the Navy as a captain.

That is the law of 1776; yet the Senator says that the rank never existed; here is a law older than he or myself.

I want to show that from not only every bill or act of Congress or resolution of thanks to commodores for distinguished services, but from acts of Congress granting prize-money to commodores and their crews. In the act of 1798, authorizing the creation of a certain number of vessels, it recited:

And be it further enacted, That the number and grade of the officers to be appointed for the service of the said vessel shall be fixed by the President of the United States.

The President fixed the grade and fixed the command. The law gave him the right. He did do so, and he fixed the rank of commodore. He never fixed the rank of Admiral, Vice-Admiral, or rear-admiral. Although he had the power to do it he did not exercise it. I want to show by various acts. Here is the act approved February 4, 1819:

That the sum of $2,500 be hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; which sum shall be distributed by the Secretary of the Navy as prize-money among the representatives of Commodore Edward Preble, deceased.

Do you say that the Congress of the United States in 1819 did not know that Commodore Preble was a commodore?

And Captain Charles Stewart, the officers and crew of the brig of war Syren, or to the representatives of such as may be dead, on account of their proportion of the sum of $5,000, the appraised value of the brig Transfer, captured by the said brig Syren, for a breach of the blockade of the port of Tripoli, in the year 1804, during the war carried on by the United States against that power, the said brig Transfer having been taken into the service of the United States by Commodore Edward Preble, commander of the blockading squadron, which brig was regularly condemned as a good prize by sentence of a court of admiralty.

Again, March 2, 1839:

The sum of $153.33 to be paid to Jesse E. Dow, for his time and expenses in bearing dispatches from Commodore Elliott, commanding the United States naval squadron in the Mediterranean, and from Mr. Kavanagh, our chargé d'affaires in Portugal, to the Navy and State Departments of the United States.

I could go on and read you a dozen. Will the Senator say that the Congress of the United States, that the history of the country, lie; that the statute laws lie? I am amazed at the Senator. Look at the act of 1862 to which he referred. He had just as well say that the act of 1862 created the grade of captain and lieutenant as to say that it created the grade of commodore. The law purported to reorganize the Navy, to distribute the commodores and all the officers, giving their relative rank and the command to which they shall be entitled, and among other things it recites that a commodore shall command a first-rate vessel, a captain a second rate, and a lieutenant a third rate, and so on down. That is what the law recites. It does not purport to create grades. It recognizes an existing fact, as all the laws do in relation to the Navy or Army either. These old grades are traditional; they have been handed down to us from our English ancestry. You may go on and find resolutions of thanks, forty of them, swords presented by the national Government and by the State governments to commodores.

Again, I have a little book here called "Rules and Regulations and Instructions for the Naval Service of the United States, prepared by the board of Navy commissioners of the United States, with the consent of the Secretary of the Navy, in obedience to an act of Congress passed 17th of February, 1815, entitled "An act to alter and amend the several acts for establishing a Navy Department by adding thereto a board of commissioners." This is what they say in 1818, recollect. This board was acting under authority of law by special act of Congress. When it comes to enumerate the ranks and commands of the various officers it says:

1. The commission officers of the Navy of the United States are divided into the following ranks and denominations:
 - "Commodores, commanding squadrons;
 - "Captains, commanding frigates and vessels of twenty guns;
 - "Masters commandant, commanding sloops;
 - "Lieutenants."
2. Commodores are to wear their broad pendants at all times on board the ship they command.

Here again as to honors to be paid to commodores:

1. Commodores when acting on separate service by order of the Secretary of the Navy, and not otherwise, shall receive the salute of thirteen guns.

Military honors and ceremonies:

1. A commodore shall be received by a lieutenant's guard, the salute of officers, and two rifles.

What does all that mean? Does all that mean that we had no commodores until 1862? My friend from Illinois has entirely mistaken the history of the country; he has entirely misunderstood the history of his country when he says, as he did the other day, that we never had a commodore before 1862, that Decatur was never a commodore. I want to read the list of commodores here in the Navy Register:

A list of officers who have served as members of the board of navy commissioners since the passage of the act of February 7, 1815, creating that board:

Commodore John Rodgers, Commodore Isaac Hull, Commodore David Porter, Commodore Stephen Decatur, Commodore Isaac Chauncey, Commodore Charles Morris, Commodore William Bainbridge, Commodore Jacob Jones, Commodore Lewis Warrington, Commodore Thomas Tingly, Commodore D. T. Patterson, Commodore Charles Stewart, Commodore A. S. Wadsworth, Commodore J. B. Nicholson, Commodore William M. Crane, Commodore David Connor.

Do you say there were no commodores then? Oh, Mr. President, will you strike those grand old commanders, who were called commodores, recognized in resolutions proposed by Congress, by special acts, by Navy regulation, and by history—will you strike them from the naval nomenclature of our country? They are the proudest titles in our Navy. Every star that glitters in the proud diadem of our naval glory was placed there by one of those grand old men. The commodores have given to the Navy éclat. Will you strike them from the Navy list? If you do it you destroy the glory and the poetry of your Navy. Those grand old men have carried the broad pennant of commodore and the Stars and Stripes, with "free trade and sailors' rights" at the head, on every sea of the earth.

If you have too many officers in the Navy strike off from the top; let the office of admiral cease to exist, and then stop the supply at the little factory at Annapolis at the other end; but do not do so with the commodores. I will never consent to it on earth. I will never consent to see the title of commodore, which is dear to the hearts of every lover of his country, stricken from the Navy Register.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to take the books he used?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOGAN. I did not expect to be drawn into a discussion on this subject, but I am very glad the Senator has produced the evidence he has presented, for I will try to show that it is not evidence that would be received in any court in the world, so far as rank is concerned, and I will show that the word "commodore," when used, was under the act adopted by the Continental Congress.

I said in my statement the other day that the rank of commodore never existed in the United States until 1862. I say so now, and I say the Senator cannot produce the statute creating the rank. You may produce statutes of the character read, speaking of certain individuals and giving them a certain title, the same as we might pass an act this morning saying that General John Jones is entitled to so much, as descriptive of the person, because he is commonly called "General;" but when you investigate to find out whether he held the rank by law, that is a different proposition. That is exactly the error the Senator from Kentucky falls into in reference to this matter.

The word "commodore" is found in our statutes as a description of a person, but never as the rank of a person. The Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES] laughs. If he will show me a statute, a single statute, from the time that the Navy was organized, from the time that the Navy went into the hands of the President, which fixed the rank of commodore as a rank, not as a title, then I will agree that I am mistaken.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Where is the statute creating the rank of captain previous to 1862?

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is not one.

Mr. LOGAN. I will show what I state to be the fact, and I will read, for the benefit of the Senator from Florida, from the statute of 1794, when our Navy was reorganized, "An act to provide a naval armament," sections 1 and 2:

SECTION 1. Be it therefore enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be authorized to provide, by purchase or otherwise, equip, and employ four ships to carry forty-four guns each, and two ships to carry thirty-six guns each.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That there shall be employed on board each of the said ships of forty-four guns, one captain, four lieutenants, one lieutenant of marines, one chaplain, one surgeon, and two surgeon's mates; and in each of the ships of thirty-six guns, one captain, three lieutenants, one lieutenant of marines, one surgeon, and one surgeon's mate, who shall be appointed and commissioned in like manner as other officers of the United States are.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will allow me just a moment, that does not create the grade of captain; it merely recognizes it as an existing one, just as in the other acts the grade of commodore is recognized.

Mr. LOGAN. Wait, and the Senator will see:

Who shall be appointed and commissioned in like manner as other officers of the United States are.

That is exactly where the grade is created. Commissioned like other officers of the United States. There is the law, and there is the creation of the grade.

Speaking about Commodore Perry being a commodore, I will take Cooper's History of the United States Navy. There is Commodore Perry; there is his portrait, and under it "Commodore Oliver H. Perry, U. S. Navy." What is the history of his engagement, and what does it say? He is called in history commodore; he was called all the time by that title, as in the English navy, but what does this history say after calling him commodore? Let me read:

It had been expected that the Queen Charlotte, the second of the English vessels in regard to force, would be at the head of their line, and the Niagara had been destined to lead in and to lie against her, Captain Perry having reserved for himself a commander's privilege of engaging the principal vessel of the opposing squadron.

He is "Commodore" Perry in history, but when you speak of his rank he is "Captain" Perry. I will show the Senate, further than that, whether I am sustained in what I say.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suppose he was captain before he was a commodore.

Mr. LOGAN. He never was a commodore. The Senator cannot find it in any law. I will show him that in the reorganization of the Navy from the beginning of our Government—and when I speak of "our Government" I speak of the United States, and that is what I mentioned before; I am not speaking of the ranks under the Continental Congress, which were all abolished after the Congress of the United States assembled and a reorganization of the Navy took place.

What I base my opinion on is the law; not on what may be found in some history, but on the acts of Congress. Following the act of 1794, following the act of 1801, the act that I read, I will read the act of 1806, for the reorganization of the Navy. What does it say?

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to keep in actual service—in time of peace so many of the frigates and other public armed vessels of the United States as in his judgment the nature of the service may require, and to cause the residue thereof to be laid up in ordinary in convenient ports.

This is a reduction of vessels—

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the public armed vessels of the United States in actual service in time of peace shall be officered and manned as the President of the United States shall direct.

That is the law the Senator was speaking of when he spoke of it being put in the power of the President. Let us see if there is not something else that he does not find in the Navy Register which is prepared for a purpose. Mark you:

Provided, That the officers shall not exceed the following numbers and grades—

That is what I was speaking of, grade, rank, not title in any man, which is like the title of a judge without the man ever having been a judge, the title known to the people; I am talking of the rank that carries with it position and pay and grade. That is the law of 1806; the Senator said the grade of captain was fixed in 1862.

That is to say, thirteen captains, nine masters commandant, seventy-two lieutenants, and one hundred and fifty midshipmen—

This was our Navy organization in 1806—

but the said officers shall receive no more than half their monthly pay during the time when they shall not be under orders for actual services.

Where the ships were laid up and were not officered then the officers received but half pay. They were allowed the same as the law provides now where ships are laid up, that is, without services.

And provided further, That the whole number of able seamen, ordinary seamen, and boys shall not exceed 925; but the President may appoint for the vessels in actual service so many surgeons, surgeon's mates, sailing masters, chaplains, pursers, boatswains, gunners, sailmakers, and carpenters as may in his opinion be necessary and proper.

The very same that we had up to 1862, captains, lieutenants, boatswains, pursers, chaplains, and officers of that grade and kind. Then let us follow the law.

Mr. BUTLER. What is the date of that?

Mr. LOGAN. Eighteen hundred and six.

Mr. BUTLER. Does not the Senator think that recognizes the rank of commodore as having existed before that time?

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir; it does not.

Mr. BUTLER. Does not the Senator think so?

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir; it does not recognize any such rank then in the organization of the Navy.

Mr. BUTLER. It was a reduction of the Navy.

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir; an organization of the Navy providing for these men.

Let us go further. I defy any Senator on this floor to show me any statute from the organization of the United States of America fixing the grade of admiral, rear-admiral, vice-admiral, or commodore, until 1862.

Mr. BUTLER. They existed according to the authority cited by the Senator from Kentucky from the organization of the Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I say that the statute of 1862 does not create the grades at all; it recognizes them merely. I have it in my hand.

Mr. LOGAN. I know all about it. I will get through, and then the Senator can say what he pleases.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator from Illinois permit me to ask him one question, because this is an important subject? I ask him if previous to 1861 the ships of the United States belonging to the Navy did not float the broad pennant of a commodore that was recognized by the naval authorities of the world?

Mr. LOGAN. That is a very different proposition; no matter what they floated. They might have floated the pennant of an admiral; that did not make an admiral.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The law required it. I showed the Senator the law.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator showed me a great deal of law. I have not seen that. Allow me to go a little further. Follow it up to 1837, you will find the statute of 1837 provides that—

All "masters commandant" in the Navy shall be taken to be and shall be called "commanders"—

There is where the grade of commander comes—and all "sailing masters" shall be taken to be and shall be called "masters."

That is in 1837. Now, let us go a little further. I read the act of 1842 now:

Till otherwise ordered by Congress, the officers of the Navy shall not be increased beyond the number in the respective grades that were in the service on the 1st day of January, 1842, nor shall there be any further appointment of midshipmen until the number in the service be reduced to the number that were in service on the 1st day of January, 1841.

There is a law precisely like the one we propose now in reference to stopping promotion. In 1841 there was put upon the statute-books the same character of act for the purpose of decreasing the Navy that we propose now in reference to promotions.

If you turn back to the act of 1779 you find a provision that all vessels in the service of the United States mounting twenty guns and upward shall be commanded by captains. This is as far back as 1799:

All vessels in the service of the United States mounting twenty guns and upward, be commanded by captains—those not exceeding eighteen guns (except galleys, which are to be commanded as heretofore provided by law) by masters or lieutenants, according to the size of the vessel, to be regulated by the President of the United States.

By the act of January, 1857, captains were put in command of squadrons, and what were they called? What is the command of a commodore? It is the command of a squadron; and the law of 1857 provides that captains in command of squadrons shall be called—what? Shall be "denominated flag officers." Flag officer or fleet captain was the name given to those who commanded a higher command than one vessel, and no such rank as the Senator speaks of was given to any one.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask the Senator if he can put his hand on the statute abolishing the rank of commodore?

Mr. LOGAN. Of course I cannot, because the rank did not exist as a rank. If you put your hand on a statute creating the rank, then I will discuss the other proposition.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Kentucky pointed it out clearly, it seems to me.

Mr. LOGAN. He pointed it out in a register. He cannot point out a statute creating any such rank.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I gave the law defining the comparative rank between the Navy and the Army.

Mr. LOGAN. Show it to me. Let me see it. I should like to refer to it in the statutes. It is not a statute that the Senator was reading from.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is a statute.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well, refer to it, and we shall find it by the statutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There it is. Among other things you will find the relative rank between officers of the Navy and officers of the Army, just exactly as it is in our present law of 1862, because that is just a copy of the old law.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator was reading from an act of the Continental Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In 1776, after the Declaration of Independence.

Mr. LOGAN. In 1775, an act of the Continental Congress. We are not discussing what the Continental Congress did. I know they had the rank under the Continental Congress, and they had the rank of admiral and various others. They went beyond even the British navy at that time. I have discussed the question as to what rank existed under the laws of the United States. I have never disputed the proposition that they had the rank of commodore under the Continental Congress; nobody doubts it; but I say that in the laws of the United States since the Constitution was formed no such grade or rank can be produced by anybody. Now it seems the Senator was referring to an act of the Continental Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I gave the date of it.

Mr. LOGAN. Of course, in 1775; and there was a commission appointed and here are the resolutions; nobody disputes that; but in all our statutes, commencing with the first one that Congress ever passed under the Constitution of the United States, the various grades are specifically defined, and "captain" is the highest. Why is it that since I cited this several days ago no Senator has been able to find an act on the statute-books of the United States fixing the grade of commodore prior to the act of 1862?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. On that point is it not possible that the title of commodore could have preceded the rank?

Mr. LOGAN. Could have done what?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The title of commodore applied to senior captains of fleets might have preceded the rank of commodore. The two things are not necessarily the same.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not understand the Senator. I may be dull of comprehension. Does he say the rank of commodore?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I mean the title.

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, the title! The title of commodore?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. In the British service they have no brevet title. I say the title may have preceded the statutory rank of which the Senator speaks.

Mr. LOGAN. Doubtless there was the title of commodore as applied by the people, for ages almost, but I am talking about the rank as distinguished from the title. There is a great difference, as I illustrated. A man may be called a judge who was never a judge, or a general who was never a general, but when you come to examine the question of rank it is a different proposition from the title of a man.

Mr. HOAR. It is like the title of "esquire."

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly, like the title of "squire," as the Senator from Massachusetts says, which applies to lawyers. You will find in the law-books everywhere a title of that kind; but that is not rank. You call one of the notaries-public here in Washington City a judge. That does not make him a judge. But I ask the Senators who want to dispute this question with me in reference to the history of the statutes of this country to produce the law. I have produced the law showing the rank of captain that was given our Navy, and I defy them to show me one single statute that ever fixed the pay of a commodore in the United States Navy until 1862. The pay of a captain is fixed; the pay of a lieutenant is fixed; the pay of a commander is fixed; the pay of a master, of a midshipman, of a sail-maker is fixed, and everything of that kind; but you cannot show me where the pay of a commodore is fixed anywhere.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to call the attention of the Senator to one act somewhat later in date than that which the Senator presented.

Mr. LOGAN. What is it?

Mr. BUTLER. In the rules and regulations and instructions for the naval service of the United States prepared by a board of Navy commissions of the United States, with the consent of the Secretary of the Navy, in obedience to an act of Congress in 1815, among other things I find rank and command:

The commission officers of the Navy of the United States are divided into the following ranks and denominations:
Commodores, commanding squadrons.

How could that be if there was no such rank as that? The Senator said it was a mere honorary title, a mere compliment, a mere myth.

Mr. LOGAN. What does the Senator read from?

Mr. BUTLER. I read from the rules and regulations for the government of the Navy.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator turn to the statute and show it to me?

Mr. BUTLER. I have turned to the statute.

Mr. LOGAN. Where is it?

Mr. BUTLER. The statute of 1815.

Mr. LOGAN. What is the date of it?

Mr. BUTLER. Eighteen hundred and fifteen.

Mr. LOGAN. Turn to it and read it.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that these rules and regulations were made in pursuance of that act.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from South Carolina a question, for this is a very interesting historical matter? Suppose after that regulation in 1815 a captain commanding a single ship had had three or four others annexed to his command and had been in command of the four, he then would have become under naval courtesy and usage a commodore, and since that time has been called commodore, and has been addressed by the Secretary of the Navy as commodore; but suppose those three ships had been detached again, and he had gone his way with his own ship, would he not have been a captain afterward and not a commodore?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know any such thing.

Mr. HOAR. That, if I make it clear, tests the question whether this was a lawful rank or only a title by courtesy.

Mr. BUTLER. I cannot understand that the board of officers could have made a title by courtesy.

Mr. HALE. I do not believe there is any real question of fact between the Senators on this subject. There never was any real rank or grade of commodore. There was no pay of that grade attached to any such title.

Mr. BUTLER. Then there is an historic falsehood stated in these regulations.

Mr. HALE. Nobody questions that the word "commodore" is found in the regulations.

Mr. BUTLER. An historic falsehood?

Mr. LOGAN. If Senators get themselves into a difficulty about history and get into a discussion and try to bear down an historic fact that depends for verification upon our statutes, I ask is it the proper way to come in here and insist on some old worn-out book, that does not belong to the statutes or laws, to try to bear down the fact that the statutes show upon their face? Let the Senator hunt up the law and show it. There is no such law in existence, and I defy him to produce it.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator will not admit the law. He says we come in with some musty old book.

Mr. LOGAN. That is not one of the statutes of the United States.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator deny the authority of that book?

Mr. LOGAN. I do deny that book as any authority to say that the rank of commodore existed. If it did exist the law would show it.

Mr. BUTLER. Then it is perfectly useless to discuss the question with a Senator who denies the validity or authority of a book like this. It is not necessary to discuss it further.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator from South Carolina really believe that any rank or grade of commodore existed prior to 1862?

Mr. BUTLER. I am so perfectly satisfied of it that I have not one particle of doubt about it that the rank of commodore in the United States Navy did exist, and the act of 1815 is cited to prove it, and the rules and regulations for the Navy made in pursuance of that act are cited. Yet the Senator from Illinois says that is not authority, it is an old musty book. That is very much like a lawyer in court—

Mr. LOGAN. I have the floor, and the Senator need not undertake, and he has done it more than once, to try to discuss a question by browbeating in reference to evidence. I say to the Senator that there is no statute in existence which creates the rank of commodore before 1862.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator may say what he pleases; that does not make it so.

Mr. LOGAN. I know it does not make it so, but if the Senator is a lawyer, and he is, he can certainly find the law for it upon the statutes. If it exists anywhere he can find it. I say it does not exist. I produce the statute here, which shows the rank of captains as the highest rank, and I produce the law running from 1794 to 1806, and I can show it to the present date. There has been no law on the subject passed recently.

I do not want to take up the time of the Senate in discussing this proposition with anybody, but the Senator spoke of the rank of commodore. I ask him why is it that there is no statute relating to the organization of the Navy from the beginning of the Government under our Constitution up to 1862 which creates the rank of commodore, when the ranks are created of all the other officers? The rank of rear-admiral was created in 1862; everybody admits that it did not exist before.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I conceive that the rank of commodore may have existed independent of the statutory grade to which the Senator refers.

Mr. LOGAN. The title?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. No; the rank.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Illinois is asking us to prove a negative.

Mr. LOGAN. No; I am not asking you to prove a negative. I am asking you to prove an affirmative. If the grade of commodore existed, it is an affirmative fact that must be proved by the statute, because no rank can exist in the Army or Navy except by statutory law. You cannot make a rank except by law. That is the only way rank is created. You say the rank existed. Show the law. There is no such law. I have run the statutes through from 1794, when the organization of the Navy commenced, to the present time. It is the easiest thing in the world to find it, if there is such a law, and I say you cannot find it; that no such thing was ever provided for prior to 1862.

Mr. BUTLER. The act of 1775, under the Continental Congress, very clearly established the rank of commodore.

Mr. LOGAN. Nobody disputes that.

Mr. BUTLER. It may have been continued; the naval establishment may have been continued.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg the Senator's pardon, it was not continued.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator show that to have been the fact?

Mr. LOGAN. The Constitution of the United States provides that all officers of the Army and Navy shall be appointed by the President. The Senator will see that when the Government was formed these officers had to be appointed under the Constitution and by statutory law under the Constitution, which statutes provided for the organization. The officers were appointed and confirmed by the Senate and the grades were made and fixed at that time.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The old articles of war created in 1776

continued to govern the Government of the United States until the year 1806 without any action being taken at all.

Mr. LOGAN. Until when?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Until 1806.

Mr. LOGAN. The articles of war are a very different thing. The articles of war are articles by which men are governed and are punished; they are made for the regulation of the Army, and so of the Navy.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Must they not emanate from the law-making power.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well; they may be created by Congress and afterward continued, but Congress did not continue these officers. The creation of articles of war is very different from the creation of an Army or Navy. It is the articles that govern the Army after it is made; the articles are not the Army; the articles are not the Navy; they are the law regulating and governing them in deportment and otherwise; they are not the law creating them; and the Senator ought to know it, I presume. I do not want to go through all these laws. I have hunted up this question from the beginning.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator asked me to cite some authority. I will cite him to the act of 1815, while we are on the subject of commodores:

An act to alter and amend the several acts for establishing a Navy Department by adding thereto a board of commissioners.

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint three officers of the Navy, whose rank shall not be below a post-captain, who shall constitute a board of commissioners for the Navy of the United States, and shall have power to adopt such rules and regulations for the government of their meetings as they may judge expedient; and the board so constituted shall be attached to the office of the Secretary of the Navy, and under his superintendence shall discharge all the ministerial duties of said office relative to the procurement of naval stores and materials, and the construction, armament, equipment, and employment of vessels of war, as well as all other matters connected with the naval establishment of the United States; and the said board shall appoint their own secretary, who shall receive in compensation for his services a sum not exceeding $2,000 per annum, who shall keep a fair record of their proceedings, subject at all times to the inspection of the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Navy.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said board of commissioners, by and with the consent of the Secretary of the Navy, be, and are hereby, authorized to prepare such rules and regulations as shall be necessary for securing a uniformity in the several classes of vessels and their equipments, and for repairing and refitting them, and for securing responsibility in the subordinate officers and agents; which regulations, when approved by the President of the United States, shall be respected and obeyed until ordered and revoked by the same authority; and the said rules and regulations, thus prepared and approved, shall be laid before Congress at their next session. It shall also be the duty of said board, upon the requisition of the Secretary of the Navy, to furnish all the estimates of expenditure which the several branches of the service may require, and such other information and statements as he may deem necessary.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the officer of the said board holding the oldest commission shall preside, and each commissioner shall be entitled to receive in compensation for his services $3,500 per annum, in lieu of wages, rations, and other emoluments as naval officers; and all letters and packets to and from the said commissioners which relate to their official duties shall be free from postage.

That act was approved February 7, 1815. In pursuance of the authority conferred by that act of Congress this board of naval commissioners did provide certain rules and regulations for the government of the Navy, and among those rules and regulations they designated and, as I believe, created the rank of commodore, and it is recognized.

Mr. LOGAN. I will answer the Senator, and if I do not answer that completely then I will agree that I am mistaken. What authority was that? It was authority given to three commissioners. Who were they? What was the highest rank? Captain.

Mr. BUTLER. Post-captain.

Mr. LOGAN. Exactly; it was authority given to three officers of the highest rank, that of captain, to make the regulations. Why did not they put commodores on the commission to regulate the Navy? Because they did not have any commodores.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator just assumes that.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not assume any such thing, but naturally they would take officers of high command to make rules and regulations for the Navy.

Mr. BUTLER. Not necessarily.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator knows that is the rule, but they were kept off. The Senator says the commission made the commodores; that Congress could allow a commission to make commodores. The names must be sent to the Senate to be confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. I say nothing of the kind.

Mr. LOGAN. Then how did it occur?

Mr. BUTLER. I say in making those rules and regulations they distinctly recognized the rank of commodore, and they certainly would not have stultified themselves by putting a rank in the rules and regulations for the government of the Navy that did not exist. That is what I say.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator misapprehends the question entirely, if I am not mistaken. Then they recognized the title, not the rank.

Mr. BUTLER. But it says distinctly "rank and command."

Mr. LOGAN. That is not the law. That is a regulation made by the Navy Department; it is not a statute.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator says it is not the law; it is "rules and regulations" made in pursuance of the statute having all the force and effect of a law, and I should like the Senator to deny that.

Mr. LOGAN. I shall not try to convince the Senator because it is of no use; but now to the rest of the Senators who are willing to listen I should like to read from the Library of Universal Knowledge, volume 4, page 185, where it is stated that—

Commodore in the United States Navy, first recognized by law in 1862, but long before used by the people as an honorary title. The rank is above captain and below rear-admiral.

Just as I have said, it was a title given, but not a rank until 1862.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Did I not say a while ago that the title might have preceded the rank and the grade, but the Senator denied the whole proposition.

Mr. LOGAN. When we want to discuss things let us get at the facts. Let me read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the Senator reading from?

Mr. LOGAN. I am reading from the American Cyclopaedia, which is pretty good authority.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But not as good an authority as an act of Congress.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator cannot find an act of Congress. He has some old Navy Register there by which he thinks he can prove something. I read, as I said, from the American Cyclopaedia, volume 5:

COMMODORE: A naval officer who usually commands a squadron of ships upon particular service, his own ship being distinguished by a broad pennant worn at the main. In the Navy of the United States, by an act of Congress of July 16, 1862, a commodore ranks between a rear-admiral and a captain; the grade corresponds with that of a brigadier-general in the Army. Previous to that act commodore was only a title of courtesy in the American Navy, captain having been the highest actual rank till 1857, when a law of Congress created the title of flag officer for the commander of a squadron.

Just as I said in the law I read here this morning.

Mr. BUTLER. Where do you get that?

Mr. LOGAN. It is from the American Cyclopaedia.

Mr. BUTLER. That is not better than an act of Congress.

Mr. LOGAN. It is not better than an act of Congress, of course, but when no authority is here in an act of Congress it is pretty good.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to call the Senator's attention, as he was criticising the act of 1815—

Mr. LOGAN. I was not criticising the act at all.

Mr. BUTLER. He was criticising my construction of it.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir; I was.

Mr. BUTLER. That act provides that the president of the board shall not be below a post-captain. It seems to me that by a very natural implication there must have been some rank above post-captain.

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, no; that showed it was the highest rank, because they could not take lower than that.

Mr. BUTLER. It says the president of the board shall not be below post-captain, therefore there must have been one above him.

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, no. I shall not discuss with the Senator any further.

Mr. VAN WYCK. May I ask the Senator from South Carolina what regulations he referred to as being constituted by commission, in which they recognized not only the title but the rank of commodore, and whether those regulations were approved by the Navy Department?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly they were. Not only does it recognize the rank in terms, but it provides a set of rules applicable to commodores.

Mr. LOGAN. Does it provide for their selection?

Mr. BUTLER. That is provided somewhere else.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I should like to know whether it is not a fair presumption at this late day that the Navy Department knew the title and rank of the officers under its control?

Mr. BUTLER. I think so. Otherwise they stultify themselves by adopting rules and regulations applying to a rank that never existed.

Mr. LOGAN. They never recognized such a rank.

Mr. BUTLER. Let the Senator refer to the rules and regulations, and not make his statement ipse dixit.

Mr. LOGAN. I have replied by the law, not by any Navy rules and regulations.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I think this side of the question has been pretty well exhausted. Before getting a vote, which I am very desirous of reaching, I want to say a few words on what seems to me the main question, not what used to be, but what is needed now. First, and foremost there was, I take it from the discussion in the House, where this provision comes from that is now sought to be struck out, no desire to strike offensively at any rank because of that special rank. The object of the bill is to reduce superfluous grades, and the House of Representatives struck out the lieutenants in the lower grades, which provision has been adopted by the Senate Committee on Appropriations, and at commodores in the upper grades.

Why was it that the rank or grade of commodore was taken and struck out in preference to any other? It was not largely because it did not use to belong to the American Navy, although that was undoubtedly one reason, but it was because in looking over the needs of the Navy present and prospective, there is the least actual need of commodore. You do not find that rank in other navies. Here is the British Register, the last one, giving the grade and number of every officer; first admirals of the fleet, with their names, date of commission, and incidents in their careers; next admirals, a little larger list; next vice-admirals and rear-admirals; and then captains. There is nothing between the rear-admiral and the captain in the British navy or in any navy of the world except in one or two of the smaller ones.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I understand it is a brevet rank in the British navy.

Mr. HALE. It is not down even as a brevet rank. Here is a list of all the captains and all the rear-admirals, and there is nothing between; there is not even a brevet rank. Sometimes a captain of the highest rank as captain and longest service gets to be popularly designated as "commodore," as it used to be, but there is nothing beside that. To-day there are on the active list of the American Navy twenty-five commodores, and there are twenty-one retired commodores. What are they doing? The rear-admirals are ten in number, and half of them are commanding fleets. No commodore commands a fleet; neither will a commodore command a ship because there are captains enough, and a good deal more than enough for them. So you do not find either a commodore commanding a squadron, or a fleet, or commanding a ship in a squadron or fleet; but where do you find the commodore? Do you find him in a place where you can the most easily take him and be rid of him, not by driving him hurriedly from the service, but by simply providing in an indulgent fashion that when his service expires and he goes on the retired list his place shall not be filled. What place? The place that he is filling now; not at sea commanding a squadron, not at sea commanding a ship, but where? Of the twenty-five commodores that we have to-day, there is one only at sea anywhere; nineteen are on shore duty and five are waiting orders and sick. In the list that I read the other day are eleven or twelve commodores here in Washington on service.

Does the Senate believe that there is any need of perpetuating a rank that gives us twenty-five commodores on the active list and twenty-one commodores on the retired list with only one anywhere at sea and with eleven or twelve here in Washington, and the list is increasing all the time? Here is the register for 1864, in the middle of the war, when it was at its height, and there were then only eighteen commodores, and in 1865 when the war ended there were only nineteen; but since that time the number has been increasing so that to-day, as I have said, we have got twenty-five commodores on the active list and twenty-one on the retired list—forty-six commodores actually in the American Navy; and I have described their duties.

Some Senators, and I think anybody who has examined the subject, believe that if the Navy is top-heavy and you want to reduce a part of it in the upper grades and a part in the lower grades, in the upper grades there is no place where you can with such wholesome results reduce the number by its not being continued hereafter as in the place of commodore. No man is disturbed. Every one of these men who have served continues to serve until the time comes when he goes upon the retired list. There he remains until he dies, receiving the benefactions of the Government in continued large pay.

But when it is said that for the benefit of junior officers this rank, which is so bestowed as I have described upon the duty which has been nearest to the superfluous, must be kept up at this increased expense—for it amounts to about $200,000 a year, active and retired—then certainly any Senator taking that ground must be in favor of taking no steps toward the reducing of the overplus of officers in the American Navy. Therefore if we do anything, if we are in any way to grapple with this subject and try to reform the Navy and try to reduce its expenses and keep it down where it should be, here is the place without any offense.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I wish to ask the Senator a question. He makes an argument to show that there are too many commodores in the Navy. In that he may be correct; but does his argument prove that we ought not to have any because we have got too many? Does that prove that we ought to have none at all, but that we ought to abolish the rank and grade of commodore, and especially so when it disarranges our whole naval system, and stops not only the promotion of the next rank, but of all succeeding ranks, in fact down to the lowest?

Mr. HALE. That is a fair question, but the answer to it is that the Senator, by his motion to strike out the whole clause, raises simply the question whether we shall have all that we have now or have none. He has not moved to reduce the grade of commodores to ten. It is only a question between having all that we have now and having the rank hereafter abolished, and that is the issue between us.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I am choosing the lesser of two evils. I proposed to submit this question as to how many we ought to have to a commission competent to decide that question on taking into consideration all the facts and circumstances of the case; but one of the representatives of the committee made a point of order and the commission amendment was ruled out. Now, I say that the Senator has failed to show, and I do not think he can show, that the rank ought to be abolished. The only thing, then, to do is to retain it as it is until Congress is prepared to act upon it intelligently with a full understanding of the effect of it, which it does not have now.

Mr. HALE. If I have shown anything it is precisely that it is needless, that we can best dispense with it. Setting aside the commodores who are not doing any active duty, there is not any quasi duty that is performed to-day by commodores that cannot be performed either by the rear-admirals or by the superfluous captains who are not needed at sea, for we have got fifty captains and we have only twenty-eight vessels at sea.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The Senator takes up the list of the Navy and shows the particular employment of the commodores during a certain period, and from that he adduces the argument that because only one in nineteen is on sea duty we have no need of commodores.

Mr. HALE. I do not select any time; I select naturally the condition now because the amendment applies now, and the change applies now, and we live now, and we are considering things now; and therefore I took the present time; but I will take any time for years past and the commodores have been situated just as they are now, the rear-admirals have been commanding squadrons, and the captains and lieutenants have been commanding the ships; and as I was saying, when the Senator interrupted me, there are more than enough surplus captains to do all the duties that any commodore is doing on shore now. If this grade was to-day struck absolutely from the service and not known or not found, there would not be, I venture to say, a single embarrassment to the service. Of course it takes out one grade for promotion; there is no doubt about that; but that is the very thing I desire. We have too many grades.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I should like to interrupt the Senator again with his permission.

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER, of California. There must have been some reason for the act of 1862 which created this grade.

Mr. HALE. We were then in war.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Can the Senator say we may not enter into war again? Can he give us a perfect guarantee of peace for the next five or ten years?

Mr. HALE. I can say to the Senator that the best answer to that is that it was not provided for till 1862. With all the threat that there had been of war there was never any restoration or creating of this grade until after we had been in the war over a year.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. May I ask the Senator how many commodores were created in 1862 in the act and put on active service and on the retired list?

Mr. HALE. I do not remember. I can look at the act and see. I know at the end of the war there were only nineteen.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. How many have we now on the active list?

Mr. HALE. Twenty-five.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. How many on the retired list?

Mr. HALE. Twenty-one. Forty-six in all.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I think the act of 1862 created thirty-five in all; eighteen on the active list, and seventeen on the retired list.

Mr. HALE. That shows that we have to-day eleven more than a war footing.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let me ask the Senator whether that number, twenty-five, includes those who are nominally commodores by reason of being bureau officers?

Mr. HALE. Everything.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is a perfectly nominal and temporary rank, which gives them additional pay while they are in charge of bureaus of the Navy Department; that is all. They are not really commodores.

Mr. HALE. No; twenty-five are the actual commodores.

Mr. HAWLEY. Without counting bureau officers?

Mr. HALE. One or two of them are assigned to that duty. It is, however, not as constructive commodores; there are twenty-five actual commodores, and if they should be in the Navy Department or wherever they should be they would be commodores upon the active list.

Mr. President, the fact is that it is a difficult thing and it is not a welcome task—and I have found that—to attempt to improve or reform any one of these old establishments, and particularly an establishment that has been so long crystallized in force here in Washington. The moment that any attempt is made to curtail, even in the interest of friendliness to one of these old establishments, every Senator is besieged by every friend in the establishment to stand by and not let this ancient régime be struck down.

Everybody is invoked to stand by whatever the establishment is, and all the glories of the past are summoned up and every step in the direction of curtailing it is met with difficulties; and, Mr. President, if to-day the American Navy was twice as big as it is in every rank, the same trouble would be found if anybody set himself to the work of trying to reduce it, the same arguments would be used. If you leave it to the establishment itself it will never be reduced, and Senators like the Senator from South Carolina have their sympathies appealed to, and will be invoked by every name and memory that is precious, and will stand up against every step in the direction of reduction and reform. It has always been so; it always will be so. The time will never come when any abuse, no matter what it is, that has become concentrated and has its roots here in Washington can be attacked by anybody, no matter who it is, without finding the way beset with difficulties, increasing with every step that he takes.

Mr. BUTLER. I think the Senator is mistaken about that. He is certainly so far as I am concerned. In regard to reform in the Navy, any attempt in that direction meets my approbation, but I am perfectly conscientious when I say to him that I think his committee in this bill have taken the wrong steps. I am perfectly sincere in that objection. I do not object to a reduction of the surplus number of officers, if it can be done without detriment to the service; but I do object in this short-handed way to coming in at the eleventh hour of the session and striking at the personnel of the Navy without proper investigation.

As was properly said by the Senator from California, the effect of it, in my judgment, will be to deprive the naval service of the United States of some of the most accomplished officers in it. There are many foreign services that would be delighted to have very many of the officers of the United States Navy, and no doubt pay them well to come and take service under them. We shall lose, in my judgment, under this bill the very best officers in the American Navy, and it is against that that I want to guard.

Mr. HALE. I do not see how we lose an officer.

Mr. BUTLER. We cut off promotion.

Mr. HALE. No commodore is struck out, no retired officer is struck out, no captain is struck out. We do not strike a man out of the service, we only provide that as a vacancy occurs, under the dispensations of nature and Providence, it shall not be filled by somebody else. We drive nobody out of the Navy, and the day will never come—

Mr. MILLER, of California. You stop promotion.

Mr. HALE. That is it. Now, I defy any man, no matter how overgrown a military establishment has become, that can ever reduce it except by stopping promotion. That is the way it has always been done. Here is an act passed in the year 1871, which is section 1376 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that—

The active list of the pay corps of the Navy shall consist of thirteen pay directors, thirteen pay inspectors, fifty paymasters, thirty passed assistant paymasters, and twenty assistant paymasters.

Section 1377 provides:

Until the number of passed assistant paymasters shall have been reduced below thirty, there shall be no promotion to that grade, nor any appointment to the grade of assistant paymaster.

You never can stop it any other way unless you take the ruthless way that nobody wants of declaring at once that you will abolish a grade outright. There is no other way given under heaven or among men to do it except to stop promotion, and when a Senator gets up and alleges that is a grievance in this bill, it shows that he never will be ready, and the Senator from South Carolina never will be ready. Here we have it year after year and no committee has reported this, no committee has indicated any desire to do it; and when we select the easiest method, the fairest method, the method that bears the most easily in the direction of reform, then we are told that while Senators do not object to reduction and reform, they do not like this way, and they do not like this time; and if it had been proposed at any other time and in any other way the establishment itself and the friends that it makes would never have been ready.

I hope I do not need to repeat that I have no desire to impair the efficiency of the American Navy. I want a good, round, full, vigorous establishment. I want the young men in it to feel that in a proper way promotion is open to them, and that they can afford to remain there in sufficient numbers, and not an overplus of numbers, because, depend upon it, Senators, that if any of these establishments is allowed to go on unchecked and become overfull and there grows up in the establishment not only a disposition but a habit of either non-duty or only quasi-duty, you thereby degrade and destroy the efficiency of that establishment. Whenever it comes about in any establishment that easy duty is the thing to be desired instead of stern and active duty, you have struck at the bottom of the efficiency of that service. In the British navy to-day every ambitious officer is anxious for active or sea duty. If there is anything for which he or his friends spend time in imploration at the higher authority seats, it is active and sea duty in order to get along, in order to be promoted; but in the American Navy this thing has come about, that if an officer has three years' service at sea he will tell you that he is entitled then to three years' shore duty. So has this thing gone on that too much of the life and energy of the service has been sapped, and to-day there is too much attention paid to the getting of shore duty. All the returns show it.

In our Navy as it is to-day there are 934 officers on sea duty, and against those 934 officers there are 946 on shore duty and 256 on waiting orders, so that the great bulk of the officers in the American Navy to-day, instead of being at sea upon ships and representing the flag on all the waters of the globe, are found in the easy places upon shore and half of them drawing pay almost as much as the active pay.

I say it is not a good thing for the establishment that this has come about. It is full of fine, noble, manly officers, who, if they were treated justly and rightly and fairly and not given over-indulgence, but were given just, fair duty, would make our Navy, if we ever have any trouble, as good as or better than any navy in the world; but the establishment is not improved by the present condition, by the manner of duty, by the large pay that is given to easy duty in the Navy.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question concerning a fact that he has just alleged?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. I cannot ascertain that there were 1,800 officers in the Navy. The Senator has just said there were 900 on sea duty. There are only 600. There are 1,095 in all, counting midshipmen, masters, and ensigns. Where does he get his other 900?

Mr. HALE. My statement covers line and staff; everything, all naval officers.

Mr. HAWLEY. Retired?

Mr. HALE. No; not retired. Take all, line and staff, and everything, you make the 1,800 very easily.

Mr. MILLER, of California. You made it 1,900.

Mr. HALE. Very well.

Mr. BUTLER. I had not intended to enter into this discussion, and I desire now again to assure my friend from Maine that in any effort to correct abuses in the Navy, if any exist, he shall have my hearty co-operation; but I do not believe this movement is in the right direction, and I believe furthermore that the officers of the Navy who are being attacked by this bill are being made the scapegoat for somebody else's faults. That is my judgment, and I will read now with the permission of the Senate an extract from a very admirable article written by Lieutenant-Commander Gorringer in the May number of the North American Review. It seems to me he put this question in about as fair light as anything I have seen. He says:

Whoever reads the official reports that are issued from the Department, and the comments of naval officers, as well as laymen, on the Navy, must be impressed with the unanimity with which it is condemned as inefficient and useless for the purpose for which it exists—war.

The responsibility for this condition of affairs must be fixed definitely somewhere. If we compare the annual appropriations for the maintenance of our Navy since 1865 with the amounts expended on foreign navies, it will appear that Congress has most liberally provided the means to maintain an efficient naval force. Take as an example the naval budgets of different countries for the five years, 1875-1879 inclusive. There we find that England, France, and Russia have expended more than we have, and all others much less. Italy has expended on her navy less than one-half the amounts appropriated by Congress for the United States Navy.

The average annual expenditure of Italy for the five years was $8,214,578, that of the United States was $19,157,234. We ought therefore to have a naval force at least equal to that of Italy. Every pound of iron and every piece of machinery that enters into the construction of an Italian vessel of war was purchased out of that country, while the materials that go to create an American man-of-war are all made in America. We have every advantage over Italy, except in the cost of labor, and in this we are not at a great disadvantage, for in the United States labor-saving machines tend to equalize the cost of results as compared with other countries. If our naval administration had been efficient we should to-day possess an effective naval force double that of Italy. Instead of this, we really have none worthy the name, while Italy ranks third among the naval powers in effective fighting vessels. A comparison with the Austrian expenditures and the Austrian navy will be still more damaging to our system of naval administration. The expenditures of Austria have been one-fourth those of the United States; yet she has created and maintained an effective fighting force of fourteen heavily armored vessels, most of them of equal efficiency at sea or in harbors, armed with the most powerful rifled guns and capable of offensive or defensive operations. Besides these iron-clads Austria has maintained a fleet of unarmored vessels of superior efficiency to ours.

There must be something radically wrong in our system of naval administration that it cannot, with four times the expenditure, maintain a navy as efficient as that of Austria. The first duty of Congress is, therefore, to provide a more efficient naval administration; one, also, less costly and less cumbersome. Under the present system the hull, the engines, the guns, and the sail-power to comprise a man-of-war are designed independently of each other, in the different bureaus, the officers of which generally entertain antagonistic views on every question that arises. The system requires eight distinct and independent organizations in each navy-yard, nominally under one commandant, but really receiving orders from their respective chiefs in Washington. Its absurdity and extravagance may be judged from the fact that each organization has its own workshops for each branch of mechanical operations, its separate executive staff of clerks, draughtsmen, and designers, besides its own foremen, watchmen, messengers, mechanics, and laborers. If the object in establishing a bureau system for naval administration had been the multiplication of offices, the division of responsibility, and the obstruction of work, it may be regarded as a success without parallel.

Now, Mr. President, I say to the Senator from Maine that, in my judgment, Commander Gorringer has exactly pointed out the difficulty in reference to the naval establishment of the United States, and the mistake of the Committee on Appropriations that they have not attempted in this bill to correct the evils which he points out, but strike at the personnel of the Navy. The Senator from Maine appears to complain because commodores are put in soft places. Why, Mr. President, I see every day almost in the Senate Chamber politicians who have been broken down, political hacks, whose only recommendation to public favor has been their capacity to make commerce out of votes, to log-roll in conventions, provided with soft places by this body. The Senator complains that because certain of the old naval officers of the United States have soft places therefore they must be stricken at and degraded, for that is what this amounts to—and when the Senator says that nobody is legislated out of the Navy—

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator point out where a single old officer, and where the designation to make him a commodore or rear-admiral, is touched by this bill?

Mr. BUTLER. Why, Mr. President, promotion is taken away from him.

Mr. HALE. Not from the commodore.

Mr. BUTLER. It is taken away from the captain.

Mr. HALE. But the captain is not an old officer.

Mr. BUTLER. But he will be an old officer before he is promoted under this bill.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is now speaking of those old officers whom he is talking of having the soft places. I do not object to an old officer having an easy, comfortable time; I think he ought to have it. The trouble I find is that too much disposition and too much attention is given toward getting this place. There is not enough of the feeling in favor of active, ardent, earnest service that in time leads to these softer places.

Mr. BUTLER. I believe the cause of that is due entirely to the fact that we have had a most inefficient administration of the naval force of this country, and I believe if the Senator would devote the same energy to the correction of these evils and abuses that he has to the correction of the personnel of the Navy, we should have employment for every officer now in the Navy, we should have more ships, and they would be sent out on different duty; as Commander Gorringer says, put them in the exploration of the large rivers in Africa or South America, put them to exploring—

Mr. MILLER, of California. There ought to be now forty naval officers in hydrographic work on the Pacific coast. There are 12,000 miles of Pacific coast which have not been surveyed at all.

Mr. BUTLER. There is duty for forty at once.

Mr. HALE. The Government is extremely liberal in all these appropriations. Neither of the Senators will ever see the day when there will be any larger proportion of officers; and talking about building up a navy to the officers, if we had to-day forty good ships afloat—and it would be every one that we need—we do not need a Great Britain navy—if we had to-day forty ships afloat, all equipped, fine, complete, modern-constructed ships, manned to the uttermost with every appliance and every man and every officer that anybody could require, we should then have an overplus of 25 percent. of rear-admirals. The Senator would consider that the way to build a navy up, and we shall have ten years of building it, and then there will be an overplus of officers. Nobody expects us to have three hundred vessels in commission, as Great Britain has. Nobody will ever live to see that day, and I do not want to see it.

Mr. BUTLER. It has been stated by the Senator from Illinois, and I believe by the Senator from Kansas, that nothing can be done by any committee of Congress, notably by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate, toward making a reform in the Navy. I see in a report of the House of Representatives (No. 653) made by Mr. B. W. HARRIS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House, a recommendation of the proposed advisory board and of the construction of a number of vessels which they say will cost in round numbers from twenty-five to twenty-nine million dollars.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask my friend from South Carolina if he is willing to vote that?

Mr. BUTLER. I am willing to vote $10,000,000 a year, as is recommended by the committee of the House of Representatives of which Mr. HARRIS is chairman, if it can be demonstrated that you have a naval administration fit to have those vessels built. I will then vote it promptly.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Would you vote it to-day? Here is a bill that makes an appropriation of $10,000,000 for constructing vessels, I think. Would you vote that?

Mr. BUTLER. No, sir; I would not.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That is under exceptional circumstances.

Mr. BUTLER. I would not put it on an appropriation bill, but I say to the Senator that if he will bring in a bill appropriating $10,000,000 in pursuance of the recommendation of this advisory board I will vote for it to-day.

Mr. HALE. For how many years would the Senator vote $10,000,000 a year?

Mr. BUTLER. Just so long as may be necessary to get a good Navy.

Mr. HALE. Suppose we voted $10,000,000 a year for five years—of course Senators will see that cannot be done—how many new ships would that give?

Mr. BUTLER. About sixty-eight, I think, is the recommendation.

Mr. HALE. That would take $30,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. I say $30,000,000. I will give the Senator the exact number of ships recommended by this report to be constructed:

SUMMARY OF THE NUMBER, CLASS, TYPE, AND COST OF THE VESSELS THAT THE BOARD RECOMMEND NOW BE BUILT.

Two first rate steel, double-decked, unarmored cruisers, having a displacement of about 5,873 tons, an average sea speed of fifteen knots, and a battery of four 8-inch and twenty-one 6-inch guns. Cost, $3,560,000.

Six first rate steel, double-decked, unarmored cruisers, having a displacement of about 4,650 tons, an average sea speed of fourteen knots, and a battery of four 8-inch and fifteen 6-inch guns. Cost, $8,532,000.

Ten second rate steel, single-decked, unarmored cruisers, having a displacement of about 3,043 tons, an average sea speed of thirteen knots, and a battery of twelve 6-inch guns. Cost, $9,300,000.

Twenty fourth-rate wooden cruisers, having a displacement of about 793 tons, an average sea speed of ten knots, and a battery of one 6-inch and two 60-pounders. Cost, $4,360,000.

Five steel rams of about 2,000 tons displacement, and an average sea speed of thirteen knots. Cost, $2,500,000.

Five torpedo gunboats of about 450 tons displacement, a maximum sea speed of not less than thirteen knots, and one heavy-powered rifled gun. Cost, $725,000.

Ten cruising torpedo-boats, about 100 feet long, and having a maximum speed of not less than twenty-one knots per hour. Cost, $380,000.

Ten harbor torpedo-boats, about seventy feet long, and having a maximum speed of not less than seventeen knots per hour. Cost, $250,000.

Total cost of vessels recommended now to be built, $29,607,000.

Mr. HALE. Now, aside from the small torpedo-boats and things which add nothing to the actual force of the cruising navy, if the Senator had the money, which he never will get, you would not get a cruising fleet to employ the officers of the Navy upon of over forty or forty-five vessels.

Mr. BUTLER. That remains for the future to determine. I say that when a proposition of that kind comes recommended by a committee of either branch of Congress upon proper investigation, under proper guards, then I will vote for it without the slightest hesitation; and I believe if the number of vessels provided for in that report were built it would give employment to all the surplus officers now in the United States Navy, except perhaps some of the staff.

Mr. HALE. What kind of a storm does the Senator from South Carolina think would have been raised in this Chamber and in the other House if that proposition had come in to appropriate $10,000,000 this year in money to build ships for the American Navy?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not think any storm would have been raised.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think it could have been got through?

Mr. BUTLER. I think so.

Mr. HALE. Perhaps we shall try it next winter.

Mr. BUTLER. I will pledge myself to the Senator now that if he brings in a report like that, recommended by such officers as Commodore Rodgers and others who were on that board, I will give my vote for it, if I am here; and if the Senator is not going to do it simply because he anticipates a storm, he will never do it.

Mr. HALE. The Senator knows that that part of the bill which deals with the construction, the increase, of the American Navy is taken this year from the recommendations of that board and embodied in this bill.

Mr. BUTLER. That part which refers to the building of cruisers. That is all.

Mr. HALE. That part which deals with the building up of the Navy is taken from those reports that he refers to.

Mr. BUTLER. Precisely as to the two vessels; but the committee have very studiously ignored every other recommendation of the board.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the Senator from South Carolina to be objecting now because the Committee on Appropriations have not gone far enough in their recommendation.

Mr. BUTLER. No.

Mr. ALLISON. We provide for two cruisers, and he wants more.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator misunderstood me. I did not say I would vote for $10,000,000 on an appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator is stating that the committee falls far short of its duty because it only recommends two cruisers.

Mr. BUTLER. I was not referring to the committee of the Senate, and I have no right to refer to the committee of the House. I have no fault to find with the Committee on Appropriations, but I think they would have done a great deal better to have struck out all the legislation in this bill.

Mr. ALLISON. But I understood the Senator a moment ago to suggest that the Committee on Appropriations had failed in not taking up the recommendations of that report and embodying them in this bill; thus, among other things, getting rid of the bureau system in our Navy. If I recollect aright, the Senator from South Carolina yesterday raised the point of order on the little minutiae that we proposed in the way of amendments to the changes proposed by the House. We want to be cautious and careful, and now the Senator complains that we do not go far enough.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not complaining of the committee of the Senate, but I say if they were going into the reorganization of the Navy at all, I do not think it was proper on an appropriation bill; they had better attempt it in the direction indicated in this report. I have no fault to find with the Committee on Appropriations in the dribblets and small diminutive reformatory the chairman has indicated as striking at the real improvement of the Navy. I confess it is so small that I did not see it.

But that is neither here nor there, Mr. President. In my judgment this whole legislation is wrong; first, because it is on a general appropriation bill, and, second, because it does not correct the real evil of which we have a right to complain.

No naval officers have approached me about this matter. I do not think a single one has done so. Much has been said about naval officers in the Senate Chamber. My friend from Kansas has spoken of them as aristocrats; the Senator from Illinois has spoken of them as aristocrats. I do not know that there is any aristocracy in this country but the aristocracy of merit, and I do not know that it is any crime for a man to be a gentleman. I do not think that it ought to be a crime. If these officers conduct themselves like gentlemen they are certainly entitled to that consideration which their services to the country command.

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote, Mr. President.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I am not quite ready for a vote, although I appreciate the unwillingness of the Senate to hear much longer debate. The motion before the Senate is not confined in its general bearings to the mere question whether we shall have a commodore or not. It is made with a purpose. It aims to strike out certain lines upon page 7, and to be followed by other motions striking out all the general legislation for the reorganization of the personnel of the Navy.

There are many good things in the bill; there are many good attempts in this printed bill at modifying the objectionable legislation of the House; but we were told that if we undertook to meddle with this legislation reorganizing the personnel we should inflame somebody, we should treat the House discourteously. We were warned not to create this inflammation. That is unjust to the House in the first place. The House does not expect us to slavishly agree with it. We are here for the purpose of disagreeing. That is an argument not addressed to the merits of the case; it is addressed distinctly to our fears. You can say nothing else about it. We are warned to be afraid to make a direct issue with the co-ordinate legislative body upon this question. It advises us to abandon studying and weighing this legislation, this sudden, imperfect, and harsh proposition that is sent to us, even, it may be, at the sacrifice of our own deliberate opinion of the unwisdom of that legislation. If the appeal means anything it means that. It is not alone a reflection upon the House, it is in derogation of the rights and dignity of the Senate. It is not an argument addressed to the merits of the case, and not an argument that ought to be made.

There is another suggestion in the course of the debate that ought not to be made. The direct intimation was that there were Senators opposed to this bill because they are interested in local navy-yards; and yet when we came to the clause restricting possibly, contingently restricting, the number of navy-yards, not a single Senator objected to that. No senator objects to the creation of an advisory board; no Senator objects to the useful legislation providing for selling off the old junk and useless vessels and turning the money into the Treasury.

A great many arguments and indeed most of the arguments made by the Appropriations Committee are not addressed to the direct merits of the case. I care very little about the special paragraph now under consideration except that it is a part of the objectionable general legislation.

I referred, when I spoke before, to the fact that the country has been asking something else of us, and something of altogether greater importance. The President last December sent a very earnest appeal to Congress for the creation of a navy, not for the destruction of what we had of a navy. He said:

I cannot too strongly urge upon you my conviction that every consideration of national safety, economy, and honor imperatively demands a thorough rehabilitation of our Navy.

With a full appreciation of the fact that compliance with the suggestions of the head of that Department and of the advisory board must involve a large expenditure of the public moneys, I earnestly recommend such appropriations as will accomplish an end which seems to me so desirable.

Nothing can be more inconsistent with true public economy than withholding the means necessary to accomplish the objects intrusted by the Constitution to the National Legislature.

So he proceeds to say that nothing is more important than the establishment of a navy, and the Secretary of the Navy commenced his annual report last December with a similar, and more earnest, and even almost indignant appeal on the condition of the Navy. He said:

The condition of the Navy imperatively demands the prompt and earnest attention of Congress. Unless some action be had in its behalf it must soon dwindle into insignificance. From such a state it would be difficult to revive it into efficiency without dangerous delay and enormous expense. Emergencies may at any moment arise which would render its aid indispensable to the protection of the lives and property of our citizens abroad and at home, and even to our existence as a nation.

We have been unable to make such an appropriate display of our naval power abroad as will cause us to be respected. The exhibition of our weakness in this important arm of defense is calculated to detract from our occupying in the eyes of foreign nations that rank to which we know ourselves to be justly entitled. It is a source of mortification to our officers and fellow-countrymen generally, that our vessels of war should stand in such mean contrast alongside of those of other and inferior powers.

And the Congressional committees have followed in the same strain, making an able report upon an able report of an advisory board urging us to build a navy; and we were prepared to begin to build a navy. The Senator from South Carolina represents, I believe, the great majority of the Senate and House, as he does the majority of the people of this country, when he says he is willing even to vote $10,000,000 this year to begin to build a navy. But what do we get instead of that? Instead of any serious action in that direction—for I deny that there is any serious attempt even in this bill to create a navy; there are two ships of a good kind provided for—we are met with a wholly unexpected and tremendous attack upon the personnel of the Navy, striking out one hundred and twenty-five officers, striking out wholly three grades, knocking out eighty lieutenants from the two hundred and eighty, and blocking the path of all the young life and vigor of the Navy in the lower grades. It will paralyze the Navy for five, ten, or fifteen years to pass this bill as it came from the House.

Our committee did somewhat improve it; and there I come to another calamity that betides the poor Navy. By a construction (which I cannot differ from) of the Chair the twenty-ninth rule is held to render it impossible for us to improve or meddle with the legislation of the House, except merely to strike it out. The amendments of the Committee on Appropriations have been stricken out here on the point of order, and we are not allowed to put in a word or change a phrase in that obnoxious legislation by the construction of the rule; by the unwise, unstatesmanlike, unjust manner of legislation that prevails somewhere we are led down to an appropriation bill with general legislation, and the Senate finds itself bound hand and foot and gagged and unable to go one step in that direction even in modification of the House's legislation.

Now, sir, I wish this vote to carry striking out this paragraph, because it is all that is left to us. All that is left is to say "no" to the legislation of the House. We cannot improve it. The Committee on Appropriations itself said "no" to that legislation; they thought it was unworthy of our favor without serious amendment; yet its amendments have been ruled out. Then there is nothing left to the Senate but to say "no" against this paragraph and all the subsequent paragraphs of that character.

Undoubtedly the right, the sensible, and the wise thing to do for this Congress is that suggested by the Senator from California, because we do not object to any reduction of the personnel of the Navy; we object to doing it in this manner, and much has been said about that particular phrase, "this manner." Yes, sir, I object to this manner of doing it. It is unexpected, harsh, and unjust. The commodores can be stricken out, the lieutenants can be reduced, the grade of master can be stricken out, a better gradation can be made, and a slow and a gradual reduction that will give these young men promotion in name and to some extent in compensation, but it can only be done decently and wisely by some board composed in part of veteran naval officers beyond the reach of temptation, backed up by a good and sensible report setting forth the manner in full and the effect of the proposed changes.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, I did not intend to make any contribution to the learning brought forth by the Senator from Illinois a while ago with regard to the grade of commodore in the Navy; but I wish to say a few words to set myself right upon it. I attempted to explain to the Senator that I saw a great distinction between the title and the rank of commodore and the legal statutory grade of commodore. While the one has existed from the foundation of the Government to the present day, the other has not. The rank and title of commodore has existed from the foundation of the Government to the present hour independent of statute, while the legal grade was not created until 1862.

Here is what a naval authority, Hamersly's Naval Encyclopedia, says—the Senator read from some other encyclopedia, but this is a naval encyclopedia:

Commodore: This rank, of no remote date in the British service, and only now a brevet rank, so to speak, for a captain in command of a squadron or a division of a fleet, is not noticed in the dictionaries of the seventeenth century. It is supposed to be derived from the Spanish "comendador," one having command over others or a company.

Until 1861 captains in the United States Navy commanding or having commanded squadrons were recognized as commodores, though never commissioned as such, and wore a broad pennant distinctive of that rank. In 1862 it was established by law as a fixed rank; and in July of that year eighteen were commissioned on the active and seventeen on the retired list.

Mr. LOGAN. That is just what I said.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I understood the Senator differently. I understood the Senator to confound the rank and title of commodore with the legal grade.

Mr. LOGAN. Not at all.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I admit that the legal grade never was created until 1862.

Mr. LOGAN. I say that the grade, which is called the rank, which carries pay, was never created and never existed till 1862; that the title existed as an honorary title, but not as a grade or rank. That is what I said.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Now, as this amendment proposes to destroy the legal grade of commodore, upon the belief that it is necessary to reduce the number of officers of the Navy, I am against it on the merits, because even admitting all that has been stated by the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Maine as to the heaviness of the officers of the Navy, I see no necessity for destroying the existing ranks in the Navy in order to reduce the number of officers. It is not necessary, in my opinion, to destroy entirely, as this bill proposes to do, the grade of commodore in order to reduce the number of officers. We have now, as has been shown, twenty-five commodores on the active list of the Navy. They may be too many; but why should the entire grade be destroyed in order to reduce the number of officers?

I think, as I said the other day, that there is nothing which gives life and heart and activity to the Navy more than the hope of promotion; and when you undertake to take away from a man as a captain the expectation that swells his breast of some day being able to be a commodore you destroy to a great extent the efficiency of that man's services. It was upon this principle that this law was passed. It has no other meaning, and every reason which induced its passage in 1862 is applicable now.

Why do you propose to retain the grade of admiral and rear-admiral, and to give the power of promotion to the President?

Mr. LOGAN. We do not propose to touch the grade of admiral or vice-admiral. That was stricken out on a point of order yesterday.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Rear-admiral is left. Why is that retained? I find it in the bill. If there is nothing in the principle that promotion encourages efficiency, why not strike this out, and all get down on a dead captain's level? It has been stated that there is too much aristocracy in the Navy. I concur with a good deal that was said a while ago in regard to the inefficiency of the Navy by the Senator from Maine, but I do not blame the officers for it. There is a regulation to-day in existence which requires every navy-yard to be commanded by a commodore, and I am one of the Senators alluded to by the Senator from Maine the other day who happens to have a navy-yard at his own door.

Mr. LOGAN. Who makes the rules of the Department? A board of naval officers.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I was only speaking of the way in which this rule is disregarded, that while it is a rule of the Department that a commodore shall command a navy-yard, whenever a commodore is ordered down my way every influence possible is brought to bear upon the executive government to get him out of that service, although the point is only within thirty hours of the seat of Government. I do not blame the officers; I blame the administration of the Navy Department. As I said to an officer some time ago when speaking on this subject, how would England have retained her possessions on the coast of Africa, the Cape of Good Hope, the West India Islands, if when an unpleasant duty had to be performed she had to go to her officers and, in the language of Pinafore, "If you please, perform this duty?"

There has been a great deal of that here. The navy-yard in my State now is commanded by a captain, notwithstanding the number of commodores in the service without duty, because it is a little hot down there. The quarters are good enough for a prince. The rule requires a commodore, but the commodores would rather be in the shade.

I do not propose to abolish the rank because of that. I know that in former days that service was sought after by the first men in the Navy; but demoralization has crept into it, and although there was a vast amount of public property to be defended there some time ago by the Marine Corps, even when it came to getting a marine officer to go, the Secretary of the Navy had almost to beg one to go there and command the corps of men in that service. I say all this is not to be attributed to the existence of certain ranks in the service, but the defect is in the practical administration of the Navy Department. When a man is ordered to a place of duty he ought to be required to go.

The yard to which I refer is a public work located there, not for the defense of my State but placed there at the suggestion of the wisest men who ever sat in the councils of this country for the defense of the great commerce of the Mississippi Valley; but it is a little hot for the officers. So is the island of Cuba hot, but the Spanish Government has never thought of giving up that as a naval station and of requiring their first officers to command there because it is a little hot, and they have the yellow fever nearly the whole year around. We rarely have it down my way.

But I do not complain because of the ranks in the service. I think they ought to be maintained, and if it is necessary to reduce the number of officers I would do so without destroying the existing ranks as now established by law; for I sincerely believe that there is a very large number of meritorious officers in the list of captains in the service to-day who have earned by the best possible service to the country the promotion which is held out to them by existing law, and I shall not vote to take that right away.

There are numbers of able and competent captains in the active service to-day, and it is said that there is no pretense that any right is destroyed. Well, Mr. President, after you have gone on twenty years under this system of promotion by seniority and promoted captain after captain to the rank of commodore, and they are now upon the list of commodores, and then their associates in war and in honorable service are all at once cut off from that right, I ask if that is justice to the men that remain? Does it not create inequality? If you propose to do this thing, why not give it an effect away off in the future, when it will not strike down existing hopes and expectations as rudely as this bill does? Many men are now on the list of commodores who have been the associates of captains in the service that have not performed as meritorious service as many of the captains; still this bill comes in and says that hereafter no captain in the Navy, no matter what his character, his hopes or expectations, shall ever be a commodore. I cannot vote for that.

Mr. HALE. Now, Mr. President, let us have a vote. It is getting late.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California, [Mr. MILLER.]

Mr. BUTLER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McDILL, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. HAMPTON.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MILLER, of New York, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. GROOME.] If he were here, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. SLATER.] If he were present, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

Mr. VANCE, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MITCHELL.] Not knowing how he would vote on this question I withhold my vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FERRY, (after having voted in the negative.) I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY.] I understood he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay" if he were present. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, (after having voted in the negative.) I am paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.] I understand he would vote "yea," and I withdraw my vote. I should have voted "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 22; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to move another amendment not pertaining now to reorganization but to personnel. I move to strike out the remainder of the matter upon the same page, (7,) the proviso which begins with the word "and," on line 152, and goes on to the word "pay," on line 162.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

And provided further, That whenever on an inquiry had pursuant to law concerning the fitness of an officer of the Navy for promotion it shall appear that such officer is unfit to perform at sea the duties of the place to which it is proposed to promote him, by reason of drunkenness or from any cause arising from his own misconduct or want of capacity, not caused by or in consequence of the performance of his duty, he shall not be placed on the retired list of the Navy, and he shall be discharged with not more than one year's pay.

That is an inquiry of a board, not a court-martial. Then comes in the part I propose to strike out, "that whenever on an inquiry had pursuant to law." I suppose pursuant to these two sections named, which is not a court-martial, it is found that he is unfit for duty "by reason of drunkenness, or from any cause arising from his own misconduct," he shall be dishonorably discharged. That is to say, it provides for the dishonorable discharge of an officer, a terrible punishment, without the judgment of a court-martial. But a board sitting as these boards do, with a sort of ex parte hearing, not a regular trial, finds that an officer is disqualified by reason of his own conduct. That may be a sufficient bar against his promotion, because they cannot promote him "unless his mental, moral, and professional fitness shall have been established." But I do say, and I appeal to the lawyers to sustain me—for I am only nominally such—that you have no right to put this terrible disgrace upon a man upon the report of a board that simply assembles to consider promotion. Therefore I move to strike it out. An officer should not go out of service except on a judgment of a court-martial.

Mr. HALE. I am looking to see whether any movement in any direction would not be resisted. I see plainly there is no resistance to this. At present, as it stands, any naval officer, by any act of misconduct on his own part or by getting drunk, can go before a board and be put on the retired list. I do not believe that is right. I believe where a board find that a man from drunkenness or his own misconduct is not fit to be promoted, that instead of his being rewarded by going on the retired list he ought to be discharged, and we give him a year's pay; but if it is better to keep him in because nobody should go out, and you are assailing the American Navy if you want to get a drunken man off, let us keep him and vote this out as the Senator proposes.

Mr. HAWLEY. No, sir. I only ask for such a hearing as a man would get if he stole your handkerchief. I do not ask for anything more, but give him a fair trial. I do not want any such man in the Navy, as the Senator knows; but I object against his being turned out and forever dishonored on an ex parte hearing by one of the ordinary boards that come together to examine for promotion.

Mr. ANTHONY. A court of inquiry is not necessarily an ex parte tribunal. A court of inquiry is constituted in the same way as a court-martial. This proposition, which I was very glad to see in the last Congress, after full debate, and again in this Congress, without any debate. The retired list of the Navy should not be made an inebriate asylum.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator before he goes further to pause a little on the statement which he at first made. I do not know much about this subject, but, as I understand it, a court-martial has its very strict and legal regulations, and among them is a regulation that its sentence must be approved by the President of the United States.

Mr. ANTHONY. So with a court of inquiry.

Mr. HOAR. Allow me to state my understanding. Is that true of a board of inquiry for mere promotion? I do not find it so laid down in the general statutes where the question of the fitness of a party for promotion is to be determined that he has any right even to the presence of a judge-advocate who, although he represents the Government in a certain sense, sees that fair play is done, that he has any right to cross-examine a witness, and still less that he has a right to the presence of counsel of his own, or that he has any right whatever to the supervision of the President of the United States.

Mr. ANTHONY. He has all those rights.

Mr. HOAR. Where are they found?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know where they are found. I know what is the practice. There was an officer here who was before us for promotion. I ought not to state what has taken place in executive session, but I know that an officer who was examined for promotion had his own counsel. I refer to a case considered here at this session of Congress.

Mr. HOAR. Was that a right or a favor?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know—

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator from Rhode Island permit me to interrupt him on that point?

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. He was permitted to have his own counsel because the Government employed counsel against him; and it was an exceptional case.

Mr. ANTHONY. No, sir; the Government employed a judge-advocate. The candidate employed counsel, and then the court gave the Government counsel.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The Secretary of the Navy obtained an assignment from the Department of Justice of a person skilled in the law to prosecute that case. I do not care what you call him, whether a judge-advocate or a prosecuting attorney; that was the fact. Then of course the other party on every principle of reason was entitled to counsel for the defense. But the Senator well knows that in a great number of instances in which questions of qualification for promotion are tried the board has proceeded ex parte, and that complaints from time to time have come to the Naval Committee that the officers whose rights and interests were affected by the judgment of the board had not been permitted to put in an appearance before them. The other day when I called the attention of the Senator from Maine to this very provision, so unjust, and so dangerous in view of the practice and course of proceeding of these boards, I had in my mind the complaints that I have heard from time to time, as a member of the Naval Committee, as to the course of members of these boards even in excluding officers from their presence and going on and passing upon the question of promotion independent of their personal appearance at all. And if that is to be the rule, then they may dismiss a man from the public service under these provisions and destroy his hopes forever without giving him a hearing.

Mr. ANTHONY. My friend from Florida is mistaken in his recollection. A judge-advocate, as he knows very well, is counsel neither for the Government nor for the candidate, but is amicus curiæ. The candidate in this case employed counsel, was permitted to employ counsel, and then the court of inquiry asked the Secretary of the Navy to request the assignment of counsel for the Government; and he employed very astute and able counsel and cross-examined the witnesses.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I never want to have any such impartiality exhibited as was exhibited by that judge-advocate, because I never read a speech of a prosecuting officer so strong and firm against the defendant as that speech was, and I cannot see that he represented but one side.

Mr. ANTHONY. In this very case the proceedings of the court of inquiry were disapproved by the President, and the case was sent back to a new court and the new court of inquiry reversed the first, and the officer was confirmed and promoted.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. But I will say, with the permission of the Senator from Rhode Island, that there are no established rules or principles to guide or control these boards. While the principles that regulate a court-martial are well established and a man knows exactly what he has to depend upon when he goes before one, he can make no calculation whatever in respect to the other.

Mr. ANTHONY. Established by statute.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Established by well understood principles of law.

Mr. ANTHONY. And so of a court of inquiry.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. We have an unwritten military code which governs the proceedings of courts-martial that this special board created only to inquire into qualifications for promotion never feels itself bound by.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is no necessity of discussing courts of inquiry, for none such are contemplated in this section, not even the poor court of inquiry that is proposed in the proviso of the House:

That whenever on an inquiry had pursuant to law concerning the fitness of an officer of the Navy for promotion, &c.

Mr. ANTHONY. That requires a board of inquiry.

Mr. HAWLEY. No, sir; begging the Senator's pardon. What sort of inquiry is that? I read from page 259 of the Revised Statutes:

SEC. 1496. No line officer below the grade of commodore, and no officer not of the line, shall be promoted to a higher grade on the active list of the Navy until his mental, moral, and professional fitness to perform all his duties at sea have been established to the satisfaction of a board of examining officers appointed by the President.

SEC. 1497. In time of peace no person shall be promoted from the list of commodores to the grade of rear-admiral, on the active list, until his mental, moral, and professional fitness to perform all his duties at sea has been established as provided in the preceding section.

Merely a board of examining officers as to these three qualifications with regard to promotion. Now, the court of inquiry is quite a different affair, provided for on page 284 of the Revised Statutes:

ART. 56. A court of inquiry shall consist of not more than three commissioned officers as members, and of a judge-advocate, or person officiating as such.

Mind you they can give no judgment. They are not intended for that, but for inquiry.

ART. 57. Courts of inquiry shall have power to summon witnesses, administer oaths, and punish contempts, in the same manner as courts-martial; but they shall only state facts, and shall not give their opinion, unless expressly required so to do in the order for convening.

ART. 58. The judge-advocate, or person officiating as such, shall administer to the members the following oath or affirmation: "You do swear (or affirm) well and truly to examine and inquire, according to the evidence, into the matter now before you, without partiality." After which the president shall administer to the judge-advocate, or person officiating as such, the following oath or affirmation: "You do swear (or affirm) truly to record the proceedings of this court and the evidence to be given in the case in hearing."

ART. 59. The party whose conduct shall be the subject of inquiry, or his attorney, shall have the right to cross-examine all the witnesses.

ART. 60. The proceedings of courts of inquiry shall be authenticated by the signature of the president of the court and of the judge-advocate, and shall, in all cases not capital, not extending to the dismissal of a commissioned or warrant officer, be evidence before a court-martial, provided oral testimony cannot be obtained.

The report of a board of inquiry cannot even be used before a court-martial unless you can show that oral testimony cannot be obtained. So that a board assembled merely to examine in the ordinary way for promotion is directed by this proviso to give the most tremendous judgment that can be given against an officer. When there is no provision in the world for his being before that examining board, he has necessarily no legal right to be there and examine witnesses.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to call the Senator's attention to a provision that now exists in the statute in reference to retirement of naval officers. Section 1454 provides:

When said board finds—

Speaking of the board referred to by the Senator from Connecticut, which is a board provided for by law to examine naval officers for retirement or for promotion.

When said board finds that an officer is incapacitated for active service and that his incapacity is not the result of any incident of the service, such officer shall, if said decision is approved by the President, be retired from active service on furlough pay, or wholly retired from service with one year's pay, as the President may determine.

That is the law as it stands to-day.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mere "incapacity;" no judgment for dishonorable conduct there.

Mr. LOGAN. But he may be entirely put out of the service by this board, if the President approves its finding, with one year's pay; and now we only add to that that if the cause is from his intemperance or other act of his own then he shall be retired with one year's pay. The only difference between the existing law and this proviso is that he is to be examined by the same board the law now provides in reference to incapacity, and we declare that if that incapacity is produced by his own misconduct, intemperance, &c., he shall be discharged.

Mr. HOAR. But I do not believe the Senator from Illinois or the Senator from Maine will object to such an amendment as will meet the objection. Is not the difference this: on retirement for incapacity the charges are made; the man is brought to encounter the charge of his general capacity or not, and the decision of the board in that case, although it does not charge him with anything immoral, still must be approved by the President; and not only that but the President's discretion is invoked as to retiring the officer. Now, in the provision here the man comes before a board in ordinary course to see whether he is fit for promotion; there are no charges whatever against him; but in the course of that inquiry, without any charges, without letting him know even what the charges are, unless in their discretion they choose—

Mr. ANTHONY. He has the right to appear before the board.

Mr. HOAR. He has the right to appear before the board, but that is a very different thing. They may adjudge him guilty of the misconduct stated, and then, without reserving any power to the President in that case to approve the finding, he shall absolutely be dismissed.

Mr. ANTHONY. The President is consulted.

Mr. HOAR. I do not so understand it. I understand, therefore, that you have taken a provision which allows a man to be dismissed from the service because he is unable to perform his duty, without any charge of misconduct, in which the law carefully implies that the man shall know the charge, and carefully provides for a revision by the President, which is, of course, under the advice of the Secretary of the Navy, but the determination still by the President as to the form of dismissal, and you transfer that to the case of guilt, stripping him of the right to be charged with guilt and stripping him of the right of appeal to the President. Perhaps I misunderstand it.

Mr. LOGAN. I merely wish to get the law as it stands fairly before the Senate. If the Senator will examine section 1447 of the Revised Statutes, which refers to the examination by the board of surgeons, and will follow these down, he will find the law as it now stands provides when this examination is made by the board of surgeons, if it appears that the incapacity of the officer is not incident to the service, that is to say, that he has not been incapacitated by reason of his service; but if it originated from acts other than the performance of his duty, then, on the approval of the President, he may be wholly retired—that is, dismissed from the service with one year's pay.

The only difference between this section in the bill and that particular section of the statutes, which refers to the same board precisely, the board of surgeons examining for promotion, is that we put in the word "drunkenness," and leave out the words "as the President may direct." If the words "as the President may direct" were added to this section, the only difference between it and section 1454 of the Revised Statutes would be that the word "drunkenness" is inserted in this bill. This is made to cover exactly the cases where men are guilty of drunkenness for years and are retired by boards and placed on the retired list and draw their pay. It is to provide that that class of men shall not infect the naval service, but shall be retired absolutely on one year's pay.

Now, I want to call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut to another paragraph. He speaks about courts-martial. He is on the Military Committee, and is a military man. He will find in section 1252 of the Revised Statutes this provision in reference to the Army. Speaking of a board, not a court-martial, but a mere board of examination, that section provides:

When the board finds that an officer is incapacitated for active service, and that his incapacity is not the result of any incident of service, and its decision is approved by the President, the officer shall be retired from active service, or wholly retired from the service, as the President may determine. The names of officers wholly retired from the service shall be omitted from the Army Register.

That is almost exactly the same provision for retiring officers from the Army—not dismissing them by a court-martial, but dismissing them by a board and the approval of the President—as that which exists in the Navy. As I said, if you add here the words "as the President may determine," this section will be substantially the section of the naval law as it now exists, except that the word "drunkenness" is inserted in this bill.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think that would improve it very much.

Mr. LOGAN. I have nothing to do with that, but the Senator is talking about courts-martial. I say men can be dismissed from the Army and Navy without a court-martial, and the law has so stood for years. There is no necessity to have a court-martial to dismiss a man for drunkenness if he goes before a board that examines a man for retirement. They can decide that he shall be wholly retired; that is, dismissed from the service, and he is dismissed by approval of the President.

So when you argue that a man ought to be tried by court-martial you had better amend the law you have now, because by the present law he can be dismissed from either service without a court-martial.

Mr. HALE. I move to insert the words "shall by order of the President be discharged."

Mr. HOAR. "Provided the finding be approved by the President."

Mr. ANTHONY. There is no harm in that; but it is entire surplusage.

Mr. LOGAN. It would have to be done anyhow by the statute.

Mr. ANTHONY. But there is no objection to putting it in. While I wish to weed out the intemperate men from the Navy, I do not wish to drive out any sober man on the charge of intemperance; but the officers who have been put on the retired list for intemperance, instead of being dismissed from the service dishonorably, as they ought to have been, have rendered that list almost, as I said before, an inebriate asylum. And the evil does not stop there. Of the officers put on the retired list for drunkenness more than 80 per cent. have been put, with the assent of the Senate, back on the active list, and there they remain for a year or two, and get a promotion and retire in a higher grade than the one in which they were retired by the court of inquiry.

Mr. ROLLINS. We are all very anxious to reform the Navy. We have more officers in the Navy than we want, and it seems to me that this is a very good way to dispense with some of them. We want to get rid of the poorest if we relieve the Navy of any; and if so, why not rid ourselves of the intemperate men, the men who are court-martialed for drunkenness? Why not have those men go out of the Navy, and keep in the Navy the sober men, and not have legislation by Congress restoring men to the Navy who have been dismissed for intemperance?

Mr. FRYE. There may be a difference as to the meaning of "intemperance."

Mr. ROLLINS. We shall have to go to Maine to settle that.

Mr. HAWLEY. The principle of what I am aiming at is found in section 1456 of the Revised Statutes, which reads:

No officer of the Navy shall be placed on the retired list because of misconduct; but he shall be brought to trial by court-martial for such misconduct.

My point is just this: that if an officer is to have the greatest dishonor placed upon him that can be placed upon him, he ought to be heard before it is done. Therefore I move to strike out the clause.

Mr. ROLLINS. I do not know how the Senator from Connecticut got the floor from me, but he did it in some way. I had not yielded. I agree with the Senator from Connecticut that no man should be dismissed from the Navy without having a fair trial; he should have a fair chance to be heard; but in these times when there seems to be an absolute necessity for reducing the personnel of the Navy, for relieving ourselves of some portion of the organization, I simply desire to suggest that we should rid ourselves of the worst portion of it, of the least deserving; that is all. Therefore I am opposed to this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator from Massachusetts has an amendment to the clause before the question is taken on striking out. Everybody wants to drive out the drunkards and not have any sober men driven out on a false charge of drunkenness.

Mr. ROLLINS. The trouble heretofore has been that when people were dismissed they found a way of getting back, and if they were put on the retired list they got back on the active list. I have now in my mind the case of an officer in the Navy who applied for a promotion of some one hundred numbers at this very session of Congress, who, when he was called before the board for examination, was so intoxicated that he was not able to appear. What I desire is to rid the Navy of just such men as that.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think that man was retired as a commander, and now he wants to be put over the captains and commodores and be made a rear-admiral.

Mr. ROLLINS. It was a modest request to be put over the heads of one hundred and twenty-five officers of the Navy, and I wonder the Senate did not do it.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if that man gets promotion through the action of the Naval Committee?

Mr. ANTHONY. No, sir. The Naval Committee have reported against them, but the Senate have voted the Naval Committee down. I think the next petition of that kind had better be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROLLINS. If the Senator from Kansas will consult the records of the Committee on Naval Affairs at this session and find how many cases of that kind have gone through that committee favorably and been acted on here, if he finds one he will discover something that will astonish me.

Mr. HOAR. If this section be left as it now stands, if I correctly understand it, the Senate will be applied to in ninety-five one-hundredths of all the cases to interfere by special legislation on the ground that the officer was not aware of the nature of the charge. I move to amend by adding after the word "misconduct," in line 158, the words "having been informed of the charges against him," and then after the word "and," in line 161, to insert "if the finding of the court be approved by the President;" so that it will read:

If it shall appear that such officer is unfit to perform the duties of the place to which it is proposed to promote him, by reason of drunkenness or from any cause arising from his own misconduct, having been informed of the charges against him, he shall not be placed on the retired list of the Navy, and if the finding of the board be approved by the President he shall be discharged with not more than one year's pay.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is all right.

Mr. HAWLEY. That will do.

Mr. ANTHONY. All that is comprised in the three words "pursuant to law," but there is no objection to enacting it specifically.

Mr. HOAR. I do not so understand it. The words "pursuant to law" relate to the inquiry concerning his fitness for promotion. He goes before the board and says, "I am fit for promotion." Then if there is a charge that he is unfit by his own misconduct—

Mr. HALE. Everybody admits the amendment if we can get a vote on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Now I withdraw my motion to strike out.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move to amend by striking out all after the word "dollars," in line 167, down to and including the word "rank," in the one hundred and seventy-fifth line.

Mr. HALE. I raise the point of order there.

Mr. MILLER, of California. What is the point of order?

Mr. HALE. That is a clause that the Committee on Appropriations moved to strike out; the Senate negatived that and adopted the clause with an amendment, so that it has already acted on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The following clause has been agreed to:

That the active list of lieutenants in the Navy shall hereafter consist of two hundred and twenty-five, and until the number of lieutenants now on the active list of the Navy shall be reduced below the number of two hundred no promotion shall be made to fill vacancies occurring in said grade.

Mr. HALE. That has been agreed to with an amendment positively negativing the action of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MILLER, of California. What was the amendment?

Mr. HALE. Changing the number from two hundred to two hundred and twenty-five.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Does the record show that, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir; the Secretary says so.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Does that preclude my motion now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can raise the point in the Senate.

Mr. MILLER, of California. If it is out of order now, I will reserve the motion until the bill comes into the Senate.

Mr. ROLLINS. I desire to submit an amendment. On page 6, after the word "dollars," in lines 129 and 130, I propose to insert:

That all officers of the Navy now on or who hereafter may be placed on the retired list shall be entitled to receive annual pay only at the rate prescribed by law for retired officers of the grade in which such officers were or may be retired.

The object of this amendment is to cure the evil brought about by special acts of Congress; and inasmuch as public attention has been drawn to this, I want as far as we can to cure that evil. I will not occupy the time of the Senate, but will simply call attention to the condition of the Navy retired list as shown by this statement:

NAVAL RETIRED LIST.

| Navy | 704,185 |
| Difference | 57,365 |

Mr. HALE. This is a good amendment; I hope the Senate will adopt it.

Mr. ANTHONY. The amendment is proper enough, but it does not prevent Congress from passing special legislation.

Mr. ROLLINS. We can look out for that. The Naval Committee will take care of that.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is the law now.

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, no.

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly; the law says there shall be no increase of pay of a retired officer by reason of his promotion on the retired list.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. ROLLINS.]

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Let us understand this thing. If this is a work of supererogation let us understand it. I would ask the Senator from New Hampshire, who is so familiar with all existing laws relative to the Navy, to refer, if he can, to that law now which authorizes an officer who retired, I will say with the grade of commodore, to receive the pay of a rear-admiral, or any law on the statute-book under which an officer of the Navy retired with an inferior rank can receive the pay of a higher rank. I want to see the statute that authorizes it, and if this is a thing that is done without authority of law I want to know it.

Mr. ROLLINS. It is not done without authority of law. I took up the other day in the Senate the case of Rear-Admiral Sands on the retired list to illustrate the effect of special legislation upon retirement. I went through carefully myself and placed in the RECORD the laws, the time when the acts were passed, and all relating thereto or all that was necessary to understand the reasons why Captain Sands, who was retired as a captain, should to-day be a rear-admiral on the retired list, and instead of receiving $1,738 a year, which he did receive when retired, he now receives $4,500 a year.

This amendment, if adopted, will simply provide that every man who is now upon the retired list shall receive hereafter just the pay of the grade which he had when he was retired.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The Senator proposes to cut down the retired pay of these officers.

Several SENATORS. No, no.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Is that it?

Mr. HALE. I would not undertake to agree to anything of that kind.

Mr. ROLLINS. I want the Senate to understand how this thing has been brought about.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I say here that there is no general law on the statute-book to-day—I make the assertion broadly—which authorizes the Treasury Department to pay an officer who has been retired according to the pay belonging to a higher grade when he is retired at a lower one, and if this thing has been done it has been done under special legislation applicable to special cases.

Mr. ROLLINS. Certainly. I have stated more than once that this is the result of several special acts of Congress ingeniously dovetailed together, so that they take a man from the rank of captain and make him a rear-admiral and give him, instead of $1,738 a year, $4,500 a year. That is the sort of legislation I desire to rip up by the roots.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Let me understand your purpose.

Mr. ROLLINS. That is my purpose.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That is what I said it was a while ago, and I knew it; but when it was undertaken to repeal a general law which it was said authorized this increase of pay, it was found that there was no law for it; and if anything is done in this case it will be to destroy the retired pay given to those gentlemen. I do not know the special circumstances of their cases. Years have passed by since those laws were passed; they enjoy those rights under existing special enactments, and if it is your purpose to take their rights away, why not say so, and let Senators understand it.

Mr. ROLLINS. I will tell you what the practical effect of the amendment is.

Mr. BUTLER. Let it be read.

Mr. ROLLINS. Very well.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The amendment is to insert, after the word "dollars," in line 130:

That all officers of the Navy now on, or who hereafter may be placed on, the retired list shall be entitled to receive annual pay only at the rate prescribed by law for retired officers of the grade in which such officers were or may be retired.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is not right.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It applies to officers now on the retired list, and is intended to relate to them.

Mr. HAWLEY. I raise the point of order against it.

Mr. ROLLINS. Let us see what the practical effect is. Take the first man on your retired list. He was retired as a captain on $1,738 a year.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not want to interrupt my friend, but I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Several SENATORS. Make it now.

Mr. ROLLINS. I am on the floor.

Mr. HAWLEY. I make the point of order now.

Mr. ROLLINS. I am on the floor.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. ROLLINS. Raise your question and see whether you can take me off the floor.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The point of order is that the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire is not in order under Rule 29.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. ROLLINS. I should like to say a word about the point of order.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I object to anything being said about the point of order, because the rules require that points of order shall be decided without debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from New Hampshire is cut short in his untimely crusade for reform.

Mr. ROLLINS. Will the Presiding Officer decide the point of order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has decided that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. ROLLINS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. COCKRELL. But the Senator from New Hampshire has the floor.

Mr. ROLLINS. I think a poor man like me ought not to be taken advantage of in this way.

Mr. HALE. I am interested in seeing what a good time the Senator from New Hampshire will have in reforming anything.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire has the floor.

Mr. ROLLINS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair, out of no disrespect to the Chair; but the Senate of the United States always votes anything in order that it desires to put on a bill; and therefore I shall conclude, if a majority of the Senate vote that this is not in order, that they are opposed to this very much needed reform with reference to the retired list. That is my theory. Now, let us see how much injustice this will do to Admiral Sands. He received when he was retired as a captain $1,738 per annum. To-day he receives $4,500 by reason of these special acts, that seemingly are in direct violation of law. If he receives three-fourths of the sea pay which he would be entitled to to-day as a retired captain, he would receive three-fourths of $4,500, or $3,375 a year.

Here he has been going on, year after year, receiving pay which he was perhaps legally entitled to by reason of these special acts, but when you take into consideration the way in which they were obtained by amendments upon appropriation bills, by special acts at various sessions of Congress, understood by but few, I say that it is not doing him any injustice, and I say that it is a reform which is very much needed. Since the retired list has been brought to the attention of the Senate and of the country, and the wickednesses of it have been pointed out, I say that for the Senate to hesitate now is unwise. I hope therefore a majority of the Senate will vote that this amendment is in order and that this evil may be cured.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. If anything could convince me of the unwisdom of this legislation on appropriation bills, the position of the Senator who has just taken his seat would be sufficient. He proposes now at this late day of the session, by an amendment of this kind, following the example of the Appropriations Committee, to strike down the rights of these gentlemen that have been built up. They have rights here. They are honorable officers of the United States Navy. Those laws were not passed without some reason for them, and surely they ought not to be repealed in this way without an opportunity of a hearing being given to the parties whom they so greatly affect. I was not in Congress when Admiral Sands was retired. All I know of him is that he is an honorable and distinguished man, and there must have been equities in his case or it would not have been done. But I was at a loss to understand a while ago the position of the Senator, and there was so much said about the retired list that I really thought I was ignorant of the law relating to retirement, because I knew of no law which authorized any additional pay to be given to an officer when retired on one rank in accordance with law. There is certainly no general law, and these are all executed cases; they are not executory.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Will my friend tell me if there was no law for it how he accounts for it in the case of two hundred men?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. They do not stand on any general law.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. How do they get money in addition to what they received when retired under the general law?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Gentlemen come in here with a lot of cases which prove nothing. The statutes are not produced, but they publish a lot of tables.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Here are the originals.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I have seen enough of the tables to know that they cannot be relied upon.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. They are signed by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Before I would take away the rights of a dog I would have an inquiry into the circumstances under which these additional allowances were made, and would not with a sweeping amendment like this, twenty or thirty years after these acts were passed, go to work and repeal them in this way. If it was a general law controlling this subject it would be another thing, but these laws have been executed, and they are expiring to a certain extent.

Mr. HALE. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. HOAR. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not want to make a speech, but to put a statement on record, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. LOGAN. In answer to the remarks of the Senator from Florida about the great wrongs that are being done the Navy, or going to be done, I want to call his attention to a record which stands undisputed. After the war was over a great many persons in the Army were retired by special act as brigadier-generals and some as major-generals, when they never held such rank.

There were some thirty or forty of them. I introduced a bill similar in terms to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire to this bill, and it passed the Senate almost unanimously, went to the House, was passed by the House, and became a law. Under it those gentlemen who were on retired pay which they were never entitled to were reduced and stand reduced on the record to-day. If the provision here is unjust to officers of the Navy, why was that not unjust to officers of the Army? They came here and lobbied through bills and got rank they never had in the Army and got the pay of that rank; and we reduced them, and they stand reduced to-day. The same thing ought to be done in the Navy.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Not without examination.

Mr. HOAR. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. ROLLINS called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. ANTHONY. No Senator can vote against this. Whatever may be his views upon the amendment, it is certainly out of order.

Mr. BECK. I voted for this amendment in committee; I would vote for it again; but—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is not debatable. The motion is to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. BECK. I have no question that the ruling of the Chair was right; and even to accomplish a purpose that I favor I cannot vote that it was wrong.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I agree with the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. HOAR. I raise another point of order. I ask the Chair to enforce the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is not debatable.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand that, but I must vote to sustain the Chair, like the Senator from Kentucky.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAWES, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. GROVER.] I should vote "yea," if he were here.

Mr. BUTLER, (when Mr. HAMPTON's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. HAMPTON] is paired with the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. CHILCOTT.]

Mr. MILLER, of New York, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. GROOME.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MITCHELL.]

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FERRY. I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY.] Were he here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. WILLIAMS.]

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—29.

So the appeal was laid on the table.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President—

Mr. HALE. I ask the Senator from Florida to let me make a request. I ask unanimous consent that the five-minute rule be applied to other amendments. I am very desirous, and I think everybody will sympathize with me, to get the bill through to-night. I do not know of any amendment that will be offered which will give rise to debate. Certainly that will help us to get through, and I make that request.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I do not think it is possible to get through the bill to-night.

Mr. HALE. I shall ask the Senate to stay here.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask the Senator from Florida to move that the Senate go into executive session.

Mr. HALE. Here we have been four days on this bill, and it is very essential that we should pass it to-night. I am willing to stay and work as hard on it as anybody else to get through.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. We want to consider the sundry civil bill on Monday.

Mr. HALE. We want to have the sundry civil bill considered the first thing on Monday morning, and if this bill goes over until Monday morning, with the right of adding amendments and debate and discussion, it will take the whole day Monday. If we sit here another hour to-day we can finish it under the five-minute rule.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. There are a great many important matters in the bill that have not been debated. For one, I am unwilling to accede to the five-minute rule on this bill.

Mr. HALE. I think everybody will agree to apply the rule.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. If the Senator from Maine can finish the bill to-night I am willing to "sit it out," but I feel confident it cannot be done.

Mr. HALE. Let us see if all Senators will agree to the proposition to apply the five-minute rule to other amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there unanimous consent that upon all other amendments the five-minute rule be applied?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I object.

Mr. HALE. All agree except the Senator from Florida.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. No; they do not. Several besides me object to the application of the rule.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES, of Florida, (at five o'clock and three minutes p. m.) My motion to adjourn was in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to offer the amendment to section 2 of which I gave notice. I move to strike out all after the word "and," in line 13 of that section, down to the word "Treasury," inclusive, in line 18, and to insert:

The Secretary of the Navy shall report the same to Congress at its next session.

Mr. HALE. Under the action of the Senate in regard to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] I do not wish to take up any time upon that, and I do not.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I think it will pass the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let the amendment be read.

The PRINCIPAL LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to strike out after the word "and," in line 13 of section 2, down to and including the word "Treasury," in line 18, as follows:

All such stores and supplies as shall be found by boards of appraisers to be unserviceable for use in the Navy shall be condemned and sold in the manner hereinafter provided for the sale of old materials, and the proceeds thereof, after deducting the cost of such appraisal, condemnation, and sale, shall be paid into the Treasury.

And to insert:

The Secretary of the Navy shall report the same to Congress at its next session.

Mr. LOGAN. What is the idea of that?

Mr. HALE. It is only to provide for reporting, instead of selling.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. To report what there is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask for a division.

Mr. BUTLER. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. HALE. I hope the time will not be taken up by calling the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUTLER. I will try a division first.

Mr. LOGAN. I want to ask a question, for the amendment goes a good way if Senators will notice it for a moment. It covers stores and supplies; it covers supplies for the Navy; it covers the provisions. The amendment would prevent spoiled provisions or anything like that from being sold until reported here at the next session. Such things would be in a good condition then!

Mr. COCKRELL. It applies to stores and supplies.

Mr. LOGAN. Stores and supplies for the Navy.

Mr. BUTLER. It does not interfere at all in the way indicated by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LOGAN. All right.

Mr. BUTLER. The Secretary of the Navy or other officers of the Navy can still go on under existing law.

Mr. HALE. I do on account of the delay what I thought I would not do. I make the point of order against the amendment, that it changes existing law.

Mr. BUTLER. I am very much surprised at that after it was the distinct announcement by the Senator from Maine that he would not make the point of order.

Mr. HALE. I did not intend to make the point of order, but there is so much delay that I feel compelled to do so.

Mr. BUTLER. That is certainly a violation of the solemn agreement made.

Mr. HALE. By no means.

Mr. BUTLER. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. HALE. I decline to permit the Senator to make any such statement.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not mean to be disrespectful to the Senator from Maine; but I say it is a practical violation of the solemn agreement made at the time, for I called attention to it, and the Senator said he would not make a point of order.

Mr. HALE. To this amendment?

Mr. BUTLER. To any amendment. I gave notice of this amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. That agreement was not made. I protested against it and reserved the right to make a point of order myself.

Mr. HALE. I said when the Senator offered this amendment that under the action of the Senate on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky I would not make any resistance, and now, if we can vote upon the amendment without discussion, (the Senate understands it well enough,) I am willing to vote rather than have delay, after the Senate has declined to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 20, noes 19.

Mr. VANCE. On page 3, line 57, after the word "men," I move to insert:

But these provisions shall not apply to cadets now in the Naval Academy.

Mr. HALE. I have an amendment here that I will offer that I think the Senator will accept. It is a committee amendment that I tried to offer a little while ago, but had to send for the papers. I propose to insert:

Nor deprive of such appointment any graduate who may complete the six years' course during the year 1882.

That not only applies to graduates already but there are some whose complete final graduation will not take place until after that. This was drawn by the Secretary of the Navy to cover the point of the Senator from North Carolina, and to cover all graduations this year.

Mr. VANCE. There are a number of cadets there now who will not graduate for four years, and what is asked of them? They entered the Navy under the supposition that they would graduate like other graduates and be entitled to some promotion in the naval service. I think the operation of law should only be against those who enter the Academy after the passage of the law. I offer the amendment which I indicated.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order that it changes the law.

Mr. COCKRELL. I make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Now, does the Senator from Maine wish to offer his amendment?

Mr. VANCE. Let me understand this thing. Does the Chair hold that my amendment is a change of law?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. VANCE. It is an amendment to the text of the bill as it came from the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It changes the law.

Mr. VANCE. It does not change the law; it is a change of a proposal to change the law.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is precisely what we decided against yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is general legislation.

Mr. VANCE. Then I will move with permission, if the Senate thinks the amendment is not in order, to strike out the whole provision in reference to cadets in the Naval Academy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. From what point to what point?

Mr. VANCE. Beginning in line 29, after the word "provided," and running down to line 59. I move to strike out the whole of that clause.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The matter proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

That hereafter there shall be no appointments of cadet-midshipmen or cadet-engineers at the Naval Academy, but in lieu thereof naval cadets shall be appointed from each Congressional district and at large, as now provided by law for cadet-midshipmen, and all the undergraduates of the Naval Academy shall hereafter be designated and called "naval cadets;" and from those who successfully complete the six years' course appointments shall hereafter be made as it is necessary to fill vacancies in the lower grades of the line and Engineer Corps of the Navy and of the Marine Corps; And provided further, That no greater number of appointments into these grades shall be made each year than shall equal the number of vacancies which has occurred in the same grades during the preceding year; such appointments to be made from the graduates of the year, at the conclusion of their six years' course, in the order of merit as determined by the academic board of the Naval Academy; the assignment to the various corps to be made by the Secretary of the Navy upon the recommendation of the academic board. But nothing herein contained shall reduce the number of appointments from such graduates below ten in each year. And if there be a surplus of graduates, those who do not receive such appointment shall be given a certificate of graduation, an honorable discharge, and one year's sea pay, as now provided by law for cadet-midshipmen; and so much of section 1521 of the Revised Statutes as is inconsistent herewith is hereby repealed.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, only one word. This is that portion of the bill that deals with the constant supply that is being injected into the Navy, thereby making constantly an overplus. If the Senate chooses now to strike this out, to not only strike out all in relation to the upper grades but also this attempt that has been made to prevent the overplus of graduates, it has the right and the power to do that. That is what this does. I am not going to discuss it any further, only stating just what it is, so that every Senator may vote with his eyes open. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from Maine will pardon me one moment, I perhaps used language a while ago that I should not have done, and if what I said was offensive to the Senator, as a matter of course I regret it very much. I had no idea of making any reflection upon him. Now, I want to convince the Senator that I was right in saying what the agreement was and that he was wrong.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The Chair would state to the Senator from South Carolina that the motion of the Senator from Maine to lay the amendment on the table is not debatable.

Mr. BUTLER. I will then ask the Senator to suspend it one moment while I read from the RECORD.

Mr. HALE. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is temporarily withdrawn.

Mr. BUTLER. Yesterday the following debate occurred on this floor:

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to get a little information. What course has been adopted on this bill? Is it proposed to go through with the bill and act upon the committee amendments first before any amendment is suggested on the floor of the Senate?

Mr. HALE. That order was adopted the other day when the bill was first called up.

Mr. BUTLER. I have several amendments that I desire to offer.

Mr. HALE. I wish to say here, notwithstanding the ruling of the Chair, that, so far as I am concerned, I do not propose to insist upon technical points. Realizing that the bill contains legislation, and that any matter that is pertinent to the Navy and to its organization and service ought to be considered, when we get through with the amendments of the committee, and any proposition is made, I shall not insist on enforcing the ruling of the Chair. I shall be glad if, in the same spirit, all Senators will withhold objections to the committee amendments. As we go along, one by one let us consider them, discuss them, and modify them, if we will, or strike them out. I shall be very glad if, in the same spirit that I announce my course of action, Senators on the other side shall fail to make points of order, and in that way we shall have everything considered.

Mr. ROLLINS. We might reach an amicable arrangement on that point if the Senators on the floor were allowed to offer their amendments to the bill as we progress. Then we can see how far liberty is extended to members of the Senate. I want to secure for each member of the Senate and for each committee of the Senate the same rights and privileges which are extended to the Committee on Appropriations, and that is all. If that can be extended to us I am satisfied.

Mr. HALE. But let me ask the Senator—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Chair make a suggestion. If the arrangement suggested is not carried out in good faith, the Senator from New Hampshire can in the Senate assert any right that he has.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly. What fairer proposition could be made than mine, that we proceed in accordance with the order adopted the other day to take up the committee amendments? When we come to those amendments, any amendments that are offered to those amendments I shall not object to even if they do involve new legislation, provided they are pertinent, and then when we get through any general proposition that any Senator has to strike out half a dozen pages in the bill, like that of the Senator from California, I shall not object to, and we shall have a vote upon that.

Mr. BUTLER. That is exactly the point on which I wanted to get information. I propose to strike out all that portion of the bill which is general legislation.

Mr. HALE. I shall make no point of order on that. I do not care what points of order there are of any kind as to being germane or as to being new legislation or as to changing law, I will not make any point of order. I do not want the bill run in that way.

That was the basis of the assertion which I made. Perhaps I stated it too harshly, but for that I have made the amende to the Senator.

Mr. HALE. I wish to say that yesterday afternoon when we were proceeding, with an understanding which was not of course a binding agreement, but an understanding that ought to be just as binding with gentlemen, I thought and stated at the time that the Senator himself infringed certainly upon my understanding of the agreement when he persistently interposed his point of order to the provision of the Senate Committee on Appropriations upon an amendment that was admittedly very much better than the House provision, and stated that his object was to strike out everything. I consider that that was going beyond what anybody had considered or talked of, and I had no thought that any such point was to be made. I did not consider after that, and when the Senator had insisted upon that, he supposed that anybody was held not to make points of order.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to ask the Senator if I gave him any assurance that I would not make a point of order? That cannot, when I avail myself of a right which I clearly have, absolve him of his promise. I gave no assurance that I would not make a point of order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I renew the motion to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator to withdraw the motion. I wish to say something on the merits of the proposition; it is a very important matter indeed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri withdraw the motion to lay the amendment on the table?

Mr. COCKRELL. I withdraw it. The Senator from Maine has the bill in charge, and he may renew it.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent that the five-minute rule be applied.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the adoption of the five-minute rule?

Mr. VANCE. There is.

Mr. HALE. Then I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator from Maine having charge of the bill to permit me to state what is the main subject before us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine withdraw his request for the adoption of the five-minute rule?

Mr. HALE. I will withdraw it for the Senator's inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. HOAR. I do not know a great deal about this bill, but I do know that this provision will be a source of very serious disappointment to a great many very worthy young men. The text of the bill which it is now proposed to strike out destroys altogether the existing system of cadet-engineers and compels persons who are to be employed in the Navy in the management of engines, in the construction of engines, who are to understand all in regard to steam-machinery, to be taken from the cadets at large.

There has been, as I understand it, a policy in existence in the management of the naval school for some years past, under a law passed about eight or nine years ago, under which boys who did not pass the usual competitive examination, or did not obtain the usual recommendation of a member of Congress in any way as suited to the general duties of an officer, the charge of a ship, who did not expect to become admirals or commodores or famous, eminent officers, still having a special inventive genius, were permitted to go and receive an education as cadet-engineers and were employed afterward in the special charge of the machinery, the engine, upon the ship.

I have known in my own neighborhood, which is a community of mechanics, boys who manifested in early life great mechanical and inventive genius, who were eager to avail themselves of this opportunity, and who undoubtedly would be extremely useful men to the Government. They never would have thought of becoming ordinary officers in the Navy any more than they would have thought of going to West Point.

The bill as it stands utterly strikes out and destroys that policy on which we have been acting. If that is passed it is proper to say so, but it seems to me to determine that question by laying on the table a motion to strike out the text of the bill is not reasonable. Unless there is some good reason stated by the honorable Senator from Maine, I hope the motion will not prevail.

I trust the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina will prevail, for I am sure the naval war is to be very largely hereafter a war of invention, of mechanical skill. Our policy—and that is the policy of the committee—is to have a small navy in time of peace; but we expect, if we have to encounter England, or encounter France, or Italy, or Spain, to draw largely on the source which is afforded by the inventive genius of our mechanics and artisans.

It was a deliberately adopted policy of Congress to have this special school for cadet-engineers, to give them a special training, to put them in the special place where they could be made useful in the service of the Government. Gentlemen who have studied this subject more than I have may assign very good reasons for the total and sudden destruction of that policy, but it ought not to be destroyed without good reason.

Mr. HALE. Let me call the Senator's attention to what he may have overlooked. The committee believed, and that was the theory on which the House proceeded, that hereafter all naval cadets should embrace in their education not only the duties appertaining to line officers but of engineer officers. The engineer officer has become an important component part of the management and guidance of the ship; in fact so much so that hereafter the man who commands a ship or is an executive officer of a ship or is an officer upon it ought to have not only the general knowledge now gained by line officers but he ought to know the engineer officer's part besides.

The object of this is that the course shall embrace all, and the bright boys that the Senator refers to from Massachusetts and elsewhere, who go in now will not only get the benefit of the engineer course but of all the other course besides. The committee has no doubt, and I have no doubt personally, that it is entirely competent under a judicious course for the engineer-cadet, when he is graduated, to be competent not only to command the ship in action, not only to command her with reference to sailing and her other movements, but to know all about the engineering part, and there ought to be hereafter no division—not to have an engineer crew and what are called the line of officers. In a few years all this will cease because the naval officers will have to know both sides. That is what we are seeking to do.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me you might as well undertake to say that the surgeons should be taken from the naval officers at large as to say that the mechanics should. It is a special genius, a special gift, a special taste, a special skill, which is manifested in early life.

Mr. HALE. How is that regulated? The boys go in there by appointment; there is no special gift to the cadet, but a privilege as a cadet.

Mr. HOAR. I know they do; but boys who go there as cadet-engineers are boys who have manifested remarkable mechanical skill.

Mr. HALE. If those boys want to go to Annapolis and want to be appointed for that very reason, we get the benefit of their special skill; the more of them the better.

Mr. HOAR. There may be many of them very unfit for the ordinary accomplishments and duties of a seaman and officer. The boy who goes to sea and becomes a brave, a venturesome, dashing sailor, whether an accomplished gentleman or not, is one kind of a boy. A boy who goes into a machine shop and is capable of inventing new machinery, improving projectiles, and repairing an engine that is out of order is an altogether different kind of a boy, and the capacity is shown in early youth.

I have quite a number of applications to recommend boys for cadet-engineers, and they are boys as I said who never would think of being, never would desire to be, naval officers. They never would expect to go where they were liable to be assigned to command a ship, and they never want to be.

As I said, it seems to me that this is one of the most important matters that can come up with reference to our existing naval policy. I defer very much to the judgment of the Senator from Maine in all these things, and I manifested that by changing my mind on hearing one of his speeches in regard to a good deal of the policy of the bill.

Mr. HALE. I wish to say that I doubt if I have any judgment on naval matters, for there is nothing whatever that is attempted that has not met with this persistent resistance. We are trying to remedy the lower grade which gentlemen in discussion said they wanted to remedy, but not the upper one; but the moment we approach it we are met with the same resistance. I do not say that it is not right.

Mr. VANCE. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to say that I have met with some considerable resistance in trying to modify the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to say a word, if my friend from North Carolina yields.

Mr. VANCE. Certainly. I will talk after everybody else is done.

Mr. PLUMB. The general purpose, as I understand it, of this provision has been to consolidate all the elements of education at the academy, and make every officer educated at the expense of the Government many-sided, giving him all the qualifications, all the facilities that can be afforded by education, and not to have a man who is an engineer and not a naval officer proper, not a man who is a naval officer proper and not an engineer, but to have a man who embraces within himself as a part of his education all the qualifications necessary to command a ship and to control its machinery.

The view which I expressed the other day in regard to the functions to be performed in case of war and the sudden enlargement of the Navy I will repeat now to this extent, that I believe every graduate of the Naval Academy ought to come out of that institution thoroughly informed in regard to all the machinery of the Navy. He ought to be qualified not only to do duty on board ship as a captain or a commander but as a controller and manager of its machinery. He ought to be qualified to instruct.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator from Kansas permit me to suggest a point?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, sir.

Mr. MAXEY. I regard one of the greatest merits of the course at West Point to be that every cadet there is taught every branch of the service, civil engineering, military engineering, artillery, cavalry, infantry, ordnance, it makes no difference what it is; he is qualified for any branch of it; and this principle applies to the same extent here.

Mr. PLUMB. I think so. The suggestion of the Senator from Texas is entirely pertinent to this discussion. We ought to educate our engineers, our cadet-midshipmen; we ought to educate every person whom we bring into the academy at Annapolis in every branch of the naval service. Every one who goes out of it ought to be qualified to take any position in the Navy, to give instruction to those people who may come under him and not to be educated in a single branch of the service. In that respect I think the provision of the bill as it came to us from the House is most wise.

There is some sort of assumption in the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina that there is some right, some privilege on the part of those persons who have gone to the academy now to be promoted according to the condition of things when they entered the Navy. I want to say that I regard that as the most invidious, the most offensive proposition which could be made. We take young men from the walks of civil life, we educate them at the expense of the Government, and while it is true that at the time they went in there may have been a certain hope or a certain expectation of promotion, it is now sought to be asserted that that hope or that expectation cannot be diminished, it cannot be changed by legislation without interfering with their rights.

Mr. VANCE. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. PLUMB. I do.

Mr. VANCE. I ask the Senator if this principle was not fully recognized in 1878 when similar legislation was applied to the Military Academy at West Point?

Mr. PLUMB. I do not know what may have been done heretofore. I admit that the tendency of all our legislation has been in favor of classes. I admit that it has been in favor of naval officers as such as against the body of the people. I admit that it has been in favor of cadets at West Point as against the body of the people.

I admit that the general tendency of legislation has been, as I have said, to benefit classes as against the interests of the great body of the people. But I deny that there is any such right. I deny that it is a privilege. I deny that there ought to be any such expectation. We have a right to abolish the entire Navy. Would any one set up here that because there might be to-day an international peace conference which would render it impossible that for twenty years there should be a war, or that there ever should be a war, we have got to educate these men for the purpose of war and we have got to carry them into the Navy, and to keep up the Navy to answer their convenience and to meet the expectations which they had formed themselves at the time they entered the Naval Academy?

This is a government of law. The law fixes the rights of men, absolute and relative, in regard to such matters, and we may change the law at any time, and ought to change it whenever the public good requires it. To say that any cadet at Annapolis or at West Point by reason of his having entered there and having been kept there at the expense of the Government shall be entitled to go on through all the grades of promotion which existed at the time he went there, is a violation, as I think, of the rights of the Government in favor of that particular individual, because if he is entitled to be promoted to be a lieutenant he is entitled to be promoted to be a captain, and if a captain to a major, and if a major to a lieutenant-colonel, and if a lieutenant-colonel to a colonel, and so on; it does not end anywhere until he has exhausted the entire gamut of promotion. That, I say, is subversive of the rights of the legislative department of the country and of the powers and privileges of the Government.

I am willing myself on all proper occasions to vote to assert the very opposite principle, and to say that the men who have been educated at the expense of the Government have no right which may not equitably and fairly and properly be taken from them, in consideration of the public interest, at any moment of time. They may be taken out of the Army before they get through; they may be re-mitted to civil life whenever they do get through, and without in any sense impugning the good faith of the Government as applicable to its institutions. For that reason, as I said, I am opposed to it.

Mr. President, we may extend the rights of these persons, and the people of the United States may not say anything about it. We extended the curriculum, the course, from four to six years, and nobody said anything about that. We might extend it to forty years and nobody would say anything about it.

I regard it as one of the most vicious principles that can be asserted in legislation applicable to a person who is taken into the public service, which is practically all a civil service. There is no war. The Navy to-day is just as much a part of the civil establishment of the Government as the clerks of any bureau of the Treasury Department. There is no more speck of war on the horizon of the Atlantic than there is on the horizon of Washington, not a particle.

The clerk who goes in with an expectation that, under the rule existing when he went in, in due time he will become the head of a bureau or will be promoted from a salary of $1,000 to $1,200 is just as much warranted in saying that the legislation of Congress shall not cut him off, shall not deprive him of that promotion by shrinking the dimensions of the bureau in which he serves, as that the promotion which a naval cadet thought was before him shall be kept and preserved to him during all time. Let us see what it leads to. Once having established a certain ratio of employment, once having employed a certain number of men in different branches of the service, we cannot diminish it at all; we have got to keep it up. I think that is the most offensive thing that could possibly be said.

We have come to a point, and as I think the vote of the Senate will determine upon that, where the public interest requires that promotion in the Navy shall be stopped. A certain number of persons are in the Naval Academy. They have been taken there at the expense of the Government; they have been fed and clothed and educated at the expense of the Government; they have had a full quid pro quo for all they have done, and if they ever do anything further they will get a full quid pro quo for that. The Government does not ask anything of them. They have received an education which will stand them in good stead wherever they go. They can go into civil employment anywhere. The Government is ready to relinquish any demand on their services. It has got no claim on them on account of it, and they have got no claim on the Government on account of its having expended money for their education.

I say it is the wise thing, looking at it from a public-stand-point, to send those persons back into civil life. I have always believed, independent of the question of the personnel of the Army and Navy, that certain persons should be educated at public expense in the arts of war at Annapolis and West Point and should go back into civil employment, in order that when the emergency comes we may have persons educated in the tactics to be brought into active service to serve as instructors and informers of the forces we may have to arrange; but so far as any right is concerned, the right is on the part of the Government, justice is on the part of the Government. There is no claim on the part of any one of these young men for anything except what the Government has already given him, and no expectation which he might have formed, knowing what the law was, knowing that the law at any time might require a diminution of the Navy, knowing that the law might at any time require a diminution of the Army; and nothing we do here interferes in any respect in the slightest degree with his equitable right.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I am afraid if the bill is passed in the form it is now on this subject, and especially if it is liable to the interpretation that the Senator from Kansas desires to place upon it, that we shall disorganize and disarrange a very nicely and finely balanced system at Annapolis. I think if we educate every midshipman who goes into the school at Annapolis as an engineer we shall have to increase the plant there at least three or four fold. It is now provided for a certain number of cadet-engineers, with all the necessary appliances and machinery and with the necessary corps of instructors in steam-engineering, and if we should undertake to educate every man who goes there so as to make him an engineer of steam-engineering we should have to increase the plant very largely, and I think we should disorganize the system almost entirely.

As I understand it, a youth who goes now to Annapolis to enter the engineering department makes his application for that special department. It is done, of course, in accordance with his own taste and his supposed capacity for that kind of work. The curriculum is different in reference to the engineering department and the department of seamanship proper. When the schools arrive at certain points of instruction they divide; a certain portion of the cadets are taught seamanship, which includes navigation and everything of that kind, and the other portion are made familiar with everything relating to engines, &c. It would be a matter of impossibility, I think, just now, without great reformation and great change in the establishment at Annapolis, to combine those two schools in such a way as to compel every man to become an engineer and every engineer to become a seaman. I think it would be impracticable.

More than that, the suggestions made by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] it seems to me, are very wise. They are very pertinent indeed. A certain description of talent seeks its instruction in one department of the service there, a certain other description in another department of the service.

I am afraid we are proceeding too hastily about this bill. I am quite willing and I am in favor, indeed, of propositions for retiring young gentlemen, after they have graduated, with a year's pay, or allowing them to take their diplomas and one year's pay and go into civil life. I think that is exactly right.

I have not any doubt that the engineer school at Annapolis is the equal, if it is not the superior of any in the world. Who ever will go there and examine the school and see its work will be astonished, I think, as well as greatly gratified by the proficiency which is shown by young men in that school. When a young man goes into the engineering department they first put him in a workshop with a jack-plane and a hatchet. They teach him how to frame all the different molds for casting the machinery of a ship, every part of it, everything that is done by casting, every part of an engine, it makes no difference what there is that belongs to a ship. A young man is put into the carpenter's shop and he is taught to make the pattern upon which that thing can be molded. He is next carried into the blacksmith shop, and into a brass foundry; so that he is made familiar with all the elementary work of these different lines of instruction. He goes to the anvil, and with his hammer and his tongs and his ordinary bellows he is required to make all manner of rods, to hammer iron into various shapes.

From these preliminary or elemental beginnings he is carried on until some, I will say thirty of the engineer corps, when they come to graduate in the graduating class, will each man take his pattern for a separate part of a steam-engine, a complete ship's engine, boilers and all, and each man will make that part of the engine, and he will polish it and adjust it, and it will never be fitted together at all until the cadets bring each his part together and put it into a compact form as a perfect piece of machinery. That is one of the requirements of the graduating year, and some of the most beautiful engines that have ever been constructed on the American continent have been made by the engineers in that school in this way.

A midshipman who has to go aloft and has to exercise the duties of his profession above decks cannot acquire that skill in combination with the other requirements of seamanship. There is too much. If you undertake to combine the two professions where they are distinct professions, there is too much for any ordinary man. You will break him down if you undertake to put it upon him.

It would be very much better, in my opinion, not to interfere with that established regulation, if the bill does interfere with it, as I infer it does from remarks made around me here.

I am entirely willing that the bill should provide that cadet-engineers as well as cadet-midshipmen should be permitted, or even be required, to go into civil life with a year's pay after they have graduated if they cannot go into the Navy. That is one of the most admirable schools of education that any nation of the earth boasts, and we certainly need men educated in these particulars more than in any other for the purpose of building up a navy.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, there are some provisions which I have moved to strike out that I would be very glad to retain, but under the ruling of the Chair it is impossible to change or amend anything, because it would come in conflict with existing law; that is to say, it would change a law as it is proposed it shall exist. Therefore I am compelled to make the motion to strike out the whole provision of the House bill relating to that subject.

In relation to the possibility, as argued by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB,] of taking a boy and in the course of four years making him a master in not only everything pertaining to the duties of a sailor and to the business of warfare and gunnery, &c., but also making him a master in everything that pertains to the building and the working and the application of steam to engines, the attempt would result, it seems to me, in nine cases out of ten in making the boy a jack-of-all-trades and good for nothing. It is an absolute impossibility, and it would destroy, as was well argued by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] the efficiency of the engineer department, if it did not destroy the whole department itself.

In this age and at the state to which science has attained in all these departments it is an utter impossibility to perfect a boy, however bright he may be, in so many things in the short space of four years, or in a long space either, as for that matter; and it would strike at the very root of what is supposed to be the essence of the perfection which modern times have made in all the arts and sciences, and that is the subdivision of labor. The mastery of all the subjects connected with steam and with steam-engines for the propulsion of vessels on water is sufficient itself to engage the brightest intellect; and when we come to combine that with a dozen other things requiring as much intellect and as much study, and abolish the division of labor which has thus been introduced into naval education, it seems to me it would be ruinous to the whole system.

Mr. VOORHEES. May I ask the Senator from North Carolina a single question? I have been a listener for the last half hour to this discussion, and I ask a question in the utmost good faith for information on my own part. I do not pretend to be posted on this bill as the members of the Naval Committee and the Appropriations Committee are, but if I understand the proposition now pending it is to educate young men who are not to serve in the Navy of the United States. I understand there has been loud complaint on the floor here that the Navy at the top is heavy and that the old men who have served a long while, and who would serve now if there was anything to do, are somewhat censurable for being idle; but at the same time the school is going on which crowds the ranks of the Navy with officers, and there is no diminution whatever in the educational department.

But the answer to it is that those who are educated now are not to be employed in the naval service, but a large proportion of them are to go into other channels of employment. I am liberal about the matter of education. I am not complaining that young men are being taught, but I know no power given to me as a member of Congress to vote to educate anybody at the expense of the Government except for employment in the Army or Navy. If there is any member of the Committee on Naval Affairs or of the Committee on Appropriations who can point out to me the power by which this educational process is to go on not for employment in the naval service, but to be remitted to the employments of civil life, I should be very glad to hear it. I will take it as a favor if anybody will point out how it is that the cadets at Annapolis shall be educated at the expense of the Government, not to be employed in the service of the Government. Until that is done I shall vote for nothing of this kind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. VANCE?]

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Chair have the amendment reported?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chief Clerk will report the amendment.

The amendment was read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. VANCE and Mr. VOORHEES asked for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. MORGAN. I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that I think he can accomplish what he desires if he will consent to a modification of this amendment to this effect: strike out, in line 29, after the word "hereafter" all that follows down to the word "all," in line 33, and the word "hereafter," in line 34, so as to read:

That hereafter all the undergraduates at the Naval Academy shall be designated and called "naval cadets;" and from those who successfully complete the six years' course, &c.

Perfecting it in the succeeding lines as the committee has amended it. That would cause them all to be appointed as naval cadets and remove this friction which causes some jealousy between engineer cadets and naval cadets proper.

Mr. HOAR. That would abolish the cadet-engineers who now have a four years' course, would it not?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not think so; it would only extend the term.

Mr. HOAR. It would say that other appointments should be made from those who complete the six years' course, so that the cadet-engineers who have a four years' course would be left abolished.

Mr. MORGAN. If that would be the effect of it it would require some further amendment; but my proposition was merely to get rid of changing now the method of appointment; that is to say, to allow young men to apply and be appointed into the engineer corps, and not to be appointed to the regular corps of cadet-midshipmen as sailors and navigators.

If we retain that we can preserve the whole of the system as it now exists in all of its value and all its benefits, and we can still do that which the committee recommend, which I think should be done, provide for the retirement—for I call it retirement—for a discharge at the end of the graduation of their course when they are not needed, furnishing them with a year's pay and with a certificate of graduation.

That would save all this trouble; but the amendment of the committee as it is, I think, is a dangerous one and ought to be very carefully looked after. If the Senator from North Carolina will accept that modification we can change the rest of the clause so as to meet the objection, which I think is a valid one, made by the Senator from Massachusetts, so as not to do any injustice to any class.

Mr. VANCE. I decline to accept the modification proposed.

Mr. HALE. Then let the roll be called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll will be called on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON.] I should vote "nay."

Mr. BUTLER, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. CHILCOTT.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FERRY, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY.] I should vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. GROOME.]

Mr. VANCE, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MITCHELL,] and not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PLATT. I am paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. SLATER,] but I think on this vote he would vote as I should, and I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—17.

| | | | |
|----------|-------------------|-----------------|-----------|
| Anthony, | George, | McDill, | Walker, |
| Bayard, | Hawley, | Mahone, | Williams. |
| Bissh, | Hoar, | Miller of Cal., | |
| Call, | Jones of Florida, | Morgan, | |
| Farley, | Lapham, | Voorhees, | |

NAYS—24.

| | | | |
|--------------------|-------------------|------------|----------|
| Aldrich, | Harris, | Logan, | Plumb, |
| Cockrell, | Harrison, | McMillan, | Pugh, |
| Coke, | Hill of Colorado, | Maxey, | Rollins, |
| Conger, | Ingalls, | Morrill, | Sanders, |
| Davis of West Va., | Jackson, | Pendleton, | Sawyer, |
| Hale, | Jonas, | Platt, | Vest. |

ABSENT—35.

| | | | |
|--------------------|----------|------------------|------------|
| Allison, | Dawes, | Hampton, | Ransom, |
| Beck, | Edmunds, | Hill of Georgia, | Saulsbury, |
| Brown, | Fair, | Johnston, | Sewell, |
| Butler, | Ferry, | Jones of Nevada, | Sherman, |
| Camden, | Frye, | Kellogg, | Slater, |
| Cameron of Pa., | Garland, | Lamar, | Vance, |
| Cameron of Wis., | Gorman, | McPherson, | Van Wyck, |
| Chilcott, | Groome, | Miller of N. Y., | Windom. |
| Davis of Illinois, | Grover, | Mitchell, | |

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to strike out after the word "the," in line 571, down to the word "person," in line 573, in the following words:

Secretary of the Navy shall report the facts to Congress, with a statement of the amount which, in his opinion, should be paid to such person.

And to insert:

Contractor shall bind himself to discharge the Government from any liability therefor on account of such adoption and use.

Mr. VOORHEES. If the Senator from Kansas will permit me, with the permission also of the Senator from Maine, who has the bill in charge, I move that the Senate adjourn. It is now after six o'clock, and that amendment will give rise to a protracted debate.

Mr. HALE. I know how long the Senate has been here, and it is Saturday night, and this is a wearied body; but I wish the Senator would withhold for a few minutes and see if we do not develop the fact that there are no more amendments, and if so we may finish the bill. I understand that if there are amendments that give rise to debate and controversy the Senate undoubtedly will not stay here very long; but it may be that we can soon develop the fact that we are on the point of getting through.

Mr. VOORHEES. I suppose the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas would give rise to debate, but I defer entirely to the Senator from Maine, who has the business management of the bill.

Mr. HALE. Let us hear what the amendment is?

Mr. VOORHEES. I can see that it will lead to debate.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask that my amendment be reported.

Mr. HALE. I do not know but that I may accept the amendment after hearing it read.

The Acting Secretary read Mr. PLUMB's amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I will state what my amendment is. The bill seems to require that we shall make a contract for building the ship and have the Government settle afterward for the use of any patent that may be necessary in such building. I think that when we build a ship, whoever contracts to build it ought to bring to the Government a clean bill of health. If he makes use of any patent he ought to discharge the obligation of the patentee and not leave the Government to settle an indefinite obligation.

Mr. HALE. Why does not the Senator move to strike out the whole clause from line 567? That would strike out the whole provision in relation to patents.

Mr. PLUMB. If on the whole the Senator from Maine, who seems to be in accord with the motive I have in view, thinks that will accomplish it, I am willing to strike it all out. My object is only that when we make a contract we shall not be subjected to an indefinite settlement for the use of a patent.

Mr. HALE. I suggest to the Senator to modify the amendment and strike out all after the word "armament," in line 567, down to and including the word "person," in line 573.

Mr. PLUMB. I accept that suggestion.

Mr. INGALLS. That leaves the whole question open.

Mr. HAWLEY. It leaves the citizen to make an equitable claim on Congress.

Mr. PLUMB. I think on the whole the amendment as I offered it is preferable.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have not the slightest disposition to embarrass the speedy passage of this bill, but I am assured since I took the floor and moved to adjourn that there are half a dozen amendments to be presented and pressed upon the consideration of the Senate. Yet my motion to adjourn is subject to the approval or disapproval of the Senator from Maine, if he wants to go on; but I think he had better yield to the motion.

Mr. ANTHONY. We can lay the amendments on the table as fast as they are presented.

Mr. VOORHEES. That cannot be done. I am quite assured you cannot do that. There are nearly half a dozen amendments, certainly four or five, that will be pressed in good faith and discussed, and if Senators desire to stay here this hot evening at this unusual hour I shall not object. I leave it to the Senator from Maine who has charge of the bill.

Mr. HALE. Let us see if we can get a unanimous agreement that the final vote shall be taken on the bill at one o'clock on Monday.

Mr. BAYARD and others. Say five o'clock.

Mr. VOORHEES. I agree to that, so far as I am concerned. I have no amendment to propose.

Mr. BUTLER. I suggest four o'clock.

Mr. HALE. I do not want to use up the whole of Monday on this bill, because the sundry civil bill is to be considered Monday.

Mr. VOORHEES. I expect the Senator from Maine can get an agreement to take the vote at two o'clock on Monday.

Mr. HALE. I will say two o'clock.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. To vote finally upon all amendments without debate?

Mr. VOORHEES. I think that is right; I shall agree to that.

Mr. BAYARD. But amendments may be offered.

Mr. VOORHEES. There will be time enough.

Mr. HALE. I will ask for an understanding that at two o'clock on Monday the vote be taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Maine state exactly what he asks unanimous consent to?

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent that at two o'clock on Monday the vote shall be taken without further debate upon any amendments then pending and upon the bill.

Mr. BAYARD. No, there must be the right to offer amendments after that time.

Mr. HALE. And all that may be offered. That is right.

Mr. BAYARD. Including all amendments that may be offered?

Mr. BUTLER. I suggest to modify that proposition so as to agree that at two o'clock the five-minute rule be enforced in the consideration of amendments.

Mr. HALE. I think everybody would consent that the five-minute rule should be enforced from the time we go into a consideration of the bill on Monday.

Mr. BUTLER. I think the Senator is mistaken about that. I suggest that after two o'clock the five-minute rule be enforced, and we vote at three.

Mr. VOORHEES. If I understand the proposition of the Senator from Maine, it is that at two o'clock on Monday the Senate will vote on the amendments then offered, and on the amendments afterward offered the five-minute rule shall prevail, voting upon them as they are offered after two o'clock.

Mr. HALE. No, my proposition is that at two o'clock the Senate shall proceed to vote on amendments pending and afterward offered, without further debate.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will agree to that.

Mr. HALE. To let the debate run up to that time.

Mr. BAYARD. I suggest to the Senator whether debate should not be limited to five minutes from the time the consideration of the bill begins on Monday.

Mr. HALE. That is what I want. I should like to have the five-minute rule apply on Monday morning.

Mr. BAYARD. It will be necessary to have that understanding before the agreement is made to take the vote at a fixed hour.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the rule be applied to Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the proposition that the five-minute rule shall be applied in the consideration of amendments from the time the bill shall be taken up on Monday until two o'clock, and that after two o'clock the vote shall be taken on all amendments pending and offered, without debate? Is there objection?

Mr. BUTLER. I shall object unless the Senator will extend the time further, until three o'clock.

Mr. HALE. I will agree to three o'clock, although I think when the time comes the Senate will be very glad to vote at two o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the agreement that at three o'clock on Monday the vote shall be taken without further debate, on amendments pending and amendments thereafter offered, and on the bill? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HALE. I shall move to take up the bill directly that the Journal is read on Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and announces that the agreement is made as stated by the Chair.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FERRY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 5812) to establish post-routes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom the subject was referred, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 2169) for the relief of H. B. Wilson, administrator of the estate of William Tinder, deceased.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PROPERTY OF LITTLE SISTERS OF THE POOR.

Mr. VANCE. On the Calendar there is a bill which has been passed by the Senate, and a motion was made to reconsider it. The author of that motion authorizes me to say that he will withdraw it. I hope that may be done so that the bill may go to the House. It is the bill (S. No. 1612) to provide for the closing of an alley in square 751, in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, and for the relief of the Little Sisters of the Poor. It came from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there unanimous consent that the motion to reconsider be withdrawn? The Chair hears no objection, and it is withdrawn.

Mr. MAXEY. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at six o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

SENATE.

MONDAY, July 31, 1882.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last, when, on motion of Mr. HALE and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of citizens of Ohio, praying for the passage of the bill giving to crippled soldiers a pension of $40 per month; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LOGAN presented a petition of Olney Post No. 92, Department of Illinois, Grand Army of the Republic, praying for the passage of the bill granting a pension of $40 a month to soldiers who have lost a limb or suffered an equivalent disability thereto in the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

COUNTERFEITING OF FOREIGN NOTES, ETC.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. No. 1000) to prevent and punish the counterfeiting within the United States of notes, bonds, or other securities of foreign governments, to report it with sundry amendments. As the bill comes from the committee which considered the original bill, I ask simply that the bill be read as a new draft, and I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read for information.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator does not care about the reading of the original bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. No, as proposed to be amended.

Mr. HOAR. It is reported in a new draft.

The bill as proposed to be amended was read, as follows:

That every person who, within the United States or any Territory thereof, with intent to defraud, falsely makes, alters, forges, or counterfeits any bond, certificate, obligation, or other security, in imitation of, or purporting to be an imitation of, any bond, certificate, obligation, or other security of any foreign government, issued or put forth under the authority of such foreign government, or any treasury note, bill, or promise to pay issued by such foreign government, and intended to circulate as money, either by law, order, or decree of such foreign government, and any person who causes or procures to be so falsely made, altered, forged, or counterfeited, or who knowingly aids or assists in making, altering, forging, or counterfeiting, any such bond, certificate, obligation, or other security, or any such treasury note, bill, or promise to pay intended as aforesaid to circulate as money, shall, upon conviction thereof in any circuit or district court of the United States, be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, and imprisonment at hard labor not more than five years.

SEC. 2. That every person who knowingly, and with intent to defraud, utters, passes, or puts off, in payment or negotiation, within the United States or any Territory thereof, any such false, forged, or counterfeit bond, certificate, obligation, security, treasury note, bill, or promise to pay, as mentioned in the first section of this act, whether the same was made, altered, forged, or counterfeited within the United States or not, shall, upon conviction as aforesaid, be punished by a fine of not more than $3,000, and imprisoned at hard labor not more than three years.

SEC. 3. That every person who shall, with intent to defraud, falsely, within the United States or any Territory thereof, make, alter, forge, or counterfeit, or shall cause or procure to be so made, altered, forged, or counterfeited, or shall knowingly aid and assist in the false making, altering, forging, or counterfeiting, of any bank note or bill issued by a bank or other corporation of any foreign country, and intended by the law or usage of such foreign country to circulate as money, such bank or corporation being authorized by the laws of such country, shall, upon conviction in any circuit or district court of the United States, be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,000, and by imprisonment at hard labor not more than two years.

SEC. 4. That every person who shall, within the United States or any Territory thereof, utter, pass, put off, or tender in payment, with intent to defraud, any such false, forged, altered, or counterfeited bank note or bill, as mentioned in the preceding section, knowing the same to be so false, forged, altered, and counterfeited, whether the same was made, altered, forged, and counterfeited within the United States or not, shall, upon conviction as aforesaid, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, and by imprisonment at hard labor not more than one year.

SEC. 5. Every person who, within the United States or any Territory thereof, shall have in his possession any such false, forged, or counterfeit bond, certificate, obligation, security, treasury note, bill, promise to pay, bank note or bill issued by a bank or other corporation of any foreign country, with intent to utter, pass, or put off the same, or to deliver the same to any other person with intent that the same may thereafter be uttered, passed, or put off as true, or who shall knowingly deliver the same to any other person with such intent, shall, upon conviction as aforesaid, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 and by imprisonment at hard labor not more than one year.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendments of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FEES AND PRACTICE IN EXTRADITION CASES.

Mr. HOAR. I am further instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the House amendment to the bill (S. No. 979) regulating fees and the practice in extradition cases, to recommend concurrence in the amendment, which is the addition of a section. I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the House of Representatives will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the amendment of the House of Representatives, which was to add the following additional sections to the bill:

SEC. 5. That in all cases where any depositions, warrants, or other papers or copies thereof shall be offered in evidence upon the hearing of any extradition case under title 66 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, such depositions, warrants, and other papers, or the copies thereof, shall be received and admitted as evidence on such hearing for all the purposes of such hearing, if they shall be properly and legally authenticated so as to entitle them to be received for similar purposes by the tribunals of the foreign country from which the accused party shall have escaped; and the certificate of the principal diplomatic or consular officer of the United States resident in such foreign country shall be proof that any deposition, warrant, or other paper or copies thereof so offered are authenticated in the manner required by this act.

SEC. 6. The act approved June 19, 1876, entitled "An act to amend section 5271 of the Revised Statutes of the United States," and so much of said section 5271 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as is inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was concurred in.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of John C. Robinson, of New York, concerning his title to a tract of land in Arizona, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1911) granting a pension to Theresa Crosby Watson, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REVISED STATUTES FOR INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 269) providing for additional copies of the Revised Statutes for the use of the Interior Department, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration. It is identical with a resolution which was passed by the Senate. This comes to us from the House.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It directs the Secretary of State to deliver to the Secretary of the Interior, for the use of the Department of the Interior and its subordinate bureaus and offices, 100 copies of the second edition of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FIRST COMPTROLLER'S DECISIONS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 122) requiring the Public Printer to publish certain decisions of the First Comptroller of the Treasury Department, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It requires the Public Printer to print not more than one volume each year of the decisions and opinions of the First Comptroller of the Treasury Department, with such explanatory matter as he may furnish, and to furnish for the use of each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress 10 copies thereof, to the Comptroller 2,000 copies, and for distribution in the manner provided in section 7 of the act of June 20, 1874, (18 Statutes at Large, page 113,) providing for the publication of the statutes, one-half the number therein mentioned.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 220) to furnish the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to each State and Territorial library, to report it with an amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was, at the end of the joint resolution to insert, "and the Public Printer is required to print 50 additional copies of the same to meet the requirements of this joint resolution;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to forward, free of charge, to the State and Territorial libraries of each State and Territory having or that shall hereafter have and maintain a State and Territorial library, 1 bound copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of each session of Congress or special session of the Senate, beginning with the Forty-seventh Congress; and the Public Printer is required to print 50 additional copies of the same to meet the requirements of this joint resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. How much will be the cost?

Mr. ANTHONY. It will cost $350 a session, on the average.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is all right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. The bill (S. No. 1845) to authorize the Postmaster-General to extend the mail service in certain cases passed the House with amendments, and on being returned to the Senate was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. That committee have had the bill under consideration, and report it back recommending concurrence in the House amendments. I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. MORGAN. If our agreement made on Saturday is going to amount to anything, we had better stand by it, which was that the naval appropriation bill should be taken up immediately on the reading of the Journal.

Mr. HALE. I feel constrained, as that suggestion is made, by the understanding on Saturday night to ask that the naval appropriation bill be taken up now. That was part of the agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine says that by unanimous agreement on Saturday evening the naval appropriation bill was to be taken up immediately after the reading of the Journal to-day.

Mr. ANTHONY. It was unanimously agreed that the Senator from Maine might ask to take up the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. When the agreement was reached that the debate should proceed to-day under the five-minute rule, and at three o'clock a vote should be taken upon the amendments then pending and those afterward offered upon the bill without further debate, I stated that I would call the bill up on Monday morning directly after the reading of the Journal; and in accordance with the intimation I now ask that the bill be taken up.

Mr. FERRY. Was it the understanding that the morning business should be displaced by the appropriation bill? I have morning business to present.

Mr. HARRIS. I supposed there would be unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the appropriation bill; but I wanted to ask the unanimous consent of the Senator from Maine, the Senator from Alabama, and the Senate to consider a little bill of very great importance to a few persons, with the pledge that if it consume five minutes I will withdraw the request. I should be glad to have the consent of the Senate to consider that bill this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado has just reported back an amendment of the House to a Senate bill in which he desires concurrence. The Senator from Michigan says he has morning business to present. The question is, Will the Senate dispense with further morning business?

Mr. MORGAN. I merely call attention to the fact, because this important naval appropriation is likely to be cut off pretty early, and to take any more time with morning business there will not be time enough for the discussion of the naval bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will inform the Senators that it will probably not take more than ten minutes to conclude the morning business.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. This is the unanimous report of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and I ask merely that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HALE. I wished to put myself right in regard to the agreement made Saturday night after the intimation made.

Mr. HOAR. Did the Chair announce the conclusion of morning business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He did not.

Mr. HOAR. Nothing else can be done till then except by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Of course not.

Mr. HALE. I have made the request to take up the naval appropriation bill, and as soon as it is possible I shall move to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks concurrence in the amendments of the House of Representatives. The amendments will be read.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were, in lines 5, 6, and 7, to strike out "that the consent of the contractor shall be previously obtained to such extension, and;" in line 7, to strike out "contract" and insert in lieu thereof "service;" in line 9, to strike out "it" and insert in lieu thereof "the contract;" and at the end of the bill add:

SEC. 2. Whenever a contractor for postal service fails to commence proper service under the contract, or having commenced service fails to continue in the proper performance thereof, the Postmaster-General may employ temporary service on the route at a rate of pay per annum not to exceed the amount of the bond required to accompany proposals for service on such route, as specified in the advertisement of the route, or at not exceeding pro rata of such bond; in cases where service shall have been ordered to be increased, reduced, curtailed, or changed subsequent to the execution of contract, the cost of such temporary service to be charged to the contractor, and to continue until the contractor commences or resumes the proper performance of service, or until the route can be relet as now provided by law and service commenced under the new award of contract; all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act being hereby repealed.

Amend the title by adding "and for other purposes."

The amendments were concurred in.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2170) for the relief of Captain H. D. Patton, late a quartermaster in the United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ANTHONY asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 99) allowing the widow of George P. Marsh, late minister to Italy, one-half year's salary; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

ADDITIONAL PENSIONS.

Mr. FERRY submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be directed to report on Senate bill No. 1358, to grant additional pensions to those who have lost an arm or a leg in the service of the United States.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. FERRY. Mr. President, on the 2d day of March it was my pleasure to introduce a bill for the relief of a class of disabled soldiers of the Union army. It grants them additional pensions so as to provide for a monthly pay of $50 to each soldier of the first class; $40 to each of the second class; and $30 to each of the third and fourth classes. The bill is short and simple. It makes the first class to consist of the men who were so disabled that no relief can come to them by artificial means. The second class to consist of those who are able to wear artificial limbs; and the third and fourth classes of those who by paralysis or other disability from exposures during the war, have sustained the total loss of use of arm or leg. Men who have suffered mutilation in such forms as render it impossible for art to supply their loss are, far more than others, clearly incapacitated for any kind of ordinary labor. Many of them bearing about in their persons a burden of pain and distress which is gradually but surely undermining their constitutions and must at no distant day end life itself. To these men the bill proposes to pay the sum of $50 per month as long as they survive.

Men have suffered from wounds and amputation in such forms that while they are seriously disabled they are yet able to wear artificial limbs so improved as to permit the use of the natural functions in overcoming disability, while adding to the comfort and appearance of the sufferers. To such men the bill proposes to pay the sum of $40 per month during life time.

There are men who, though not mutilated by amputation, have still lost the entire use of arm or leg as the consequence of exposure in the service of the country. To them this bill proposes to pay the sum of $30 per month during life. The bill does not undertake to discriminate more in detail as to the severity of injury in each individual case, nor as to the ratio of pay which such particular scrutiny would demand, since for obvious reasons such legislative particularity would be impracticable. Neither does it specify the class and line of proofs necessary for the claimant to furnish, because these are matters of regulation belonging more properly to the Pension Office of the Government, to which all claimants under this bill, should it become law, would of necessity be referred for classification of their respective classes. As nearly as can be ascertained from existing records in the Departments the number of the first class could not probably exceed 1,300 men; of the second class it could not be more than 4,300; and of the third class not over 5,300. In this connection I submit the following letter from the Commissioner of Pensions, which covers this ground, giving the number of claims and the aggregate amount covered by the bill:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE.

Washington, D. C., July 14, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 12th instant, requesting the number of pensioners referred to in Senate bill No. 1358 and the probable annual cost if such bill should become a law, and in reply to state as follows:

The bill proposes to increase certain pensioners on account of loss of limbs to the rates of $30, $40, and $50 per month, determined by the surgical point of amputation.

The following are believed to be the proportions of the classes referred to and the annual value of the increase of pensions over their present value:

| FIRST CLASS. | |
|---|-------------|
| Number of amputations at and near shoulder..... | 750 |
| Number of amputations at and near hip..... | 550 |
| To be increased to $50 per month..... | |
| SECOND CLASS. | |
| Number of amputations of humerus..... | 2,200 |
| Number of amputations of thigh..... | 2,100 |
| To be increased to $40 per month..... | |
| THIRD CLASS. | |
| Number of amputations of forearm..... | 1,700 |
| Number of amputations of leg..... | 2,500 |
| To be increased to $30 per month..... | |
| FOURTH CLASS. | |
| All who have lost the use of hand, foot, arm, or leg..... | 1,000 |
| To be increased to $30 per month..... | |
| The annual increase in value would be as follows: | |
| First class at $50 per month..... | $405,000 |
| Second class at $40 per month..... | 825,000 |
| Third class at $30 per month..... | 604,000 |
| Fourth class at $30 per month..... | 144,000 |
| Total increase..... | $1,980,000 |

I am, sir, very respectfully,

W. W. DUDLEY,
Commissioner of Pensions.

Hon. T. W. FERRY, United States Senate.

Taking these figures as a basis the added burden which this bill would lay on the Treasury could not be regarded as extravagant or unwise. It has been the policy of the Government from its foundation to pension soldiers, their widows and children. It is but a fitting recognition of the services of those who have periled life and limb in the country's defense. The records of the Pension Office will show that after all our wars the nation's gratitude to its soldiers has been generously expressed. It may not be perhaps that in all cases or even in a majority of cases of the rank and file full justice has been done, for a moment's consideration assures how poorly the money value of a pension supplies the health and vigor of a mutilated condition; beside this, following an expensive war, the national Treasury is subject to extraordinary drafts which are likely to drain it, and the only feasible remedy for which is increased taxation of the people. It is the duty of the Government to see that all necessary burdens are equally distributed, and to study rigid economy as well as to cut off or defer all appropriations from the Treasury which can safely be done and meet current indispensable demands; otherwise the resources of the nation must seriously be taxed and its credit greatly impaired. More than once it has happened in our history when the paper of the nation has suffered damaging depreciation. Then no class of our citizens has felt the consequent stringency more keenly than the soldiers of the nation, while none have borne the loss and pressure with more uncomplaining and heroic fortitude.

The experience of the late war for the Union and of the subsequent eventful years of reconstruction and the resumption of specie payment have been in many respects unparalleled in the history of nations. The vast scale of operations involving measureless difficulties in every department of Government taxed its ability and integrity to the fullest extent, so that, emerging from the effects of the war, much has necessarily remained undone which both justice and gratitude prompted from the outstart, but which necessity postponed. Prominent in this delay stands the imperative duty of justly providing for those who spared not flesh and blood to preserve and perpetuate an undivided Republic. It is with deep regret that earlier action on this bill has not been taken. Every generous mind must lament the necessity which in the first years of the war caused so many of our brave men to perish without even the simple return which this bill proposes, and every year since they have been dropping into the grave unrelieved by this recompense which has so long been withheld. The numbers for whom the bill provides have thus been rapidly diminishing year by year, while the burdens of infirmity and age are bearing heavier on those who still survive.

The time has at length come when an almost incredible prosperity enriches the country. From the wastes and desolations of war our people have developed a vigor and enterprise which exhibit to the nations of the earth a most marvelous spectacle of wealth. Abundance and success are smiling on every hand. The public Treasury is pléthoric with a current surplus of $150,000,000, and we are now considering measures for reducing this enormous revenue by lessening the burdens of taxation upon the people. While this desirable decrease and relief claim our attention, what more favorable hour can we ask for providing for those who heroically sacrificed to preserve intact our munificent domain, the sovereignty of our flag, the unity of the nation, and the glory of a free people? Are not these men worthy of this boon which in this day of our prosperity and power we are amply able to bestow? Surely they have done their part to advance the American people to the highest point of financial credit in the estimation of the powers of the world, and to render more proud and illustrious the fame of the Republic. Aye, they paid their quota, not in silver and gold, but in the priceless currency of flesh and blood. From the smoking battle fields which have made the land historic they have returned maimed and maimed, battered and shattered, patiently, bravely suffering in silence the pains and penalties of that great encounter from which death alone can release them.

We cannot know the numberless conditions that serve to aggregate rather than diminish their sense of loss, decrepitude, and dependence. In the complex relations of society they may be thrown upon the protection of those who take but little care, or who have even less ability to look after them, or, crippled as they are, they may still be the only props on which those who are dependent on them can hope to lean for support. In either case the nation owes this debt of honor, to acknowledge which, in part at least, I ask and urge the Committee on Pensions to report at once and the Senate to pass without further delay this important bill. If we but remember the monthly pay the private soldier received, coupled with his more open exposure to the rigors and hardships of military life, contrasted with the better pay of commissioned officers, we find cogent reasons for the passage of the bill proposed, for it will be found that, while some officers may receive the benefit of this measure, the great majority of its beneficiaries will come from the rank and file.

Sir, it is said that States have neither sentiment nor soul. This may be true where rival powers either by diplomacy or arms are struggling for coveted ascendancy, but it ought never to be so when a great, free nation like our own is dealing with men who proved themselves in dire emergency of war the bone and sinew of national strength.

They are our fellow-citizens, who shouldered arms, faced the enemy, and were shattered in the shock of war for our defense.

They were sentimental and patriotic enough in time of country's peril to offer life upon the national altar; to march mid slaughter and death that the Union might be preserved and the sovereignty of the nation maintained. Shall we now in peace, reunited, free, powerful, and prosperous, as resultant from their heroic achievement and legacy, desert them and turn a deaf ear to their righteous deserts? Never, by my voice or vote. I have no sympathy or patience with that incredulous spirit which frowns on all professions of devotion to country and which gravely questions the sincerity of all motives save in the worship of mammon. Never was there a nobler nor more inspiring spectacle, or one which lifted to a grander height of human virtue, loyalty, and honor than that of our citizen soldiery parting from peaceful, happy ties and associations, and as by a common impulse girding on their might to seize rebellion by the throat and to wipe out from the archives of the nation the odious word secession. For the ardor of such a love of country, government, and people, sealed with blood, is it not the least we can do to set apart for them this monthly stipend, not so much as recompense, but as a fitting solace in their day of need?

It requires but little sentiment on our part in putting this measure upon its passage to say by its provisions to these, our maimed, crippled fellow-citizens, "You stood by the country when its peril was great; you were among the foremost to face the enemy in its defense; and now you shall not be forgotten, for out of the abundance of the nation you fought to save you shall receive this token of a people's grateful regard." If it be said that this is not a question of sentiment but one of plain practical fact, then even in this view what are the simple dictates of justice? Is it possible with any amount of gold and silver to discharge the debt we owe the men without whose services and suffering the objects of the war could never have been attained? And should we year by year appropriate millions upon millions of the public money for various purposes and still pass over or neglect these shattered men? Place ourselves in their stead and imagine their thoughts and feelings when reading the proceedings of Congress for even a session and seeing how the public money is paid out. Can it be strange that they pause and ask with suffering body and aching heart, what is all this worth? Doubtless to country much; but to themselves how little with painful remnant left of their once hopeful and buoyant lives.

And, sir, it is a question for us to ask ourselves to-day, what is a government "of the people, by the people, and for the people" worth to any of us if it does not promote our rights and meet the just demands which worthy citizens have upon it? If equity, honor, and gratitude are to be disregarded in the fierce struggle of the strong and weak; if only they who have power are to reap benefits while the comparatively helpless and dependent are to be thrust aside, how can the patriotic sentiment among all classes of our fellow-citizens continue to burn or even be kept alive? Human nature is so constituted that while it is capable of lofty and virtuous aspirations there must be some just relation between them and the incentives which draw them forth. It is likewise impossible to foster hopeful patriotism in the hearts of men who see themselves neglected in a land of boasted privileges like ours, kept such through their very devotion to the Republic in her worst and palmiest days. They have been through perilous times, so disabled for the remnant race of life that it is no wonder that they justly complain that they are jostled aside and forgotten by others unmaimed and vigorous who so richly enjoy the fruits of peril and pain.

Kindred reflections no doubt often occupy the thoughts of many maimed and scarred citizens when noting the prosperity of the country they helped to save. Proud they may be and proud their children have right to be of the heroic part they played, but even such worthy pride cannot always allay the pains which sorely remind them of what they once were and what they have given for the life of country.

Let Senators scan the statistics of their own States and recall the pitiful story of suffering which so many brave men have borne, but which they do not care to parade in the presence of a generation already mostly strangers to the scars of war, a generation rarely mingling with their pleasures a thought of the cost at which such joys have been made possible. While these heroic men suffer in silence their painful reflections, it is for us here in our places to remember and help them now in their day of broken life. It is a duty which the whole country will enjoin, an act which we can no longer with good reason postpone, and a measure of relief which will prove most welcome to men who need it most.

In the duller days of a closing career, when we ourselves, withdrawn from these busy scenes, shall have occasion to look back upon the past and consider the deeds which have most power to gratify, may a vote given to pass this meritorious measure prove not the least among many that will convey real pleasure and genuine satisfaction.

Mr. President, I trust the Committee on Pensions will heed the resolution I have offered and soon favorably report the bill now before them.

Mr. HALE. I want to say that this matter, as I have been notified, would give rise to debate, and I must ask that it lie over until to-morrow morning, in order that we may go on with the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. PLATT. May I have unanimous consent to say about three words for the benefit of the committee? I want to say one thing. The Committee on Pensions, I think, is as hard worked as any committee in this body. Of the written reports which have been presented to the Senate at this session the Committee on Pensions have submitted considerably more than one-half of them. They have worked every moment that they could find to work when the sessions of the Senate did not actually require their attention.

I wish to say here now that the Committee on Pensions have not neglected this subject, but have given it earnest and careful consideration. It is a great subject, and I should be willing at any time, if the Senate was in condition to hear me, to show it in all its bearings. The committee have as yet been unable to come to any agreement upon this bill and kindred bills submitted to them. It has not been from want of earnest and careful consideration; and I assure the Senator from Michigan, as well as the whole Senate, that there is no desire to neglect this matter on the part of the Committee on Pensions. If the resolution is to be pressed to a passage, of course it will come in the nature of a reflection upon the action of the committee, and in that event I shall desire to be heard at length, and I think we can fully sustain our position in the matter.

Mr. FERRY. I ask, to save time, that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Pensions. I have not unnecessarily reflected upon the committee any more than to ask by the resolution, which expresses its own meaning, that the committee report upon the subject. I am asking that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Pensions for their early consideration. I have intended no reflection, but do desire early action on my bill.

Mr. PLATT. I have no objection to the reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to offer an amendment to the resolution, and have it referred.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let the proposed amendment be read.

The amendment was read and referred to the Committee on Pensions, as follows:

Add to the resolution:

And also bill granting a pension of $8 per month to each soldier who served in the Mexican war and was honorably discharged and who now has no other means of support than his manual labor, and also to the widows of such soldiers who are in similar indigent condition.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. HALE. Now I ask to take up the naval appropriation bill. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Until the morning business is finished the naval bill cannot be taken up unless by unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask for the following order:

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. No. 6677) to regulate immigration.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Mr. President—

Mr. INGALLS. Who has offered the resolution for the return of a bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland, [Mr. GORMAN,] who should also make a motion to reconsider.

Mr. INGALLS. Why is that necessary?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I object to the resolution.

Mr. GORMAN. I notice by the RECORD that the bill passed on Saturday in my absence from the Senate, and I desire to have the bill returned for the purpose of having it considered again.

Mr. INGALLS. That cannot be done unless another motion is coupled with it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Of course not. A motion has to be made to request the return of the bill from the House of Representatives—

Mr. INGALLS. But can that be made without a motion to reconsider?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Of course not.

Mr. GORMAN. I make the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Accompanied with that must be a motion to request the House to return the bill.

Mr. HALE. I ask that that lie over.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Let me understand the condition of this matter. I object to it, and move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. INGALLS. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry in connection with this matter, and that is whether the Senator from Maryland is entitled to make a motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Rule 20 provides that—

When a question has once been decided by a vote of the Senate, whether that vote be determined by a majority or by two-thirds of the Senate, any Senator voting on that side which prevailed may enter a motion or move for a reconsideration thereof, at any time on the same day on which the vote was taken, or on either of the next two days of actual session thereafter; and all motions to reconsider shall be decided by a majority of the Senate.

Did the Senator from Maryland vote with the majority?

Mr. COCKRELL. There was no yea-and-nay vote taken on the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. But I understand the Senator from Maryland was not present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Rule 20 further provides that—

When a bill, resolution, report, amendment, order, or message, upon which a vote has been taken, shall have gone out of the possession of the Senate and been communicated to the House of Representatives, the motion to reconsider such vote shall be accompanied by a motion to request the House to return the same to the Senate; which last motion shall be acted upon immediately and determined without debate, and, when determined in the negative, shall be held to be a final disposition of the motion to reconsider.

Mr. HOAR. Is a motion to reconsider entered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; the Senator from Maryland enters a motion to reconsider. The question is, Will the Senate agree to request the House to return the bill?

Mr. INGALLS. The point is made, I understand, that the Senator from Maryland not having been present, he could not have voted with the side that prevailed. The Senator will understand, of course, that I meant no personal allusion in the matter; but it is interesting to know whether, the yeas and nays not having been called, a Senator who was not present may be regarded as having voted with the side that prevailed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator was not here he could not have voted with the majority.

Mr. GORMAN. I say frankly to the Chair that I was not here. I was detained from the Senate by indisposition on Saturday.

Mr. JONAS. I will enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the question recurs on the motion to request the House of Representatives to return the bill.

Mr. HALE. I ask that it lie over to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But it must be decided at once so far as that motion is concerned, not the motion to reconsider, but the motion to request the return of the bill. The Chair read the rule. The second paragraph of Rule 20 provides that—

When a bill, resolution, report, amendment, order, or message, upon which a vote has been taken, shall have gone out of the possession of the Senate and been communicated to the House of Representatives, the motion to reconsider such vote shall be accompanied by a motion to request the House to return the same to the Senate; which last motion shall be acted upon immediately, and determined without debate, and, when determined in the negative, shall be held to be a final disposition of the motion to reconsider.

Mr. HALE. Then let us vote.

Mr. McMILLAN. Let us understand what the nature of the bill is and the effect of the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the bill to regulate immigration, which was passed on Saturday. There were two bills on that subject passed on Saturday.

Mr. GORMAN. I will say to the Chair that it is the bill (H. R. No. 6677) to regulate immigration, imposing a tax on every immigrant of fifty cents.

Mr. HAWLEY. Known as the "head-money bill." That is the best description of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is known as the head-money bill. Will the Senate request the House to return the bill, a motion to reconsider having been made?

Mr. INGALLS. In order that we may vote intelligently on this subject, I should like to know what the bill is which it is proposed to reconsider and recall. Let it be read. Is it the bill which was called up by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] and passed?

Mr. McMILLAN. No; it was called up by the Senator from New York, [Mr. MILLER.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] had the bill in charge.

Mr. GORMAN. I will say in answer to the Senator from Kansas that the bill imposes a tax of fifty cents upon every immigrant arriving in the United States. The bill was passed, as I stated, during my absence, and I desire to have the bill returned to the Senate with a view of offering one or two amendments to it. I think it will operate very harshly upon some parts of the country, and almost exclusively in favor of the port of New York, as the bill now stands.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. The motion must be decided without debate. If debate is allowed on one side it must be debated on the other side. The bill passed the House, and if amended by the Senate at this stage, of course the bill is killed for the session.

Mr. HALE. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not in order until the morning business is concluded. This matter must be disposed of.

Mr. HALE. That is what I am calling for, if the Chair please. I call for the regular order, whatever it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is the consideration of this question.

Mr. HALE. That is what I call for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the Senator from Kansas called for the reading of the bill, and it was necessary to send to the Secretary's office to get a copy of it.

Mr. HALE. If that is the regular order; if that is not in the nature of debate—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is simply to know what the bill is.

Mr. HALE. Then let us have the bill read.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I do not care anything about the reading of the bill. We all understand the bill.

Mr. HALE. The request for the reading is withdrawn, I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate request the House to return the bill?

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 15, noes 26.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate refuses to request the House to return the bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 1120) for the relief of Eugene B. Allen.

The message also announced that the House insisted on its amendments to the bill (S. No. 1255) to provide for the sale of a part of the reservation of the Omaha tribe of Indians in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. D. C. HASKELL of Kansas, Mr. O. L. SPAULDING of Michigan, and Mr. J. K. JONES of Arkansas managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 660) for the relief of Samuel Chase Barney; and

A bill (H. R. No. 5222) to restore the Fort Benton Military reservation to the public domain, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 740) to establish ports of delivery at Kansas City and Saint Joseph, in the State of Missouri;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 209) to authorize the President of the United States to call an international conference to fix on and recommend for universal adoption a common prime meridian to be used in the reckoning of longitude and in the regulation of time throughout the world;

A bill (H. R. No. 4443) to amend sections 3 and 4 of the act of February 21, 1879, to fix the pay of letter-carriers, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6677) to regulate immigration;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 270) for the relief of Sarah J. S. Garnett, widow of Henry H. Garnett, late minister to Liberia;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 274) to continue the provisions of a joint resolution entitled a "joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government;" and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 73) providing for the publication at the Government Printing Office of certain information in aid of the Society of the Red Cross.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If not, the morning hour has closed.

Mr. HALE. I ask for the consideration of the naval bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that bill is before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. Now I ask that the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] which was pending at the time of Saturday's adjournment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that this bill is to be considered until three o'clock, when the vote is to be taken without debate, and that the five-minute rule is to be applied. Does that mean once speaking or twice speaking?

Mr. HALE. Once speaking.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 571, page 24, after the word "the," it is moved to strike out:

Secretary of the Navy shall report the facts to Congress with a statement of the amount which in his opinion should be paid to such person.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

Contractor shall bind himself to discharge the Government from all liability therefor on account of such adoption and use.

So as to read:

And if in such construction any such plan, model, design, or suggestion shall be adopted, for the use of which any citizen not an officer of the Navy would have a just claim for compensation, the contractor shall bind himself to discharge the Government from all liability therefor on account of such adoption and use.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that amendment. It only protects the Government still further.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. On line 35 of section 2, page 36, after the word "Register," I move to insert "and report the same to Congress," and strike out all after the word "Register" down to and inclusive of the word "used" on line 97, page 38. The practical effect of this will be that upon the condemnation of vessels the Secretary of the Navy shall report to Congress, instead of condemning and selling himself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER.]

Mr. HALE. The provisions of the bill as they stand now were very carefully prepared in the House of Representatives on full consultation with the Department and all the committees there, and nothing can be sold unless it is approved and directed by the competent board of naval officers provided for. I am clear in my mind that no abuse would arise under the provision as it stands, and I do not suppose that the Senator from South Carolina is really fearful that any abuse would arise. Still, if it is deemed advisable to postpone this matter in order that there may be a further report made to Congress, as there never has been one before, it will only delay it so much. I should hope that when that report is made everybody then, including the Senator from South Carolina, will see the necessity of selling this old stuff under proper safeguards so as to get it out of the way, disembarass the navy-yards, and have the money all turned into the Treasury. I do not deem it essential that it shall be sold now or till after the report to Congress. That is all I wish to say. The Senate may adopt this amendment or not, as it is not at all essential.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. I have stated substantially what the amendment is, not only this morning but on a previous occasion; I will now restate it briefly. On line 35 of section 2, page 36 of the bill, I move to insert, after the words "Navy Register," the words "and report the same to Congress," and then to strike out all from the word "and," in line 35, down to and including the word "used," at the end of the section on page 38. The practical effect of the amendment is to require the Secretary of the Navy to report such vessels as he may find unfit for use to Congress at its next session.

Mr. HALE. Let me say to the Senator that if I were at the head of this Department, I should prefer, so far as the old ships are concerned, after all the talk there has been about such transactions, to report them to Congress before I sold.

Mr. BUTLER. I agree to that entirely.

Mr. HALE. As to the stores and supplies, I do not think the delay will work as well, and I wish the Senator to exclude them from his amendment, but as to the ships I say that I should prefer, if I were running the Department, to report to Congress first.

Mr. BUTLER. It seems to me so. I agree entirely with the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. Suppose the Senator makes his amendment apply only to ships.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand this amendment does apply only to ships.

Mr. HALE. No; it applies to stores and supplies.

Mr. BUTLER. No; the amendment adopted on Saturday applies to materials and supplies. That has been adopted. This applies simply to vessels.

The great difficulty in the past has been the want of information by Congress as to the number of vessels condemned and sold; and it seems to me to be a great deal better for the Secretary of the Navy, certainly a great deal better for Congress, to have this information, so that Congress shall direct what disposition shall be made.

Mr. HALE. I have no authority to accept the Senator's amendment and cannot accept it; but if it only includes the ships—and I think on examination it only does include ships—I think it is just as well that it should be adopted.

Mr. SHERMAN. Some Senators thought it required the presence in the navy-yards of old junk and old rotten provisions, &c., and their presence to be reported to Congress before they could be sold. I suppose the object is to require Congress to have a list of the vessels proposed to be sold. That is right.

Mr. BUTLER. That is all. It simply refers to the vessels.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAHONEY. I offer from the Committee on Naval Affairs the following amendment, to come in after the word "for," in line 397:

And that the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to ascertain on what terms can be had such additional lands and water-front contiguous to the Norfolk navy-yard as are deemed necessary for the construction of a wet-dock, and such other works as are demanded for the sufficient capacity and efficiency of that yard; and that he report the result of such negotiations to the next session of Congress.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that. It is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I would say to the Senator from Virginia that that amendment is found in the sundry civil bill. If he prefers to have it go on here, it can be struck off there. The Committee on Appropriations reported this exact language as an amendment to the sundry civil bill.

Mr. MAHONEY. I am aware of that fact.

Mr. BLAIR. On page 19 I move the amendment of which I gave notice the other day in the discussion of the point of order, to strike out commencing with the word "provided," in line 456, down to and including the word "material," in line 460.

I explained the reasons that actuated me in raising the point of order. As the clause now stands no ship can be repaired if the cost of repairing is 30 per cent. of the estimated cost of a new ship of the same size and like material. The result of this would be that scarcely any vessel that we now have, and which is available for sea purposes, will be likely to be repaired at all when she comes to require it, and necessarily our available vessels very soon will go out of use entirely. We shall then be left with no navy whatever, unless a new one is constructed. Doubtless we should build a new one; but a navy constructed according to the most recent principles and upon the most approved pattern of naval science as it now exists, would require to accompany it, as serviceable to it, the number of available wooden ships which we now possess; so that in no view whatever, it seems to me, ought we to restrict ourselves with reference to the repair of the vessels which we have, those of them, at all events, which in the judgment of an advisory board such as is called in in cases where the question of the repair of a ship is raised should be held to be necessary, without reference to legislation of the kind which it is proposed here to enact.

Should this amendment commend itself to the views of the Senate, and be adopted, it would be necessary to make a like amendment on the twenty-fifth page in reference to machinery.

Mr. HALE. I can state in a few words just the object of this provision in the bill, which I will read:

Provided, That no part of this sum—

That is, the money appropriated for construction and repair—

shall be applied to the repairs of any wooden ship when the estimated cost of such repairs shall exceed 30 per cent. of the estimated cost of a new ship of the same size and like material.

Remember, Mr. President, that this is a limitation of repairs not to 30 per cent. of what the old ship is worth, but 30 per cent. of the cost of a new ship of the same size and like material, and I believe that the allowance is ample.

The object of this clause is to put an end to the heretofore endless repairs that were put on old ships. The complaint is that we have got no navy, and yet we have appropriated hundreds of millions of dollars—$300,000,000 in the last eight or nine years—and the reason is that the money has mainly gone in repairs; we have built no ships of any account. Now, I believe, and believe firmly, that any ship in the Navy of wood to-day ought not to be allowed to run without repairs to that stage where you need to put upon her more than 30 per cent. of what a new ship would cost.

I have a list here of thirty-seven vessels in the United States Navy that within the last eleven years have had put on in repairs twenty-six million and odd dollars, nearly three-quarters of a million dollars apiece on the average; and I am bound to say that I do not want hereafter the appropriations that are made for the Navy to be expended upon these old ships beyond the limitation that is fixed in the bill. It is a good and wise limitation, and I earnestly hope that the Senate will not strike it out. Depend upon it that any one of these old ships that has 30 per cent. of what a new ship will cost put upon her will be repaired all that she ought to be; and if she is allowed to run beyond that, I would let her go and spend my money in building a new ship.

Mr. HOAR. In view of what the Senator from Maine says, I submit that as under our present practice Congress is in session eight or nine months every year, the Secretary can always get leave in special cases from Congress.

Mr. ROLLINS. The bill now requires that the repairs be 30 per cent.

Mr. HALE. I read the bill. It is 30 per cent. as it came from the House.

Mr. ROLLINS. The amendment of the Committee on Appropriations has been struck out.

Mr. HALE. The amendment inserting 25 per cent. in lieu of 30 per cent. was struck out on the point of order.

Mr. ROLLINS. If there is any proposition to reduce the 30 per cent., I desire to make some remarks on that point.

Mr. HALE. There is no proposition of that kind.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. BLAIR.]

Mr. BLAIR. One word further. I have repeated only a few of the considerations which induced me to make this motion, because I had expressed myself more fully the other day upon the point of order, and if the Senate recollects what I said then there is no occasion for its repetition. I would say this, however, that it is hardly ingenious for the Senator to speak of $300,000,000 of appropriations for the Navy during the last few years as a pertinent fact with reference to the matter of the repairs of such of our old vessels as are efficient.

The last citation which he makes from his own tables is far more pertinent, that on thirty-eight or thirty-nine vessels, which are all we have that are good for anything and which will ever come to repair at all, we have expended during that period of time about $26,000,000. So that the other $274,000,000 of the $300,000,000 has gone undoubtedly for the support of the personnel of the Navy and for the construction of other vessels not now included among those which are efficient in the service. Nearly every ship we have afloat to-day is a wooden vessel.

Mr. HALE. This includes the whole efficient list.

Mr. BLAIR. I understand it includes the efficient list. I think the $26,000,000 also includes extensive repairs, and possibly large sums expended on vessels that never have been afloat at all; I cannot say in regard to that; but nevertheless of the $300,000,000 only $26,000,000 have been put upon ships that are good for anything, and those ships are of course wooden ships, which it is now proposed shall never be repaired when it will cost 30 per cent. of the cost of new ones to repair them. We have no navy but these thirty-eight ships. They are coming in every day, and need more and more repairs. We have no iron ships. We have made no provision of any consequence for the construction of an iron navy. We put but a few hundred thousand dollars, or at most a million and a half, which can possibly be available under this appropriation bill for the commencement of that new navy. No one expects we shall get a new navy in less than four or five years at least, and in its construction we must at least expend the $29,000,000 estimated in the report of the House Committee on Naval Affairs. That amount of money is to go into this new iron navy, and that necessity is of course coming home to us day by day; in the case of war it will be imminent, exacting, pressing; but we do not expect war at present, and we suppose we are to have these two, three, four, or five, or it may be eight to ten years in which to construct this new navy and expend this $29,000,000 or $30,000,000.

If we are to make a law here that no wooden vessel shall be repaired at all when it costs over 30 per cent. of the estimated cost of a new one, as I am informed by men thoroughly acquainted with the Navy, who have been constructors for many years in the Navy—and I do not refer to any existing officers, but to men who have been constructors and who are not interested now in our present or future legislation—we shall exclude from repair a very large proportion of our best ships. They never will be repaired at all.

Now, sir, I think that this is an artfully drawn provision to extirpate what navy we have, and to hurry upon us the necessity of an iron navy; and in connection with the provisions of this bill for dismantling our navy-yards, for scattering our skilled labor, and for destroying our machinery and for the destruction of ships, the result will be that the Government will be put in the control of outside contractors, who will hold us, as I said the other day, by the throat in the matter of prices in the reproduction of the Navy.

Mr. BAYARD. I will suggest to the Senator from Maine in support of his views that the necessity of limiting the per cent. expended upon ships for repairs grows out of the fact that no contract can definitely be made for repairs; and therefore no definition of the amount to be expended can be arrived at. It is wholly guess-work, and it is necessary therefore that there should be some rule which shall impose a limit. For the reason I have stated it is impossible to know the extent of required repairs, and a contract cannot be made for their execution with any certainty.

Mr. HALE. And it is believed that this is a very liberal limit. Thirty per cent. of what a new ship would cost would be 50 or 60 per cent. of the value of one of these old ships. If anything, this limit ought to be reduced; but our amendment on that point has been ruled out, and I am obliged to take it as it is. It is just as the Senator from Delaware says, there needs to be this limitation and we ought to make it liberal, and it is very liberal.

Mr. BAYARD. Another fact ought to be stated. Iron is now or soon will be the only material in naval ships, rendering repairs on wooden vessels less and less necessary.

Mr. BLAIR. But the Senator does not observe that this provision of the bill does not apply to contracts, for this provision is in reference to work that is done at our navy-yards, and our yards never enter into any contract with the Government with reference to the repairing of ships. Upon the suggestion that the yards themselves are not even to repair the existing navy that is afloat—

Mr. HALE. That is not limited at all.

Mr. BLAIR. It contemplates carrying the repairing even into the hands of outside parties.

Mr. HALE. There is nothing of that kind.

Mr. BLAIR. What else does it mean?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. We have had one change in our Navy already, which has been brought about by the application of steam to vessels in the public service, and it became necessary to change their entire structure from sailing-vessels to steamships, and I do not remember that anything of this kind became necessary when that change was effected. This is entirely a new provision. The old sailing-ships of the Navy commenced with the Republic and continued down until a very late period. The Constitution, built in 1790, has been effective till almost within a recent period; and no such power before was ever attempted to be given to any officer of the Navy under which he might permit every valuable ship in the public service to deteriorate until it required this amount of repairing and then let her go by the board.

Why is this necessary at all? If you are going to build up a new iron-clad navy, do it, and I shall at all times be ready to vote for a proposition in that direction; but I am not willing to give this discretionary power to any man who will be able to say, "I will not repair a ship until she requires 30 per cent. of the cost of a new ship to do it," and then let every available ship in the Navy go out of commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. BLAIR.]

Mr. HOAR. Before this amendment striking out this clause is voted upon it is proper to perfect it. There was added by unanimous consent of the Senate a provision authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to provide for bringing home all ships damaged in foreign waters. I desire to insert in the amendment, to which there can be no objection, after the words "foreign waters," the words "or on the high seas." It has been suggested by a Senator that "foreign waters" include only waters within the jurisdiction of foreign countries.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That modification will be made if there be no objection. The Chair hears no objection, and that modification will be made. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. BLAIR.]

Mr. BLAIR called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. ROLLINS. If the yeas and nays are to be taken, I desire to say a few words in reference to this amendment.

It has occurred to me that this iron-clad rule with reference to the repairs of wooden vessels in the Navy may work disastrously. For that reason I am inclined to vote against it. If there be any limit it certainly should not be below that now in the bill, 30 per cent.; but I doubt very much whether that is wise, and for this reason: when a wooden vessel is to be repaired a board of survey is ordered upon her; they make as careful an examination as they can, and they may discover at the first examination that a sum less than 30 per cent. of the value of a vessel of that size would be sufficient to repair the ship; and they commence to repair her.

After a more thorough investigation of the matter they discover that a larger sum of money will be necessary. It will then be necessary, under the rules and regulations of the Navy Department, for a new survey to be ordered, and if the proper officers on making this new survey should discover after considerable money may have been expended in preliminary work that 30 per cent. would not be sufficient, then that vessel could not be repaired. It may require 35 per cent. of the cost of a new ship. Then all the money that had been expended up to that time would be wasted, and the vessel itself would be lost to the Government.

For these reasons, and many others which might be stated but that I do not wish at this time to delay the Senate, I doubt very much whether any cast-iron rule in this matter will be found to work for the advantage of the Government in the repair of these old ships.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WALKER, (when Mr. GARLAND's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. GARLAND] is paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

Mr. VANCE, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MITCHELL.] Not knowing how he would vote I withhold my vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FERRY. I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 10, nays 38; as follows:

YEAS—10.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLAIR. I now move, on the twenty-fifth page, to strike out the corresponding provision with reference to the machinery on board wooden ships, which it is proposed shall not be repaired when it will cost 30 per cent. of the cost of new machinery of the same character and power; that is to say, if the old machinery is not worth seventy cents on the dollar it will be thrown away. Necessarily it comes to that unless it can be sold under other provisions of this bill. The machinery stands upon a somewhat different ground from the vessel itself.

Mr. HALE. It is a stronger case than that of the vessel.

Mr. BLAIR. There may be a market for machinery, so that it would pay to repair it, aside from the naval vessels, and a better opportunity for the Government to save money by comparatively slight repairs upon the machinery on board these thirty-eight ships that now constitute the Navy than she could make by the repair of the vessels themselves.

I make the same motion in reference to the machinery, which is to strike out all after the word "dollars," including the word "provided," in line 590, on page 25, down to and including the word "power," in line 594; as follows:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be applied to the repair of engines and machinery of wooden ships where the estimated cost of such repair shall exceed 25 per cent. of the estimated cost of new engines and machinery of the same character and power.

Mr. HALE. Instead of replying I call for a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. BLAIR.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. VANCE. I move to amend, on page 20, line 466, by inserting after the word "manufacture" the words:

Provided, It can be obtained as cheap as the foreign article, less the tariff duty.

The provision of the bill is that these cruisers shall be built out of domestic steel, a provision inserted in the interest of the manufacturers; and inasmuch as it is already provided that private individuals for the purpose of ship-building may import material of iron, copper, spike-nails, &c., and composition metal, in bond, and when the Secretary is satisfied that the material has been used in the building of ships no duty shall be paid upon it, I think that the Government is entitled to the same privilege in its own behalf as it confers upon private citizens; and I see no use in the Government of the United States paying a large bonus to the manufacturers of steel for the purpose of building ships for the protection of the country and the commerce of the country. I move to insert those words.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is made on the amendment. This is similar to other amendments.

Mr. VANCE. What is the point of order? I should be glad to have it stated.

Mr. HALE. It changes existing law; it is new legislation.

Mr. VANCE. Is there any existing law that the United States Government shall build ships out of American steel only?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This makes a law on the subject, and therefore the amendment is general legislation.

Mr. VANCE. I then modify it if the Chair rules in favor of the point of order—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so rules.

Mr. VANCE. Then I move to strike out the words "of domestic manufacture."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is in order.

Mr. HALE. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion. I shall be very glad to get a vote without a word of debate, because everybody will understand the issue, and let us have it settled by a yeas-and-nays vote.

Mr. VANCE. That suits me, sir.

Mr. HALE. Let the words that the Senator from North Carolina moves to strike out be read in connection with the text of the bill, so that we may see precisely what the amendment is.

The ACTING SECRETARY. On page 20, line 466, after the word "steel," it is proposed to strike out the words "of domestic manufacture;" so that the clause will read:

Any portion of said sum not required for the purposes aforesaid may be applied toward the construction of two steam cruising vessels of war, which are hereby authorized, at a total cost, when fully completed, not to exceed the amounts estimated by the late naval advisory board for such vessels, the same to be constructed of steel, having as near as may be a tensile strength of not less than 60,000 pounds to the square inch.

Mr. HALE. That is sufficient. Now let us have the vote.

The Acting Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERRY, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY.] I should vote "nay," if he were here.

Mr. PENDLETON, (when his name was called.) I am paired this morning with the Senator from New York, [Mr. LAPHAM.] I do not know how he would vote on this question, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. VANCE, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MITCHELL.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. I am paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. FAIR.]

Mr. SAWYER. I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. CAMDEN.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 30; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ROLLINS. I offer an amendment from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to come in at the end of line 578, on the twenty-fourth page. The same provision was contained in a bill reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the committee has authorized me to move it as an amendment to this bill. I think the Committee on Appropriations will not object to it. It is:

The sum of $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for the manufacture or purchase of the necessary tools or plant for the construction of iron or steel vessels and their armament in the appropriate navy-yards.

I think the Committee on Appropriations will not object to this amendment, as it simply provides that the navy-yards shall have some facilities for the construction of iron and steel vessels.

Mr. COCKRELL. I supposed the Senator in charge of the bill would make the point of order on this. If he does not, I make the point of order.

Mr. ROLLINS. What is the point of order?

Mr. ALLISON. It increases the appropriations and inserts a new item.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is general legislation on an appropriation bill, making a new law on the subject. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. ROLLINS. Permit me, with all respect to the Chair, to ask the Chair what in the world the Senate can do on this appropriation bill? Here is a bill for the reorganization of the Navy and making appropriations to support the Navy—

Mr. COCKRELL. The question is not debatable.

Mr. ROLLINS. The Senator from Missouri cannot get me off my feet in that way.

Mr. COCKRELL. I rise to a point of order, that the Senator from New Hampshire is not in order in debating this proposition.

Mr. ROLLINS. The Senator from New Hampshire is entirely in order to speak upon this bill which is before the Senate. He would like to know how the Senator from Missouri can get him off his feet. Somebody else has rights here besides the Committee on Appropriations, although I am led to believe that in their estimation no one else has any rights.

Mr. President, here is a bill for the reorganization of the Navy, for changing the grades, for doing almost everything in connection with the Navy; and a simple amendment to furnish tools and machinery to the navy-yards is ruled out of order when it is simply a proposition looking to placing our navy-yards in a position where they may at least attempt to do something in the way of the reconstruction of the Navy. We simply place ourselves at the mercy of the contractors of this country; and the object in defeating this amendment, I suppose, is to place the Government of the United States, to place its navy-yards at the mercy of the contractors, of the few men who have the plant, of the few men who have the tools ready to build iron and steel ships. The competition will be very small indeed if nothing is done to place our navy-yards in a position where they may do something in that direction. That is all I have to say at this time.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend, after line 397, by inserting the following, to which I understand there is no objection on the part of the committee. It is an amendment which properly provides for a report of a board of naval officers in regard to the value for the purposes of defense and manufacture of existing navy-yards—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment already in the bill at that point. The Secretary will read it, and then the Senator from Massachusetts will see whether his amendment ought to come in there.

Mr. HOAR. Let it come after that.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to add the following at the end of the amendment inserted after line 397:

That the Secretary of the Navy shall appoint a commission, to consist of three persons, one of whom shall be appointed from the line officers and one from the staff officers of the Navy and one from civil life, which commission shall consider and report to the next session of Congress upon the question whether it is advisable to sell any of the navy-yards, and, if so, which; and as to each of said yards said commission shall report as to its cost, its area, its present value, including in separate items the value of the land, structures, machinery, and other personal property; the depth of water at the yard, and whether it remains and will remain at such depth, or will require expense to keep open its water communication; its condition as to being in working order or otherwise; the condition and value of its "plant" in the different departments; its advantages and disadvantages as a naval station and for the construction of vessels; its probable value for other purposes in case the yard is discontinued; whether there is any demand for the yard for mercantile or other purposes; whether it can probably be sold, and at what price, in case of discontinuance; the annual cost during each of the past fifteen years of maintaining it; the value of what it has produced during each of said years, so far as it can be ascertained; its value or necessity for purposes of defense on that part of the coast where it is situated, or in general, and also as regards any city in its vicinity; and any other facts which such commission may deem useful or advisable to report in regard to this question.

Mr. HALE. As I understand it, this is offered, not to strike out the provisions in the bill, but is simply additional matter.

Mr. HOAR. That is all.

Mr. HALE. I am very glad, so far as I am concerned, to say that I fully concur in the amendment, because it is in the same direction that the bill goes, only a little further.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from Massachusetts explain briefly what his amendment is?

Mr. HOAR. There is a great deal of enumeration in the amendment, but all the facts to be reported, with one or two exceptions, will appear readily from the books of different navy-yards or their reports here. The amendment authorizes a board, to be composed of two naval officers and one civilian, to report the facts bearing on the question of the value of the various navy-yards as places of manufacture, and especially, what I feel more interested in, their value for defensive purposes to the cities near which they may be situated or to the country generally.

I should like to say in regard to the Charlestown navy-yard that when that navy-yard was built its site was selected by a board of the most distinguished officers in our service, about the year 1801, who were of opinion that it was of great value to the defense of the port of Boston, and there are very distinguished naval officers who now think that that yard, which is nine miles from the sea by the channel, is of great value as a defense to that city, and also that it is of great value to the defense of New York if that should be the subject of a naval attack, being something in the nature of a fortification in the rear of a besieging army before a particular fort. On the other hand, there are very many eminent authorities, indeed one or two that I have conversed with within two or three days, whose names I am not at liberty to mention, who say it is not worth anything for defense, and is rather an attraction to a hostile attempt from any source against us.

What I desire is, before we commit ourselves to any policy about it, to have the report of a competent naval board laid before Congress with reference to these facts.

Mr. BAYARD. I would suggest to the honorable Senator from Massachusetts that his amendment, which I incline to favor, would be well to be inserted on page 16 in lieu of the proviso that the Secretary of the Navy shall have power to transfer materials from one navy-yard to another, in other words to close all the navy-yards but two.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I did not wish in offering this amendment to encounter either of the two hostile conflicting views which have manifested themselves in the Senate, either the Committee on Appropriations, the House, or other Senators. I wanted it simply to come in by itself, not touching on any of these other points, but simply proposing to obtain this information.

Mr. BAYARD. If the Senator will glance at the text of this bill on page 16 he will find an appropriation of $18,953.12 made for the civil establishment at navy-yards and stations, and after that follows a proviso—

That if the Secretary of the Navy shall find that work at all the navy-yards now maintained cannot be carried on with advantage to the service and economy to the Government, he shall suspend work at those yards where he finds it can best be dispensed with, and shall close such yards and transfer all perishable stores and property therefrom to other yards for use therein.

I had intended to move and shall still move to strike out the whole of that proviso, and if it goes out it seems to me that is precisely the place at which the Senator's amendment should come in. He proposes to do what I think is very wise, to cause information to be given to Congress by the Secretary of the Navy at the next session of the condition of the navy-yards, of the amount of work done there, of their availability, their defensibility, and the other features which I entirely approve; and therefore, without desiring in the slightest to interfere with the Senator's control of his own amendment, it struck me as being pertinent just now to say that it would answer admirably to replace that proviso, which I insist ought not to be put in the bill, because no such power has ever been given to a Secretary of the Navy before as to place the existence and use of the navy-yards of the country entirely at his control.

I submit to the Senator that it would be a good thing to couple the amendment striking out this proviso with the amendment that he proposes.

Mr. HOAR. As no Senator, whatever his view of the proposition stated by the Senator from Delaware, objects to my amendment as a matter by itself, why not adopt it? I think it would come in more properly at the end of all these provisions about the navy-yards, where I have offered it, and then the Senator can test the sense of the Senate on striking out the matter to which he objects separately.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.]

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he designs in any way to limit or qualify the present provisions of the bill?

Mr. HOAR. Not in the least. I showed this amendment to the Senator having the bill in charge before offering it.

Mr. PLUMB. It stands alone by itself.

Mr. HOAR. Entirely alone.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. As this amendment has been adopted, I do not wish to shine in borrowed plumes, and I should like leave to say that it was drawn by the faithful and industrious Representative of the Charlestown district in the other House, and I offered it at his request.

Mr. BAYARD. I move to strike out on page 16 after the word "cents" in line 367 the proviso running to line 397 on page 17.

The Senate has just adopted the amendment of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts providing for a commission to be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy to report upon the advisability of saving the navy-yards and to return a description of their locality and structure, and the various property connected with them, the condition and value thereof, the depth of water, &c. That amendment having been adopted renders the present proviso, which I desire now to have stricken out, unnecessary and inconsistent. If a commission is to be appointed to make report upon the navy-yards as to their condition, locality, plant, machinery, &c., then there is gross inconsistency in authorizing the Secretary of the Navy in his sole discretion to suspend work and transfer all materials and property to other yards and report the facts and reasons for his action to the subsequent session of Congress. And our committee proposed to add:

Provided, That not less than two navy-yards shall be maintained upon the Atlantic and Gulf coast, one north and one south of the Potomac River, and one upon the Pacific coast.

Further he has discretion to maintain the yard at Washington as a manufacturing yard.

I desire to say that this is the longest step in respect to a single individual's discretion that ever has been made to my knowledge in the administration of the Navy, and it is not improper to state that this is given to a Secretary who has just entered office, who is without the personal knowledge of the duties of his place that can only be obtained by experience. Here, before he is warm in his seat, the proposition is made that he shall take the whole navy-yard system of the United States and close up the yards at will, transfer the material, transfer the plant, and do as he pleases by suspending the work at any of them.

Mr. President, this is not reformation and this is not wise administration. Every one recognizes now that our legislation is tentative; it is experimental; and it is best that these experiments should proceed slowly. This country not only has suffered fearfully in its Treasury by the maladministration of the funds of the Navy, by the expenditure of the fearful sums which have been mentioned during this debate, but the consequence has been constantly a loss to the Navy; and there has been a growing feeling in the public mind of insecurity in respect of this department of our public service. Not only are we defenseless against a foreign foe but that absolute defenselessness has been reached through an amount of expenditure that is almost incredible. Now I say that it is time, if we are to move in the way of reformation, that we at least understand each step that we take.

I move, sir, that this proviso be stricken out and that the law stand where it has always stood on this subject. There is discretion and there must be, and that discretion can be exercised under the provisions of existing law. But there is no necessity for this legislation to allow the Secretary of the Navy to concentrate all the force at any navy-yard or at any two if he sees fit, and on just such occasions as he sees fit. The country knows well and the Senate knows well what has been the use made of navy-yards, at Norfolk, at Mare Island, at Charlestown, at Philadelphia, and elsewhere. They know when the labor has been begun, and when men have been brought in by the thousand to work, and when they have been discharged.

I say then that this new legislation, which is exceptionable under our rules, ought not to find its place in a bill like this which is intended as a cautious measure of reformation. I move that the proviso be stricken from the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to make one remark in regard to the suggestion made by the Senator from Delaware to the effect that under this provision the Secretary of the Navy may transfer all the force to a particular navy-yard and there perpetuate what he describes to be the frauds in the operations of the navy-yards growing out of the employment and discharge of force, and to say to him that he will find that by the limitation of the appropriation provided in this bill no such consequence can possibly follow. The sum of $18,953.12 is the total sum appropriated for the civil establishments of navy-yards; consequently there cannot be any such concentration of force at any particular and favored navy-yard as will cause any of the consequences which he so much deprecates, unless the two Houses shall, in some subsequent progress of legislation, increase that amount.

Mr. BAYARD. There are large appropriations in this bill for different bureaus which will be expended at various yards.

Mr. PLUMB. But not for the civil establishment.

Mr. BAYARD. That is the smallest part.

Mr. PLUMB. But in regard to that the trouble I think heretofore has been about the employment of persons in civil life at the various navy-yards. It has not been that certain naval officers were concentrated at a certain point, but it has been that persons were picked up in the neighborhood and that employment has resulted, which has been used—I do not know whether the charge is true or not—in some way to the advantage of some political party or in some way to the disadvantage of a free suffrage. That, as I said, is sufficiently guarded from the fact that we appropriate here a sum that is ridiculously inadequate to the accomplishment of any such purpose.

On the other points this bill has proceeded, I think, in a hide-bound way, very largely upon the theory of a drastic limitation upon the power of the Secretary of the Navy. I believe that under this bill or any similar bill we shall never have any navy. But still I am not disposed to contest with the general purpose of the bill, but to say that in order to have a navy, in order to have a decent and fair administration of the Navy Department, we have got to deposit discretion in somebody. We cannot possibly exercise that in our legislative capacity from time to time as it needs to be exercised. My theory about that is just this: we divide the responsibility instead of concentrating it; in the Navy Department there are bureaus at the head of which are persons who are in the service for life. We have a Bureau of Steam Engineering, a Bureau of Construction, a Bureau of Navigation, and so on. Each one of these bureaus is organized and runs continuously without reference to the function or the term of service of the Secretary of the Navy. He comes in and finds an organization existing which has existed for a long time, which goes on in the performance of its different functions, no matter whether the Secretary of the Navy is there or not. Suppose he drops out for a day, for a week, for a month, for a year, everything goes on as before. Suppose abuses occur, as were alleged to occur under a preceding administration, who is responsible? Not a single person whom Congress has any practical control over. It occurs under the administration of men who are there for life; it occurs under an administration which is a machine administration, which admits of no civil control. It is the regular naval organization that is responsible for it; and that does not necessarily indicate that they are corrupt; but you have got a commodore in charge of one of these bureaus and too many hands are employed; some work costs too much; he has had the control of it; he is supposed to possess the technical knowledge to make that control effective and have the work economically done; but it turns out otherwise. What happens? We simply transfer him from one station to another and he goes on drawing his salary and he exercises the privileges and emoluments just the same as before. [Here the hammer fell.] I should like just two minutes more in regard to this matter if there is no objection. ["No objection."]

We do not give to the civil Secretary any control at all as to who ought to be changed or put in there; we do not really give him the powers and functions of Secretary of the Navy. He ought to have the control of every bureau under his charge, and we ought to make him responsible, and by that responsibility condemn him or approve him.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PLUMB. With pleasure.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Inasmuch as the Appropriations Committee have taken charge of naval affairs, navy-yards, and everything else—

Mr. PLUMB. I object to that form of question, because it assumes something which is not true. We took charge simply of what the Senate sent us in the bill from the House of Representatives. That is all.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The Senator speaks of this small appropriation for the civil list, $18,000 only being appropriated for the civil list, and says that no civil employment of any consequence can take place because of the smallness of that appropriation. Now, I will suggest to the Senator that if additional repairs of the Vandalia, amounting to $585,942, at a navy-yard are necessary, the expenditure under the head of "repairs" would necessitate the employment of civilians.

Mr. PLUMB. For the time being, undoubtedly, and you cannot get away from that. If you are to employ a ship that goes into the harbor of Pensacola and is to proceed from there within some reasonable time to the harbor of Norfolk or the harbor of New York, will the Senator from Florida say that the question of repairs ought to be reported to Congress and that Congress ought to sit in judgment upon that before the ship can proceed upon its course?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That is not the question.

Mr. PLUMB. That is the question.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, it would have seemed consistent, possibly would have afforded a sort of pleasant reflection, if the Senator from Delaware who moves this amendment had noticed that the amendment which I moved a few moments ago was one quite necessary in order that these yards should be maintained at all. Whoever studies this bill will find, I think, that it is a well-matured plan to destroy the Navy, to destroy the navy-yards, and to throw whatever there is to be done in the future in the way of naval construction into the hands of parties not responsible to nor interested specially in the success of the Government of the United States in procuring a satisfactory navy at a reasonable price.

Now, we have a certain navy. There are provisions in the bill as it comes to us to prevent the repairs of that navy. It is explicitly provided that where repairs will cost over 30 per cent. of the estimated cost of a new ship no existing vessel shall be repaired at all. Men who understand this business have assured me that the result of that must be the practical destruction, by going to decay without repair, of the Navy which we now have, within a very brief period of time.

Then there is a second provision which enables this Navy, thus dismantled, thus useless, with no competitor in the market, to pass into the hands of the only parties who can be interested to purchase this material for little or nothing. We have modified that, to be sure.

Then there is this third provision, that navy-yards, which can have nothing to do unless there is a navy to repair or a navy to build, may be closed.

The natural operation of the enactment of the provisions of this bill as it came to the Senate into a law would be the obliteration of navy-yards, navy, and the capacity to produce a navy within the next three or four years on the part of the Government. The Senator in voting that there shall be no repairs of our existing Navy, or only within such limits as will exclude the greater portion of it, himself votes that there shall be no occasion for these yards; and now he comes in and would take away the power to exercise a discretion that if there is no work to be done it would seem ought to be exercised.

For my own part I am in favor of this amendment. I would not see the yards dismantled; I would not see them destroyed; I would not see this discretion confided to any one man, be he officer of the United States or not, and in the existing Secretary of the Navy I have as great confidence as I have in any human being, in his capacity and his integrity, and I would give him this discretion if I would give it to any man whatever.

But, sir, this provision I think should be stricken out, and equally so the other, the result of which would have been to give these navy-yards something to do. I favor the obliteration of these two provisions and the destruction of the other proviso for the sale of the Navy. But notwithstanding this suggestion which I make to the Senator from Delaware for his consideration, I am personally in favor of his amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, this has ever been known as a Government of laws and divided into three great departments, the legislative, the executive, and the judicial. I had always supposed that it was the province of the executive department of the Government to carry into effect and execution the determination of Congress over those great interests of the country which the people reposed in trust in the hands of their public servants here. There is not a navy-yard to-day in the Union that was not built up by express authority of Congress, deliberately asserted after thorough investigation, and no discretion was ever vested in any officer of this Government, high or low, to establish any such yard.

If this provision has one object that is clearer than another it is not to restrict employment on the civil list, it is not to cut down the wages of a few men; it is to give power to one man to annihilate, if he thinks proper, the entire navy-yard system of the United States.

The Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB,] who imagined that I made some impeachment upon his knowledge of naval affairs, took a little offense a while ago at what I said; but he surely could not have meant what he said when he observed that this $18,000 was the only limit upon the authority of the Secretary of the Navy to spend money in navy-yards. If he will turn to another provision in this bill under the head of "Bureau of Construction and Repair," he will find that $1,750,000 is appropriated there which can be expended at any favored navy-yard that this Secretary may designate under the authority of this bill.

Mr. PLUMB. The amount appropriated for the civil establishment of navy-yards by this bill is about one-fifth of that heretofore appropriated.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I do not care; there is $1,750,000 which can be expended at any navy-yard or navy-yards, according to the rule now prevailing in the Department, that the head of the bureau and the Secretary may designate; and while this has always been a great discretionary power, in my mind that ought not to be in one man. Still it exists, and if you will look at the repairs that have hitherto been made on ships you will find that favoritism has been exercised in making repairs on vessels, and that a ship needing repairs in the Gulf of Mexico has often gone to the North Atlantic to any yard that the Secretary might designate in order to have a half million dollars spent upon her under this discretionary power.

This provision proposes to give authority to do what? To put any navy-yard that the Secretary may select for annihilation in a condition to be utterly worthless hereafter, and then report to Congress. It is this:

He shall suspend work at those yards where he finds it can be best dispensed with, and shall close such yards and transfer all perishable stores and property therefrom to other yards for use therein, and report the facts and the reasons governing his action to the next session of Congress.

Under that authority he can destroy the efficiency of any six navy-yards in the Union and concentrate every available means of building or repairing a ship of the Navy at any one yard and then report the facts to Congress; and Congress, after this great expense is incurred and these changes have taken place, would have no option but to ratify it, and in this way destroy by indirection the power of Congress over this whole subject. I do not say that the Secretary would do this, but I do not care for any individual man; I would give the power to nobody.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I trust the Senator from Delaware does not mean to strike out a portion of this proviso which prohibits the Secretary of the Navy from making a deficiency under this appropriation. The Senate inserted by way of restriction upon the power of the Secretary of the Navy this language: "And no deficiency shall be made for maintenance of, or for civil establishment at, navy-yards."

Mr. HOAR. Is not that the standing law now without this bill?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think it is. There is a civil establishment at every one of these navy-yards by law. If there is no appropriation for the civil establishment, will it not go on and will not a deficiency accrue? We have deficiencies every day under similar provisions.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator from Iowa what the purpose of this provision is?

Mr. ALLISON. I will explain.

Mr. BUTLER. Is not the ultimate purpose the abolishment of navy-yards?

Mr. HOAR. Let me—

Mr. ALLISON. I cannot in five minutes subject myself to all sorts of interruptions and cross-firing by Senators. I take it that by the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, which was not objected to, proposing that a commission shall be raised for the purpose of seeing what navy-yards shall be abolished, there is a clear implication that we have too many navy-yards. There is not a Senator on this floor but what knows to-day that we have more navy-yards than we ought to have in this country. We have three in New England.

Mr. BAYARD. We have none anywhere that can build a first-class ship.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Delaware says we have none where we can build a first-class ship. I know it. We have just said, by voting down an amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. ROLLINS,] that we would not give these navy-yards a plant for the construction of ships. I say for myself that this provision I regard as a valuable one, for the reason that the Secretary of the Navy now has the discretion to order repairs and construction at any navy-yard he chooses. The Senator from Florida himself admits that the Secretary can send a ship to any navy-yard in the United States he pleases for repairs, and he can construct a ship at any navy-yard he chooses if we authorize its construction.

Mr. BUTLER. Can he dismantle a navy-yard, though?

Mr. ALLISON. No, he cannot; but he ought to have that power. Does the Senator from South Carolina want a great civil establishment at Pensacola, at Kittery, in Maine, and at these several navy-yards where no work is being done and where there is no proposition to do work? Instead of this being a discretionary power, we ought to say to the Secretary in explicit terms, "If there is no work to be done at these navy-yards, close them for the time being." We ought not to give him the discretion; we ought to impose on him a directory duty, saying to him, "If there is no work at Pensacola, dismiss your civil establishment, and do not allow it to be going on there at great expense to the Government." Wherever there is not necessary work for the navy-yards let them be closed for the time being.

I agree with the Senator from Delaware in one sense, that we ought not to give the discretion to employ a great civil establishment where no work is to be done. I would, instead of striking out this provision, make it still more mandatory upon the Secretary of the Navy that he shall not use the people's money in the support of a great civil establishment when there is no work being done at these yards. That is my objection to striking out the provision. I think we ought to go in the other direction. We have eight or nine navy-yards in the United States. Does anybody believe we shall continue them always? I do not believe it; and yet it is almost impossible to get rid of these navy-yards. Here is a navy-yard at League Island, a navy-yard at New London, one at Charlestown, another in New Hampshire or Maine, and another at Norfolk, and so on. One way we can get rid of these navy-yards and of the great expense that attends the carrying of them on is first to close them up if they are not necessary, and, secondly, after the report suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts, get rid of them. I am clear in my judgment that we have too many navy-yards, and they are great absorbing things in the way of taking the people's money. Let us make one step in the direction of closing them up until we can sell them under the proposition suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts, who admits by his amendment that we ought to sell some of them.

Mr. BAYARD. I should like to ask unanimous consent for about five minutes to state to the Senate a few considerations on this subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection; and the Senator will proceed.

Mr. BAYARD. We have all the expense of a navy-yard and none of the facilities or faculties that a navy-yard should possess. There is League Island with the locality of which I am in some degree familiar. It is about twenty-five miles north of where I live. It has unquestionably a great many advantages as a refuge for iron ships; it is thoroughly defensive against exterior attack. Its proximity to the city of Philadelphia, a great manufacturing city, is an enormous advantage in every respect; but there is a navy-yard that has no dry-dock, into which no vessel can go for repair, and upon which every dollar is useless until the feature of a dry-dock shall be added to it.

Therefore, it seems to me, that standing as we are now with the ruins of the Navy in the past and the hope of a new navy in the future, we certainly should not begin by crippling those agencies which every man of common sense will tell us are essential for the reconstruction of a navy. If you cannot make an omelet without breaking an egg, as the proverb has it, you cannot build a ship without having a yard for it. When the question shall come whether you will build by private contract or at the public yards, I believe experience is that while you can build your hulls at the public yards you cannot build your machinery and other things half as conveniently and properly there as you can by private contract. But all I ask at the present time is not to hasten by this step in the discretion of an inexperienced official—for such is the fact before you—without any reference to Congress, to give him the arbitrary power to remove what? Not only the perishable property but the plant, the property of all kinds, from yard to yard, property involving millions in its cost, property which is valuable, wherever it may be, and to transfer this right away in hot haste simply upon his own ipse dixit.

This is not wise legislation. If we only could get a man of ability and of adaptation by education for this pursuit and keep him in office that he might carry out wise and well-settled plans of public administration, a great deal of this difficulty would be saved; but I do say that the clause I have moved to strike out is one that is not in favor of wise legislation.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the task of really introducing any reform and cutting down any expense in the American Navy is a very hard one; every step of the way is beset with difficulties; everywhere somebody's toes seem to be trodden on. If you undertake to limit the money that is spent upon old and comparatively useless and worn-out ships, you are opposed and have to make a fight to save the public funds for new ships; and if you are confronted with the spectacle of nine navy-yards upon which have been spent in the last ten years $10,000,000 to keep them up, and are asked to try the experiment of getting along with fewer, that is opposed.
